The picture has been well produced and the cast is adequate. It is very dramatic and even melodramatic at times with some pathos and very little comedy offered as a relief. For this style of picture based on this sort of story it registers very nicely and will undoubtedly satisfy the majority.

As a box-office attraction it has an excellent title and the fact that Sarah Bernhardt appears in person and that she is the author and also that it serves to introduce her protege, Mme. Yorska, and was "Made In America," should bring them into the theatre in goodly numbers.

And after they are in the picture will suitably entertain them. Length, 5 reels.— TOM HAMLIN.

"The Woman He Chose"

(Mickey Film Corporation-Chicago-State Rights-Six Reels)

THE Swedish Biograph Company, which is beginning to establish a reputation for itself in this country has a new offering in "The Woman He Chose," which is from the pen of Dr. Selma Lagerlof.

Although the story is not new, having been told many times in American films, it carries heart interest and is portrayed by a company of actors whose naturalness in characterization equals many of our own.

But the direction, like in many European productions, is not up to our standard, too much time being taken in many of the scenes to land the points of the story. And again the ending is too abroupt, the final scene being flashed upon the screen before we are at all prepared for it. The photography is passable, but many of the titles should be changed.

Helga, a peasant girl, has a child by a man who is prepared to deny even on oath in court that he is its father. When she sees that he is about to perjure himself, she seizes the Bible and refuses to let him do so. Gudmund Erlandsson, a young man of the middle class, is so impressed by the girl's noble action that he secures a position for her in his home, as attendant to his mother. He is to marry the daughter of the town's richest man.

His fiancee objects to Helga being in his home and she has to go. On a night previous to his wedding, Gudmund goes to town, becomes intoxicated and is involved in a brawl in which a man is murdered, a broken knife blade being found in his head. The next morning he is told of the murder and on searching his pockets finds that his knife has a broken blade. He imagines he is the murderer and is prepared to give himself up. Events prove, however, that he is innocent, Helga remembering that she had broken his knife blade in cutting wood His fiancee is persuaded by Helga to ask Gudmund's forgiveness in believing him guilty but in doing so she also tells him of Helga's unselfishness and her love for him. Gudmund now discovers that Helga is the woman of his choice and the final close-up shows them in each other's arms.— FRANK LEONARD.

"A WOMAN OF PLEASURE"

(HAMPTON-PATHE)

Should Exploit as a Big Production

THIS picture can be consistently exploited as a big production and is just a little away from the beaten paths for story, mountings, locale and direction.

It is melodramatic and opens in a small English village with Blanche Sweet as the school teacher in rather sordid surroundings. She marries the wealthy neighbor to provide for her sick father and expects to become a woman of pleasure instead of a drudge. And he married her to prevent her ever testifying that she saw him throw a man over the cliff.

That is the plot and in trying to get rid of her he forces her to accompany him to dangerous places in South Africa. When she met his young superintendent the eternal triangle was introduced.

The thrills are injected by the attack of ferocious Zulu tribes upon a small British caravan. An observation balloon plays a prominent part in the proceedings and little Wesley Barry cleverly portrays the irrepressible orphan boy.

There is a wealth of detail and director Worsley has successfully utilized an army of extras as whites and Zulus. Wheeler Oakman's role of the young superintendent was weak and the star also lost sympathy at times, but all patrons will undoubtedly get their money's worth in this picture and be perfectly satisfied.

It will pull the same and appeal the same to practically any class of audience.— Length, 7 reels.— Released October 26.— TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Alice Dane ..... Blanche Sweet
Bobby Ralston ..... Wheeler Oakman
Sir John Turnbull ..... Wilfred Lucas
Danny Thomas ..... Wesley Barry
Getygoola ..... Frederick Starr
Jim Dench ..... Milton Ross
Rev. Mr. Goddard ..... Jos. Swickard
Wilberforce Dane ..... Spottiswoode Aitken

Screen Version by George Elwood Jenks.
Adapted from the Adelphi Melodrama by James Willard.
Directed by Wallace Worsley.
Photoplay by William Foster.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Blanche Sweet is scheduled at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ——— in her latest Pathe picture, "A Woman of Pleasure."

Jesse D. Hampton produced this photodrama for Pathe and it was adapted from the famous Adelphi melodrama. Huge armies of Zulus are used in one part of the picture which shows a siege in South Africa.

Blanche Sweet appears as the poor school teacher in a small English village. Her father is ailing and querulous and they are in very poor circumstances. She happens to witness a quarrel between Sir John Turnbull and saw him throw a man over the cliff.

He then marries her so that as his wife she could not ever be made to testify against him. And she accepted him at the urging of her father. After the father dies the husband taunts her with marrying him for money. Then Sir John's young superintendent arrives and urges that he go to South Africa to protect his holdings against the marauding Zulu tribes.

And Sir John brutally compels his wife to accompany him. A great friendship springs up between the superintendent, the wife and a young orphan lad. Her husband shows his brutality when he shoots a Zulu bearing a white flag, and the savage tribes lay siege to the British caravan which they outnumber ten to one.

Here's where the thrills are inserted and at the climax there is a promise of future happiness for two persons and a little orphan boy.

This is described as a tremendous production encompassing all the big melodramatic thrills and many tense moments with an appealing thread of romance throughout the entire picture.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a picture that will stand up if you will only extensively exploit it after you have booked it. Blanche Sweet's name should appear prominent in all your efforts as she has appeared in many big screen offerings even before and after her appearance in "The Birth of a Nation." And display her photographs and cuts wherever possible as they are certain to attract. Mention her latest great screen success, "The Unpardonable Sin." Show as many of the grouped Zulus as possible through the photos and cuts and if you are fond of special lobby displays you might try and arrange a Zulu setting or something suggestive of it. Describe this as a thrilling melodramatic romance adapted from the famous Adelphi melodrama.

CATCH LINES

She married for money a man she hated and knew that he also hated her.

One wealthy Britisher weds a girl so that she could not testify against him.

Wherever there was great danger is exactly where he wanted his wife to be.

A brute in civilian clothes kills a savage bearing the white flag which the Zulu thought was civilization's emblem.

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

(REALART)

Human Characterizations Make This Interesting

THIS is not drama. Rather is it an intimate view of portions of the life of a young girl, with some sidesteps in acquaintanceship with several most unique characters.

For all of that the picture with the exception of a few sequences which have to do with the well-known situation of having the leading lady become the hero's secretary and letting it be known that upon her talents depend his race for the Governship, is a a most delightful story, so human and likeable that you actually resent the attempt to complicate the course of true love and to retard the evolution of "Julia O'Grady" (Barnabetta's Dutch instead of Irish), however, into the "Governor's Lady."

Constance Binney has vindicated herself with those who knew her as the ingenue of "39 East" and thought she was an excellent type in an actor proof role.

The feature has some great scenic shots of rural scenes and is faultlessly directed. It should make Miss Binney known to picture fans as a real star and entertain every audience which desires characterization before action.— Length, 5 reels.— J. S. DICKERSON.

THE CAST

Barnabetta ..... Constance Binney
David Jordan ..... Jere Austin
Barrett ..... Alfred Hickman
Juliet Miller (Erstwhile Susan) ..... Mary Alden
Jacob Dreary ..... Bradley Barker
Emanuel Dreary ..... George Renavent
Abel Buchter ..... Leslie Hunt
Barnaby Dreary ..... Anders Randolph

Directed by John S. Robertson.
Adapted from the novel "Barnabetta" by Helen R. Martin.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Constance Binney, star of the Rachael Crowthers play which recently closed a long run on Broadway, makes her debut in pictures, at least as a star in "Erstwhile Susan," an adaptation of Helen R. Martin's celebrated novel of life among the Pennsylvania Dutch and will be introduced to ——— theatre patrons beginning ———.

Miss Binney is described as one of the most beautiful actresses ever presented on the screen and has made a great hit in "Erstwhile Susan," which incidentlly was one of Mrs. Fiske's most successful stage plays, as "Barnabetta Dreary," whose evolution from almost slavery in the Pennsylvania home to that of the wife of the governor of a great state forms the major portion of the photoplay. She has been given a great supporting cast in her first picture, a Realart production, Jere Austin well known to all fans having the leading role, with Anders Randolph and Mary Alden appearing in two great character roles.

"Erstwhile Susan" was directed by John S. Robertson, who has kept the play human throughout and utilized much of the dialogue of the novel in humorous subtitles written in Pennsylvania Dutch dialect. We believe that this is one of the most pleasing pictures which has been played at the ——— in a long time. It has all the elements which go to make the successful photoplay. Good comedy, heart interest and great characterizations.

PROGRAM READER

"Barnabetta" was the daughter of a thrifty but cantankerous old Pennsylvania Dutchman. All her life she had slaved for the "men folks" and then a wonderful thing came into her life, a stepmother. She thought she wouldn't like her new mother but through her opportunity was presented for an education through which came a gradual evolution of mind and body until from the little country drudge, emerges a woman whom the governor chooses for his wife. It is an interesting, heart interest study in characterization which has been presented in this first vehicle for a new star, Constance Binney, who leaped to instant favor in the Broadway play, "39 East," and who now appears in Realart pictures in a new rogram which promises to lead all others.

Miss Binney is a beauty and possesses remarkable histrionic ability. She is ably supported in "Erstwhile Susan" by Jere Austin and other well-known players.

SUGGESTIONS

We would concentrate on the fact that Miss Binney the star of this picture comes to the screen fresh from her Broadway play, Rachael Crowthers' "39 East," and that she promises to leap into instant favor as a photoplay player, since she possesses great beauty and screen personality.

We would then give the novel from which the picture was adapted, "Barnabetta," some attention, promising some great characterizations illuminated by the use of excellent titles. In connection with the talk concerning the fame of the book, we would also mention that Mrs. Fiske was starred in a dramatic version of it and made a great hit. Give Jere Austin a share of your billing since many people have come to know and like him as leading man. Giving the new Realart Corporation some mention will be worth while as they have three very good pictures on the market and others which are to be worthy are on the way.

CATCH LINES

She was a Dutch "Julia O'Grady" and became the "governor's lady."

A story of the evolution of a little Pennsylvania Dutch girl who had slaved for her "men folks" who is at last given an opportunity to improve herself.

"A FIGHTING COLLEEN"
(VITAGRAPH)

An Entertaining Comedy Drama

"A FIGHTING Colleen" brings Bessie Love in a typical Irish Colleen role which she interprets in a charming and convincing manner.

This photoplay is set in the tenement district of the Metropolis where poverty is the lot of the young girl who until her mother's death is a vender of newspapers on the street corners and engaging in many fights to protect her territory from the competition of newsboys.

When she administers a sound thrashing to one youth he thereafter becomes her ardent champion. As the District Attorney is a candidate for the office of Mayor he is interested in discovering evidences of graft against the administration in power and the girl assists him.

While this is not heavy or melodramatic it has a light romance angle, pathos occasionally, and altogether is an entertaining comedy drama with a human appeal.

THE CAST

Alannah Malone.....Bessie Love
Mother Malone.....Ann Schaefer
Jimmy Meehan.....Charles Spere
Stanton Colby.....Jay Marley
Mortimer Wall.....George Kunkel
Maggie O'Higgins.....Beulah Clark

Story and Scenario by Gerald C. Duffy.
Directed by David Smith.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Philanthrophy is shown as the first refuge of the hypocritical politician in Vitagraph's newest picture, "The Fighting Colleen," starring Bessie Love, which comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

She is the little Irish girl who sells papers on the street corners to help her widowed mother eke out an existence in the big metropolis. And she has to fight with other news venders to maintain the territory she has preempted as her exclusive selling location.

When she wips one boy he thereafter becomes her ardent champion. Her mother just naturally wore herself into the grave trying to keep the tenements clean. These same tenements were owned by a Mayor who liked to hear himself called a philanthropist.

The District Attorney announced himself as a candidate for Mayor and proceeded to get evidence of graft against the city administration. The little Irish Colleen assisted him as she realized that the Mayor who posed as a charity giver was really a slave driver and grafter and hypocrite.

In the meantime she had become a waitress in a restaurant and her newsboy friend was employed at the same cafe and their little romance thrived. But there arose several misunderstandings.

The boy thought that the District Attorney was trying to win his girl from him. He did not know the identity of the visitor but always called him by the number of his automobile tag. When the political campaign is over with the District Attorney victorious the young folks find that they have been very important cogs in the big reform.

PROGRAM READER

She did not want him poaching on her reservation and administered a sound thrashing to the interloper.

But he took the whipping with good grace and told her he liked it.

After that he became her ardent champion. She couldn't lose him.

And after a while she was glad to avail herself of his friendship.

She felt that she had just cause to beat him up in this unladylike manner.

For many years this little Irish girl had been selling newspapers in this one particular corner and he entered competition with her.

The boy and girl soon found themselves very important cogs in the great political fight carried on by the District Attorney.

He wanted to oust the present Mayor whom he suspicioned as a grafter and a hypocrite. And then—

Well, all this is entertainingly described and portrayed in "A Fighting Colleen," the Vitagraph picture that will be shown in this theatre next week. Bessie Love is the star and it is a comedy drama with a great human appeal.

CATCH LINES

She was a fightin', tearin' colleen and aggressively demonstrates woman's rights — to sell newspapers undisturbed.

One boy had to be mercilessly whipped by a girl before he found that he loved her.

Charity began at home with one Mayor and the girl saw that he was defeated so that he could stay at home with the third of the three graces.

A girl and boy, both of lowly birth, were important cogs in the whirlwind political of the big metropolis.

Youth becomes embroiled in tenement politics, fights and romance and the outcome is a reformed city.

"WHAT'S YOUR HUSBAND DOING"
(INCE PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT)

Captivating Farce Registers High Class

AFTER successfully blazing the trail with their initial Thomas H. Ince offering, "Twenty-three and A Half Hours Leave," these two youthful co-stars breeze along another captivating farce which amusingly scores.

The theme treats on a question generally supposed to be occupying the mind of nearly every married woman: "What is the husband actually doing when he is away from the wife all day in constant contact with lady clients and charming stenographers?" Some imaginative wives fondly believe that every other woman is trying to vamp their husbands.

Such are the thoughts of three young wives in "What's Your Husband Doing?" And the three husbands under suspicion, although innocent, are unconsciously bolstering the web of circumstantial evidence against themselves. There is not only a vein of humor throughout but an artery of laughter which dominates many of the situations.

It is pure and unadulterated farce with an irresistibly funny finale and will afford high class and amusing entertainment to all classes.

THE CAST

John P. Widgast.....Douglas MacLean
Beatrice Ridley.....Doris May
Charles Pidgeon.....Walter Hiers
Robert Ridley.....William Buckley
Helen Widgast.....Norris Johnson
Gwendolyn Pidgeon.....Alice Elliott
Sylvia Pennywise.....Alice Wilson

Produced by Thomas H. Ince.
Story by George V. Hobart.
Scenario by E. Cecil Smith.
Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.
Photography by Charles Stumar.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

George V. Hobart is the author of the rollicking farce, "What's Your Husband Doing?" which comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May, the new co-stars sponsored by Thomas H. Ince, are said to have registered so heavily in their first offering, "23½ Hours Leave" that they won their way to permanent stardom and "What's Your Husband Doing?" fully equals their initial offering according to Paramount-Artcraft.

This farce concerns three youthful married couples and one actress. The three women, each of whom notices something suspicious in her husband's actions, believes that some other woman is trying to "vamp" him.

Beatrice Ridley is a very young wife with only one wedding anniversary to her credit. Possessing a devoted husband, a beautiful home, and a comfortable income, she should have been a very happy girl, but as she was young, and devoid of worldly wisdom, she spent her ample leisure in conjuring romance about her perfectly innocent husband in which he always figures as the gay Lothario.

Widgast and Pidgeon are divorce attorneys and their wives are also in the same frame of mind as Beatrice Ridley is about her husband. "Honeysuckle Inn" is the scene of action in one part of the story, and it is here that they happen to be one night; the three husbands and the three wives.

But they were not paired off according to Hoyle, although every one was innocent of any wrong intent. And then the police raided the place. How they are arrested and how one husband as the judge and other as prosecuting attorney have to examine and pass judgment on their own wives affords screamingly funny entertainment, according to all reports.

SUGGESTIONS

You will logically find five big angles presenting themselves for exploitation possibilities after you have booked this picture. First it is the stars, Douglas McLean and Doris May, who firmly established themselves in "23½ Hours Leave." Second it is the producer, Thomas H. Ince. Third it is the well-advertised brand of Paramount-Artcraft. Fourth it is a George V. Hobart story, and he has the big reputation for success in farces. Fifth it is the title, "What's Your Husband Doing?" which by clever catch lines can be made a catching word of mouth greeting on the streets and in the offices and stores. If you cannot get them in with the angles so easily presenting themselves, and every one is a puller, your public must be sightless and dumb.

CATCH LINES

"What's your husband doing, Mrs. Brown?" asked Mrs. Smith. "What's yours?" retorted Mrs. Brown.

Does your husband pose as a tired business man with no zest for participating in your social affairs?

Mrs. Housewife.— "What do you suppose your husband finds to do away from you all day?"

Mrs. Rastus Washington.— "Is yoh man so bizzy at de shop dat he caint come home and embrace yoh durin' de day?"

"THE ILLUSTRIOUS PRINCE"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

High Class Drama Should Completely Satisfy

A HIGH class drama possessing the international angle and set among the nobility in London. A typical Sessue Hayakawa story with racial prejudice again interfering with romance at the finale.

Produced with all the rich mountings essential to correct artistic atmosphere and favored with skilful direction. A very well balanced and capable cast interprets the roles and the star holds sympathy throughout, although he is on a vengeful mission.

Lighting effects and photography very hazy in many scenes, but this will undoubtedly escape the observation of the big majority.

One tragedy soon followed by another tightened the suspense element and verges slightly on the melodramatics. This picture should thoroughly interest and completely satisfy all admirers of Hayakawa and please all lovers of high-class drama of the heavier sort.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released November 2.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Prince Maiyo ..... Sessue Hayakawa
Penelope Morse ..... Mabel Ballin
Duke of Devenham ..... Harry Lonsdale
The Duchess ..... Beverly Traverse
Sir Charles Somerfield ..... Robert Lawler
Count De la Mar ..... Bertram Grassby
Soto ..... Toyo Fujita
Inspector Jacks ..... Edward Peil

Story by E. Phillips Oppenheim.
Produced by Haworth.
Direction by William Worthington.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

E. Phillips Oppenheim's story, "The Illustrious Prince," has been filmed and will appear at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————.

Sessue Hayakawa is the star in this Haworth Production and according to Robertson-Cole, the distributers, the noted Japanese star registers in one of the best roles of many seasons.

The Japanese Prince was a welcome and striking figure in the most aristocratic London society. He watched closely the actions of that adventurer and cosmopolitan roue the Count De la Mar. This Count is paying too much attention to the Duchess of Devenham, wife of the Prince's most intimate friend.

And the Oriental Prince has a mission. He is seeking a certain unscrupulous man who had brought his illustrious father to his death and had dishonored his family twenty years before.

Finally he had abundant proof that Count De la Mar is the man he is seeking. It is then that the Count had almost persuaded the Duchess to elope with him. The next morning the Count's body is found.

Scotland Yard suspicions three men apparently: The Duke, the Prince, and some mysterious third party. Not only is there mystery in this picture but also suspense and romance.

For the Prince finds himself deeply in love with the pretty American girl who was visiting London. And she found herself loving the Japanese Prince also. But then there was the racial prejudice to combat.

The solution furnishes a thrilling climax to this great drama it is said. The plot has so many angles that this is not only described as a charming romance but also a sensational mystery-drama.

PROGRAM READER

Who killed De la Mar?
This is the question worrying Scotland Yard.
They even suspicioned their own Duke of Devenham.
And then they suspected the Japanese nobleman.
But there was a mysterious third man.
The solution furnishes a thrilling climax to a great drama, rich in suspense and involved plot.

"The Illustrious Prince" is the title of the picture which embraces the above situations, and Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, is the star.

E. Phillips Oppenheim wrote the story and the screen production will be shown in this theatre next week.

A very pretty romance in London high life is prominent in the picture.

The charming young American visitor falls in love with the Oriental nobleman and he in turn apparently loves her to distraction.

And then there is the so-called racial prejudice.

This Robertson-Cole attraction produced by the Haworth Company is described as one of the best productions released in a long list of successes.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture there are two strong exploitation angles that will immediately occur to you to emphasize and center upon. The first is Sessue Hayakawa, the star, and the second is E. Phillips Oppenheim, the author. And as this is a high-class production set in aristocratic environments you should send announcements to your best people if you have a mailing list of this class compiled. And as many persons are interested apparently in mystery stories you should also prominently mention that this is a story of mystery, love, intrigue, and with a powerful suspensive element. Any sort of an Oriental setting for your stage, foyer or lobby would be very appropriate as the picture shows the London home of the Japanese nobleman furnished in this manner.

"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE"

(REALART)

Sure Fire at Box Office and as Entertainment

MOST people will know that this is a story of a revolution in the land of "chili-con-carni and fat ladies wearing mantillas" and expect the melodramatic rush of events which characterized Mr. Davis' novel and which in the screen production have been faithfully visualized.

This is a director's picture since, after the characters are introduced, individualities with the exception of Wallace Beery as the revolutionary general are largely lost in the handling of large bodies of men who make up the comic opera army of the South American country, and the big mob scenes. It is in these scenes that the picture rises above the average feature of its kind since they have all been more than well handled and carry conviction. All the sure fire audience stuff is contained in this production. The Americans bravely fighting against great odds and Uncle Sam's war ship with its company of "leather necks" coming to the rescue in the nick of time to say nothing of the use of the aeroplane to save the President's wife.

Pauline Stark has the best role among the feminine parts.—Length, 7 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Reginald King ..... Warde Crane
Teddy Langham ..... Frank Wally

Captain Stuart ..... Philo McCullough

Directed by Allan Dwan.
Adapted from the novel by Richard Harding Davis.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Richard Harding Davis' famous novel, "Soldiers of Fortune," will be the photoplay attraction at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

Most people will know that this is a story of a revolution in a South American republic where dramatic action of the most thrilling sort is of paramount importance.

Allan Dwan, who has a great reputation for staging stories of this sort, directed and has turned out a production, the first one on the new Realart program which will make him famous. "Soldiers of Fortune" is just the kind of a picture which American audiences like and will thrill and please you every foot of its seven reels.

Norman Kerry plays the role of Robert Clay, the hero of the story, and Pauline Starke is Hope Langham, while the lovable big bashful "McWilliams" is in the hands of Fred Kohler. Wallace Beery is the villainous rebel general. The plot involves the fortunes of several American soldiers of fortune who are operating a mine in South America and become involved in a revolution. The heart interest is supplied in the romance of Robert Clay and Hope Langham.

SUGGESTIONS

The fact that this is Richard Harding Davis' most popular novel is the thing to play up in advertising this feature. You can promise your patrons just the sort of a production that they like and we would advise that you bill it as a picture with no attempt to more than mention the players since there is no big star at the head of the cast and that individualities are lost sight of in the stirring action depicted.

You will of course say that it is a special production, staged in a spectacular manner by Mr. Dwan, and you can compare the battle scenes with the best that have ever been produced.

We believe that this is a picture on which a lot of big paper should be used, and that your advertising should be rather extravagant since it is melodrama and that is the way to advertise melodramatic pictures.

PROGRAM READER

We will present "Soldiers of Fortune," an adaptation of Richard Harding Davis' greatest novel, at this theatre beginning ————.

This is a special feature that has cost a great deal of money since no expense has been spared in staging it and is notable from every angle. It marks the entry of Realart pictures into the field and quite lives up to the promises of this firm to make great photoplays. The film is classed as a "production" since there is no featured player, although the big cast is composed of well-known actors, principal among which are Norman Kerry, Wallace Beery and Pauline Stark. The feature was directed by Allan Dwan who is famous for his handling of big scenes. In "Soldiers of Fortune" he has produced a feature which compares favorably with any spectacle of its kind ever released.

Many thousand people are used in the battle and mob scenes and each sequence holds attention and presents action of thrilling character.

Scenically the picture is wonderful. It is an ideal picture play, sure to please every lover of good entertainment.

CATCH LINES

Richard Harding Davis' most famous story visualized in its entirety.

A thrilling tale of American soldiers of fortune who are forced to take sides in a South American revolution.

"THE GAY OLD DOG"

(HENLEY-PATHE)

One of the Most Human Pictures Ever Shown

HOBART Henley may now enter the circle of master directors, his work with Mrs. Sidney Drew's adaptation of Edna Ferber's very human story, "The Gay Old Dog," entitling him to such recognition. Here is an achievement which would have been spoiled had Mr. Henley incorporated the usual dramatic elements. But action and suspense are not needed here, because it is a study of life and the director has kept faithfully to the script by visualizing its humanities — humanities which are conveyed through remarkably realistic characterization and a close application to detail.

Wonderfully simple and human is this story. Indeed its simplicity and humanity make it one of the finest contributions to the screen. Founded upon the idea that a promise to a dying relative should be broken as lightly as it is seriously made, it presents a man who forfeits every right to happiness because of his dead mother's selfish request. He grows old and wealthy and his attempt to find a zest in life is extremely pathetic.

It is a picture with a powerful THOUGHT and Mr. Henley conveys it to you with exquisite expression. You may wonder how it can possibly entertain without dramatic ingredients but then if you stop and think you will observe that its values lie in its keynote of sympathy, its wealth of pathos and its realistic attitudes. It presents LIFE. There is the answer. It is a true observation, a fact noticed not only by its intense heart appeal but by its shafts of humor. There is a tear behind every smile and a smile behind every tear. John Cumberland gives a perfect portrayal in the title role. Length, five reels.— LAURENCE REID.

THE CAST

Mrs. Dodd, his mother ..... Mary Chambers
Eva, Carrie, Stella (his sisters) ..... Emily Lorraine, Inez Marcel, Frances Neilson
Emily Harrison ..... Gertrude Robinson
Ethel Hastings ..... Nell Tracy

By Edna Ferber.
Scenario by Mrs. Sidney Drew.
Directed by Hobart Henley.
Photographed by William L. Crolly.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Gay Old Dog," which comes to the ———— theatre beginning ———— is one of the most human pictures ever produced. An adaptation of Edna Ferber's story which appeared in the Metropolitan Magazine, it reaches the screen with wonderful expression. Praise must be given Mrs. Sidney Drew, the scenarist, Hobart Henley, the director, and John Cumberland, who interprets the story in the stellar role. The latter plays the part of a man who promises his dying mother he will not get married until his sisters are provided for. They are extremely selfish and do not appreciate their brother's generosity and noble character. And since they are not prepossessing, marriage does not come to them until they are well along in years.

Naturally Jimmy Dodd has grown old too and has been forced to give up romance. He attempts to find a belated zest in life, but his efforts are pitiful. A lonely old man, a wealthy man, he is unable to buy happiness. One day he sees his former sweetheart's boy marching away to war and the thought comes to him that the boy might have been his boy. So he returns to his rose colored room — a room which has grown suddenly drab. And the years drag by monotonously. Such is life as revealed here. You will recognize these people. They are everywhere. There is a big thought in this picture. The theme is based upon the idea that the dead have no right to control the destinies of the living. It is human and simple and sympathetic and charming and occasionally pathetic. Mr. Cumberland acquits himself magnificently in the title role. He invests the part with dignity, authority and humor. It is a picture without a weakness.

SUGGESTIONS

You can go the limit on superlatives here and you won't go wrong. Surely here is a picture which is entitled to the highest praise. But treat it in a dignified way. It is too big — it contains too great a thought to be exploited in a sensational manner. Emphasize its tremendous theme, which is simplicity itself when you analyze it. Bring out the sorrow, the pathos, the quiet humor, the sympathy, the charm. Play up the author and announce that she is one of the most human writers in present-day literature. And don't neglect the director. He has accomplished wonders here. Bring out that he is human too. Play up the star, and mention that he is one of the most successful actors on screen and stage This picture should be a gold mine.

CATCH LINES

And so he grew old and found no joy in life. His sisters were to be provided for. And they were too selfish to allow him to find romance. You will pity him; you will love him. See "The Gay Old Dog."

You will see life when "The Gay Old Dog" comes to the ————. A remarkable picture of a man who grows old and forfeits happiness so that others may find it. A wonderful picture.

"UNDER SUSPICION"

(UNIVERSAL)

Will Pleasantly Entertain Generally

THE "mistaken identity" idea is utilized in this quite entertaining romantic comedy drama and it is bolstered up by good direction and is very well cast, although none of the so-called "big names" can be found in the list.

When the pretty country girl comes into money and desires to locate in the big city with her spinster friend they lease the splendidly furnished bachelor apartments of an absentee.

There are a few thrills injected and some dramatic situations also but as a rule this picture runs along in the lighter vein. Burwell Hamrick as "Jimmy the Newsboy," is a clever and very likable little chap. In the denouement the burglars are captured and the hero and heroine discover each other's real identity.

Photography and sets are also very good and all in all this is a picture that will very pleasantly entertain generally.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.— Length, 6 reels.— Released November 23.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Under Suspicion" is the Universal attraction scheduled for a —— days' run at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

Ora Carew has the role of the pretty, small-town girl who falls heir to considerable money and is thus able to indulge in her long-cherished ambition of living in a big city.

With a spinster friend they lease the splendidly furnished bachelor apartments of a young man who is away for a long visit. They rented from the absentee's butler who posed as the young owner. When the young man returns unexpectedly the girl thinks he is a burglar.

It seems that this was a case of love at first sight, and in trying to "reform" him she offers the youth a position as her chauffeur, which he accepts readily in order to be near her.

When two real crooks become very active in their vicinity it seems that invariably he would be suspicioned, but the girl never gave him up as hopeless. And then clever little Burwell Hamrick enters the story as "Jimmy the Newsboy." He knows who the real crooks are, but is sent to the country before he is able to inform his benefactors.

There are quite a few thrills and several very dramatic moments in this romantic comedy drama, and when the two real burglars are finally captured the little newsboy appears and aids the young lovers in successfully establishing their real identities to one another.

PROGRAM READER

But he was such a handsome burglar that she just couldn't bear to have him arrested for breaking into her house.

So she engaged him as her chauffeur.

And gasoline around thirty cents a gallon.

But the girl was very determined that this youthful burglar must be reformed, and even when her closest friends began to complain about losing valuable pieces of jewelry she kept the young man in her employ.

How could she know that the young man was innocent? And no one had ever told her that he was the real owner of the splendid apartments she and her spinster friend were occupying.

There are quite a few thrills injected in this comedy drama. And there are many dramatic moments in the romance. But all's well that ends well.

And a little child (Jimmy the Newsboy) led them.

"Under Suspicion" is the Universal attraction coming to this theatre next week, where the above story is most entertainingly pictured.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture your best bet is the title. "Under Suspicion" is a striking title. However, one line should invariably accompany the title wherever it is displayed. And that is a descriptive line about as follows: "A modern comedy-drama of romance and thrills." Otherwise the average person may assume that it is a dramatic mystery story. Don't fail to announce that it is a Universal attraction, so that you may enjoy the pulling power that the brand may bring. And Ora Carew's name as the star should be used where she is well enough known. The material from the "Press Notice-Story," "Program Reader" and "Catch Lines" on this page should help you for long descriptive quarter-sheets, placards and throw-aways.

CATCH LINES

Where one young lady loves the burglar she caught robbing her.

Chauffeurs are not all burglars, but she hired a burglar as her chauffeur in order to reform him.

Suspicion always pointed towards her chauffeur whenever a burglary occurred, which was quite often.

"GIRL FROM OUTSIDE"

(GOLDWYN)

Pleasing Picture With Many Comedy Touches

THIS is a mighty good picture. If we had had any doubts on this score, they would have been dispelled by witnessing a Capitol Theatre audience which had received New Way-Lourn's revue in critical silence give the feature, at its finis, an enthusiastic round of applause.

"The Girl From Outside," is largely comedy for all that it has a serious basic plot. This will sound like a paradox until it is explained that the plot isn't given a great deal of attention, most of the sequences having to do with the lives of five crooks, all unique characters, and a young girl who have found their way to Alaska.

We do not know how much of this feature is Beach and how much is continuity writer but the result is a fine example of making an entertaining picture from a commonplace plot. The five crooks who call themselves "The Wags," same being their own ironic nick name for scalawags, are likeable personages. You condone their sins when they steal everything in sight to make the innocent and scatter-brained heroine happy.

Good titles help in bringing out the comedy. The acting is excellent but no role stands out except that of "The Kid," played by Cullen Landis.—Length, 7 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

By Rex Beach.
Directed by Reginald Barker.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

The latest Rex Beach story to be produced by Goldwyn is "The Girl From Outside," another Alaskan subject, which however is quite different from those that patrons of the theatre have seen heretofore. "The Girl From Outside" comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————, and is stated to be a fitting mate for the other Beach productions, among which "The Barrier" and "Laughing Bill Hyde" will be well remembered. Unlike these two, however, this picture is largely comedy and is promised to entertain every one.

There is no featured player in the production, but Cullen Landis, one of the cleverest juveniles of the screen, has the role of "The Curley Kid" and gives it wonderful coloring. As are most of the Beach pictures, "The Girl From Outside" is rich in the atmosphere of Alaska with many fine types secured to play the roles of Mr. Beach's best book. You will like his "Five Wags," meaning the five crooks, who have so much to do with the story as it is told on the screen. Of course there are some big scenes, smacking of melodrama, but in the main you will find the greatest entertainment in wondering what the "Wags" will do next to provide comfort and happiness for the golden haired, innocent and scatterbrained heroine, whom fate has left stranded in this wild country which for the most part respects neither virtue or goodness.

SUGGESTIONS

You will of course herald this as another Rex Beach picture, naming the other pictures you have played from this author's pen. We would also lay stress on the fact that this contains a lot of comedy of the very best sort. There is one scene where the "Wags" steal the only cow in Nome in order to get milk for the heroine which is exceedingly rich in humor. It is worth playing in your selling talk.

Tell your people that this is a faithful portrayal of the lives of the residents of Alaska in 1900, all the characters being of the type which drifted to this far northern port, most of them to escape punishment for some crime or for some other as necessary reason. If you want to advertise a star, select Cullen Landis who had a fairly good part in "Almost a Husband." Landis plays "The Curley Kid," a very good role.

CATCH LINES

"They called themsevles 'The Wags,' which was their own nickname for scalawags."

"Rex Beach at his best in a colorful story of Alaska."
"Honor Among Thieves would be a good title for this latest Rex Beach story."

"Stranded and broke and alone in the land of long shadows, her salvation came from a gang of crooks, scalawags, or as they termed themselves, 'The Wags.'"

"Better than 'Barrier,' more comedy than 'Too Fat To Fight,' more heart interest than 'Laughing Bill Hyde,' sums up the latest Rex Beach picture."

"SCARLET DAYS"

(GRIFFITH PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT)

Splendid Melodrama of Olden Golden West

FOR a distinct novelty in transporting your patrons away from prevailing society dramas and foreign locale pictures this production will prove a refreshing diversion.

A tale of the olden West during the famous gold rush days of '49 is a familiar story but it never loses interest when properly presented, no matter how many times the theme has been used.

D. W. Griffith has rendered a splendid production and the cast is well chosen with perfect types, although Richard Barthelmess and George Fawcett bear the only names familiar to the fans.

It is as full of thrills as any of the modern melodramatic pictures of the West, but these same stirring incidents somehow or other seem more realistic than the general run of productions portray. There is tragedy also, and a heart interest attached to the mother-love displayed by the woman of the notorious dance hall toward her daughter whom she supports in the East in ignorance of her mother's vice.

Pathos and comedy are interspersed judiciously and the many tense moments compel the keenest interest. Two pretty romances are born of this chaos and provide the happy ending. A splendid melodrama of the olden golden West.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and generally pleasing; Family, big puller and generally pleasing; Labor, big puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released November 30.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

D. W. Griffith's latest production, "Scarlet Days," is scheduled for a ———— days' engagement at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

This is a tale of the old West during the famous gold rush days of '49, and is described as a powerful and stirring melodrama containing a strong heart appeal and with tragedy, romance, comedy and pathos that will compel the keenest attention of every spectator.

Rosy Nell is a dance-hall girl and secretly supports her daughter in the East. But the girl is innocently unaware of her mother's calling and plans a surprise visit. A chivalrous dashing bandit and two miners, one from Virginia, met the girl as she stepped off the stage in the Western mining town and plan to keep her in ignorance of her mother's life in the dance hall nearby.

They do this gallantly out of a profound respect for her innocence and then they break the news to the mother. Just then the mother was being robbed of her savings and in fighting to prevent the robbery her assailant drops dead of heart failure and the mother is accused of the murder.

The proprietor of the dance hall agrees to permit the mother to visit her daughter in the miner's cabin and spend three days with her, and these are the three happiest days of the mother's hard life. Then the proprietor covets the daughter for himself and tells her the true facts about her mother.

And the attack of this villain and his horde against the miner's cabin is said to afford great thrills, and the young bandit sends one of the miners off to the sheriff offering to give himself up for his past deeds if he will only come with a posse and rescue some women from the attacks of the dance hall crowd.

Two charming romances are born of this chaos, and truth and right finally conquers in this tale of the golden west.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course there is not room enough to enter into a long dissertation anent proper exploitation for this picture. After you book it the strong advertising possibilities will immediately occur to you. D. W. Griffith's name and the fact that he "personally" directed it is enough for most people who know that "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerace," "Hearts of the World" and "Broken Blossoms" were produced by him. Bill it as a "Western Melodrama of the Olden Golden Days." Mention Richard Barthelmess and George Fawcett.

CATCH LINES

One pair of innocent blue eyes impelled a dashing bandit to eschew his dangerous ways and a new love was born.

In days of old when Forty-Niners were bold and one spark of virtue promoted chaos.

Where a mother living amid vice was found by her pure and innocent daughter and taken to arms.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Breezy Comedy Offers Good Entertainment

PARAMOUNT-Artcraft scored a 10 strike when it went to the stage and brought back "It Pays to Advertise." Adapted to the screen it fits Bryant Washburn's genial personality as if it was written with him in mind. Those in charge have not attempted to enlarge upon the original but have kept its comedy points intact. And there are enough of these to sustain it through five reels of brisk and spontaneous action. Its likeness, in our recollection, has never been done on the screen, so that besides its amusing high lights it carries an appealing freshness. Of course the spendthrift son who is kicked out into the world by his indulgent father and made to shift for himself is a familiar figure, but his methods of making his own mark are original, indeed. He is not aware that his father is behind him in his venture and that he looks approvingly upon his marriage with his own secretary. So the soap king finds that he has a competitor to be reckoned with — a competitor who believes in capitalizing his business through advertising. Wherever the old man turns he finds his son's product. The comedy points are scored chiefly through the stunts which are employed to advertise the soap. The young man has started on a "shoestring," but even his resourcefulness cannot save him from disaster until father comes to the rescue. There are no lapses in this comedy. Mr. Washburn scores his points in his familiar way. He is one light comedian who has an admirable restraint. Lois Wilson is personable as the girl and Frank Currier is capital as the father. Make no mistake about it; this picture is a winner.— Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"It Pays to Advertise," the popular stage success, has been adapted to the screen with remarkable skill so that its clever comedy remains intact. It will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— with Bryant Washburn. The play was written by Roi Cooper Megrue and Walter Hackett, two of the best known authors of the day. The story centers around the pampered son of a millionaire, who, when he reurns home from college, refuses to go to work in one of his father's soap factories, reasoning that his father already has more money than they can both spend. The senior Martin resorts to strategy and promises a fat bonus to his secretary if she will, by her wiles, persuade Rodney to go to work. The result is he falls in love with the girl and she reciprocates his affection.

The father informs Rodney that he will have to go to work to provide for a stenographer wife, but when she tears up the proffered check the old man is so angry he orders the boy from the house. Rodney sets himself up in business and starts advertising a trademark so extensively that he soon creates a demand. Of course he employs Mary. He buys his product from one of his father's factories and puts it in an elaborate wrapper, trusting to his advertising to sell the goods. The father is about to offer Rodney fifty thousand for the name when he accidentally gets wise and refuses. Then comes a man from Marshall Field with an offer for the name, and father, reconsidering, makes a deal with Rodney. Thus the boy has made good and wins the girl of his heart. Mr. Washburn's genial personality finds expression here and he is ably assisted by a capable cast.

PROGRAM READER

It certainly pays to advertise. You are on the road to success when you have faith in capitalizing your business along advertising lines. Here is Rodney Martin for example. He was a shiftless young man who believed in the theory that fathers are only needed to sign checks. Then he opened his eyes when father would have no more to do with him. So he advertised his personality and a certain soap. He adopted a slogan and used it for a product which he didn't have. And he made a success of himself. So much so that father offered to buy him out rather than have such a successful competitor. A truly American story because it depicts the American resourcefulness and originality. You will see a clever comedy when "It Pays to Advertise" comes to this theatre next ———— with Bryant Washburn.

SUGGESTIONS

There are any number of good advertising possibilities in this feature. Based upon a well known slogan you can advertise it just the way the hero advertises his product. Bring out the selling value of the title. Link up with some nationally advertised product that your druggist or grocer sells and get the interest of the reader. Tell that the play is an adaptation of the play of the same name, and bring out that it scored a big success upon the stage. Use catch lines. They would be an excellent angle. Advertise your house, your music, your pictures. Advertise your showmanship. The hero had confidence in his product; you can have confidence in yourself. So play up the advertising angle toward your own business. Tell that the comedy offers rich adventure and romance, and that it is highly original. And announce that Mr. Washburn has the best role of his career.

"LURE OF AMBITION"

(FOX)

Feeble Entertainment From Old-Fashioned Theme

"LURE of Ambition" has the earmarks of Bertha M. Clay and Laura Jean Libbey written all over it. Indeed Theda Bara's newest contribution goes back to a time when these authors were read considerably below stairs. You will see a daughter of Poverty Row so charm a member of the British nobility that he will offer her marriage only to break his promise once she is in his clutches. You will see her expressing deep indignation and, at the same time, pleasure in the knowledge that through him she can become the Duchess of Rutledge, since he is his lordship's secretary.

To be the first lady of English society is her ambition.

This story would be more truthful had there been some authority and observation behind it. The sponsors have not been faithful to English customs or traditions. In the earlier reels the director has been unduly realistic in his representation of poverty. It is a made-to-order picture with the star interpreting her "vampish" role after a fashion. You cannot call it an example of present-day picture standards. Yet it will attract a great many people if for no other reason than it will while away an hour of their evening. In its favor is a faint note of suspense, a bit of conflict, and commendable acting by the cast. The offering would hit a higher mark if the scissors were applied to certain details since they only succeed in emphasizing the crudities.— Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Theda Bara, the Fox star, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest photoplay entitled "Lure of Ambition," This is a story of a poverty-stricken girl who has an ambition for wealth and society and awards Miss Bara the opportunity to display her emotional capabilities. While on duty at the switchboard of a hotel, Olga Dolan meets Cyril Ralston, a member of the British nobility. Under his promise to marry her she consents to live with him although she soon leaves him when she discovers that he has no intention of keeping his word. She is surprised later, when as his mother's secretary, to discover him under the same roof. So she decides to use him as a means of breaking into English society. He introduces her to the Duke of Rutledge whom she is ambitious of marrying and when Lady Constance dismisses her she makes her way to the Duke's home and finds employment as his secretary.

There is only one obstacle which prevents her from becoming the Duchess and that is the fact that the real Duchess is alive. The latter is incurably insane and when her nerves are strained to the breaking point through a fit of jealousy, she dies. Thus Olga realizes her ambition. She becomes the Duchess of Rutledge. The picture carries a wealth of dramatic highlights and is capably interpreted by the star and her players. Edmund Lawrence directed the film from a story of Julia Burnham and himself. "Lure of Ambition" is adequately staged.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no use telling you how to advertise a Bara picture. She is her own best drawing card. Whatever she appears in is well calculated to interest the filmgoer because she has always capitalized her personality. But in advertising her here it would be well to explain that she does not appear as a vampire. Simply state that she appears as a normal girl who is guided by the same impulses, the same moods as the girl in the street or the girl who patronizes your theatre. Don't emphasize the plot because it is nothing original and it might keep people away. But you can bring out that it offers a worthy theme. Everyone is ambitious to get ahead and ambition is the motive behind the idea. Tell of the star's past successes. Mention the members of her company.

CATCH LINES

Ambition is the guiding force in everyone's life. Sometimes it takes the form of a craving for wealth—sometimes it drives one into society. Sometimes it ruins the person who does not use it with discretion. What was Theda Bara's ambition? Did it bring her success?

She was Olga Dolan, a product of Poverty Row. But that didn't prevent her from being ambitious. She could rise from the depths. Follow her adventures in "Lure of Ambition."

Olga Dolan became the Duchess of Rutledge because she was ambitious to rise from her drab environment. What happened? See Theda Bara in "Lure of Ambition."

"A MISFIT EARL"

(BETZWOOD GOLDWYN)

Louis Bennison Scores in a Humorous Story

LOUIS Bennison's infectious humor and his inimitable style are factors which make his latest picture a decidedly amusing offering. Although he has a conventional story here, you forget its obviousness in his rich characterization. We have never seen him fail to keep an audience in an uproar. "A Misfit Earl" takes him out of the West again and puts him down among the nobility of England. He is the lost heir of the house of Dunhaven and after the Earl's death he naturally inherits the estate. Now the subject matter of this tale is exceedingly simple and it has been done time and again in pictures. Yet it takes on added freshness because of the star's manner of interpretation. It is all a joke to him. He finds life below stairs with the servants much more entertaining than in the close confinement of the drawing-room.

There is one weakness in the Bennison offerings and that is the sponsors rely too heavily upon the star. The story can usually look out for itself while the characterization is unduly emphasized. This procedure tends to make the action drag a trifle. Because it becomes monotonous. Yet "A Misfit Earl" would be a frail thing, indeed, if the Bennison personality was subordinated. The interest is derived in watching him score his points. He pokes gentle fun at himself in his new disguise and accepts everything for its comical value.

The picture is fortified with remarkable clever captions, which of course emphasize the humorous characterization. It is a fast moving comedy which entertains from inception to conclusion. Book it for your patrons; a good time will be enjoyed by all. Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

The inimitable Louis Bennison comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in his latest comedy-drama entitled "A Misfit Earl." The star has a manner all his own and his original style makes him conspicuous among cowboy stars. Being endowed with a strong sense of humor he never fails to bring it out in rich expression. This time he is plain Jim Dunn, a Wyoming ranchman, who inherits the title of the Earl of Dunhaven. His father had been disinherited for marrying an American girl, and when the grandfather dies Jim promptly journeys to England where he finds a group of conspirators ready to fight him for the estate.

The aristocratic life appeals to his sense of humor and he finds keen enjoyment in hobnobbing with the servants to the discomfiture of his relatives. He accepts everything for its comical value, but after a time the idleness begins to pall. So he leaves the conspirators to journey back to the open country of Wyoming. And a fair English girl accompanies him. The picture unfolds a rich amount of comedy, which is expressed in an original manner. The star's unique methods bring out the amusing incidents to their full value. The story was written by Wilson Bayley and produced under the direction of Ira M. Lowry. Mr. Bennison has a capable corps of assistants.

PROGRAM READER

Jim Dunn, a Wyoming ranchman, journeyed to England one day to become the Earl of Dunhaven. His father had been disinherited for marrying an American girl, and when the grandfather died the obstacles were removed and the cowboy inherited the title. Think of it — Jim Dunn an English Earl! Better to call him a misfit Earl, since he didn't have the least conception what the title meant. He liked plain, common people about him, did Jim. That's why he preferred the company of his servants to his scheming relatives. He could find happiness in the kitchen or the butler's pantry. The aristocrats called him an impostor. But he showed them with his resourceful right arm — and left that they had guessed wrong. How he took care of himself, how he sickened of society life, how he found romance are events which are amusingly depicted in "A Misfit Earl" which comes to this theatre next ———— with Louis Bennison as the star. It is a rare comedy. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

All advertising that you do on this feature should emphasize the fact that Louis Bennison is here again with his happy-go-lucky, appealing personality. He is a different kind of cowboy star. He is a comedian. So bring out that his inimitable humor may be appreciated in "A Misfit Earl." Emphasize his other pictures and tell that his newest contribution keeps to the same high average. The story, which presents an American cowboy inheriting an English title, is nothing original, but you might hint at it and relate some of the interesting passages because this sort of stuff always seems to carry a great popular appeal. You can promise a fast moving comedy and one that is rich in amusing incidents. You won't have any disappointed patrons because the picture is just that. Play up the catch line angle in outlining the action. Be sure to emphasize the humor of the role. But feature the star in all your advertising.

"THE THUNDERBOLT"

(FIRST NATIONAL)

Powerful Strokes in This Vital Drama

KATHERINE MacDONALD, capitalized as the "American Beauty," has certainly made an auspicious start as a First National star in "The Thunderbolt,' an original creation by J. Grubb Alexander. Her repressive attitudes are wonderfully appropriate for the role she is called upon to interpret, since it is her duty to maintain a family pride. And how better can that virtue be emphasized than through the employment of an admirable reserve? The idea is founded upon a feud, but since the contending parties have outgrown the use of firearms, the conflict takes on an originality which is as dramatic as it is daring in conception.

The husband and the wife are the last of their race and it is his object to avenge his father's death by compelling her name to die with her. And so the conflict takes form. She is equally determined to conquer. Here is where the unusual development enters. The husband has been marked at birth by lightning so that whenever a thunderstorm occurs he is temporarily insane and has no knowledge of what he is doing. A masterful figure when in his right mind he becomes pitifully weak during a storm. The mother instinct will not be denied. And a child comes to bring her the first happiness she has ever known — and with the boy comes a regeneration of the father. Four years of aloofness — four years of studied indifference pass by before he admits defeat.

The action is repetitious toward the finale which tends to make it anti-climatic, but there is no denying its dramatic sweep. You feel the intensity of the scenes because they are rich in suspensive values. The picture reaches its strongest moments during the storms. You catch the struggling of the man's soul as it attempts to find expression. You somehow feel his humanity beneath his brutal mask. Thomas Meighan makes this figure ring absolutely true. He plays with remarkable depth and sincerity. Colin Campbell's direction is praiseworthy in every department. Length, 6 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Thunderbolt" is the interesting sounding title of the new First National photoplay starring Katherine MacDonald, "The American Beauty" with Thomas Meighan the "wonderman" of "The Miracle Man" in a role which really entitles him to co-starring privileges, comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— day engagement beginning ————.

Besides being a splendid acting vehicle for both the principal players, the feature is said to be the strongest and most original story to reach the screen in a long time.

A man marries a girl that he may make sure that she shall never bear child and thereby extinguish her family, she being the last.

His desire is fostered by the fact that there has been a feud of long standing existing between the two families and since killing in quarrels of this kind have gone out of fashion, he chooses this method of "getting" the last of this ancient enemy. To tell you more of the plot of this highly original picture would be to injure your enjoyment of it. Suffice to say that it is intensely interesting with beautiful Miss MacDonald and Mr. Meighan as the best roles of their career.

PROGRAM READER

In presenting Katherine MacDonald's latest picture "The Thunderbolt" we take pleasure in announcing to those who do not know her that she is acknowledged to be the most beautiful woman appearing on the screen and also a most capable actress. In her support is Thomas Meighan, famous for his great portrayal in "The Miracle Man" and a prime favorite with all audiences. While Miss MacDonald is starred, Mr. Meighan has really the best role of the two. "The Thunderbolt" is a highly original story — one of the few that appear nowadays. The appearance of this picture at this theatre in the near future we will guarantee to be a rare dramatic treat.

CATCH LINES

"The American Beauty" and "The Wonder Man" will appear in ———— "Story, star and support make the ————."

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them" still holds good.

The rifle in settling feuds was passé. The last of the Corbins found another way to end the enmity between his family and the Pomeroys.

"THE BANDBOX"

(HODKINSON)

Picture is Burdened With Too Much Mystery

THE fact that Louis Joseph Vance is an entertaining author and can always be relied upon to interest the reader will undoubtedly attract his public when it sees his story, "The Bandbox," visualized on the screen. That same public is liable to be disappointed for the story interest is a negligible factor. In emphasizing its dominant note of mystery the sponsors have relegated the romantic element to the background — this element only showing its pretty head in the concluding footage. Thus it presents the appearance of being forced.

Those in charge have certainly kept the spectator guessing, but in accomplishing this end they have apparently forgotten that no mystery can maintain its suspense unless there is some tangible thread to work upon. The fault lies in a disjointed continuity, there being no sequence in the arrangement of scenes and situations.

Were the picture re-edited and certain irrelevant scenes and titles eliminated it would present a first rate entertainment. The idea is there all right but it doesn't come to the surface because the mystery is over-emphasized. Doris Kenyon fulfils the demands of her role in a satisfactory manner, although she is more at home in romantic expressions. The acting honors, however, go to Walter McEwen, who gives a capital performance in a dual role. It is good to see this capable character actor in a part worthy of his ability. PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Bandbox," an adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's story of the same name, will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ———— with charming Doris Kenyon as the star. This is a Hodkinson production, and it presents a story of mystery, love and adventure. As Eleanor Searle, a young singer, enmeshed in the machinations of a band of international crooks, Miss Kenyon acquits herself splendidly. On the steamer returning to America are Alison Landis, an actress, who tricks her fiance, Benjamin Staff, into carrying a bandbox containing the Cadogan collar, a valuable necklace, and William H. Iff, a mysterious person who shares Staff's cabin. Before the steamer reaches shore Eleanor is confronted by her father, a crook known as Arbuthnot Ismay, who so closely resembles Iff that the latter is made to suffer for the other's misdeeds.

Previous to meeting her father the girl has some words with Staff concerning a bandbox she carries, the exact replica of the one in his cabin. At the pier there is an exchange of bandboxes, Eleanor, unknowingly, making off with the one that contains the necklace. So she is pursued by Ismay, whose footsteps in turn are dogged by Iff. The latter is really her father, and his object is to turn the impostor over to the authorities. It happens that Ismay steals the necklace and spirits Eleanor away to his island "roost." Iff learns of the abduction, and with the aid of Staff, who has grown to love the girl, rushes to the rescue. A battle ensues and the crook is killed. And happiness comes. The picture is strong with suspense and fast moving action, and it is punctuated with a pretty romance. Miss Kenyon is supported by the capable Walter McEwen and others.

CATCH LINES

See "The Bandbox" — it presents a fascinating mystery, a pleasant romance, and a stirring adventure. And pretty Doris Kenyon is the star.

The valuable Codogan collar was missing. Who had it? Who smuggled it past the custom officers? Surely it couldn't be Eleanor who was guilty! See Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox."

What became of the valuable necklace? You will find out in one of the most fascinating stories ever written. See "The Bandbox" on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this feature it would be well to concentrate upon two names — the name of the author and what he stands for in the literary world, and the name of the star and what she stands for in the celluloid world. Bring out the titles of Vance's other stories. Touch upon his ability to write entertainingly. Mention his works. Bring out Miss Kenyon's position on the screen as one of its leading lights. Tell that she is now appearing on Broadway in a leading role in the play "The Girl in the Limousine." Run stills of her because she is remarkably pretty. Use catch lines and emphasize the mystery. Don't by any means give away the plot. That would spoil the suspense, and a mystery tale must keep the reader in the dark. Co-operate with your bookstore and get the merchant to run a sale of "The Bandbox." Ask your patrons to solve the mystery. If you can get a leading milliner to display a number of bandboxes in the window it would be a good advertisement.

"THE POISON PEN"

(WORLD)

Novel Characterization in Elvidge's Latest

THERE may be those who will say that June Elvidge's latest World picture, "The Poison Pen," strains credulity in that it is far removed from life, but if they read the papers carefully they will take notice that the idea crops out every blue moon. It has taken Edwin August to realize upon its dramatic value and he has succeeded in turning out a photoplay that is interesting because of its novelty and its unique characterization. The idea is more apropos of small town life because the writer of poison pen letters knows the natives and is able to rattle the skeletons in their closets.

The interest is centered in the protagonist rather than in the plot material and naturally it sends out a reasonable measure of suspense since the spectator is kept in the dark throughout the greater part of the play concerning the identity of the letter writer. But even when you discover that the star is the responsible party, Mr. August continues his suspense by developing a cure for her dual personality. Only here does he tax credulity, though it must be admitted that his development is the logical way. A surgeon is called in and by using hypnotic suggestion and violet rays and what not, the heroine is cured of her evil personality. It was during her sleepwalking moments that her evil nature asserted itself and she didn't spare her parents nor herself.

"The Poison Pen" will be accepted because it is different despite its unpleasant theme. Mr. August might have dispensed with certain superfluous characters since they only appear ridiculous. The picture is quite entertaining; it presents Miss Elvidge at the peak of her talent and Earle Metcalfe as a capable assistant. And it has dramatic value. Don't forget that. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

June Elvidge, the World star, will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her newest photoplay entitled "The Poison Pen." This is an original story written by Edwin August and it presents an idea which is exceedingly novel. The writer who wields a poison pen is ever with us, though we are never sure of his or her identity because the letters are signed "Anonymous." Miss Elvidge is given opportunity here to display her emotional capabilities and she takes full advantage of them. Her role is that of Allayne Filbert, who, during her sleep, is transformed from a sweet and unaffected girl to a creature whose debased mentality finds pleasure in writing scurrilous attacks on prominent men and women as well as herself.

Her dual personality is not discovered until private detectives catch her in one of her sleep-walking moments. So the identity of the poison pen writer being established, her fiance offers to bring a specialist to cure her of her evil nature. The latter succeeds in banishing the base influence from Allayne's mind. It is a terrifying moment, however, for her parents and fiance when the two personalities battle for supremacy and the evil nature seems to dominate. Gradually the girl's better side wins and happiness is found for all concerned. The picture carries a strong measure of suspense and the action is spontaneous throughout. Miss Elvidge is rendered able assistance by a large group of players. Earl Metcalfe gives a satisfactory performance in the opposite role.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this picture as something different from the ordinary run of photoplays. It would be a good angle to emphasize the theme and bring out the idea behind it. Every community has suffered from poison pen writers who hide their cowardice behind the word "Anonymous." Play up the fact that these writers have an uncanny sense of reaching the secrets of the heart. Bring out that June Elvidge appears in her greatest role and acquits herself splendidly. Just give the merest outline of the plot, but don't give away the identity of the letter-writer. The picture carries a good value of suspense which would be negligible if the plot was given. Use a teaser campaign and shroud the tale in mystery. Mention that Earl Metcalfe appears in support.

CATCH LINES

Who wrote these poison pen letters? They had the whole neighborhood terrified. No one but the meanest coward could stoop to such a practice. Then it was discovered that—. See June Elvidge in "The Poison Pen."

She had a dual personality and the evil influence continually battled with the good for supremacy. Which conquered? See "The Poison Pen."

"I had never used your Simplex but---"

This sentence or its equivalent invariably appears among the scores of voluntary testimonials sent us each week by new and enthusiastic Simplex users telling of Simplex satisfaction.

Since most of our output is used in the replacing of other makes of machine the difference in construction and workmanship is so striking that men involuntarily feel that they must write us of the unbelievable difference that they find in the Simplex after their experience with others.

And strange to say---everyone of these men firmly believe that they have the best Simplex that we ever turned out which speaks volumes for our policy of making every Simplex as good as the one before it.

And so popular has the Simplex become that other machines are borrowing its features and even copying as closely as possible its general appearance, which leads us to remark that---

CHAINS AND CHICANERY

There is absolutely no reason for selling your theatre while the best films in the market are being made by independent producers.

There is a panicky feeling evident among theatre owners today, but bear in mind that a panic can be started by a mouse.

The cause for the unrest, when you analyze the situation, is of mouse-like importance. The only danger lies in the panic itself.

Sit tight and look the thing squarely in the eye. Here is what confronts us.

Big distributor interests are seeking to tie up your theatres. WHY?

Because their product is of uneven quality and they dare not try to sell it exclusively on a basis of merit.

How are they trying to tie up your theatres?

By forcing you to sign long-term and exclusive contracts.

If you sign these contracts, you shut your house to all the splendid offerings of the independent producers and are compelled to play a program of uncertain quality in competition with the biggest attractions of the screen. You've got no chance to win.

If you don't sign the contract, these would-be monopolists offer to buy a controlling interest in your theatre. If you sell, they run your business. Again you've got no chance to win.

If you don't sign the contract and won't sell out, what then? They try to frighten you with threats of building a house next door to yours, if need be.

Suppose they build. Let them run their programs while you have the pick of the whole independent field and you'll close them up.

Theatre men, if you will only think a moment, you'll realize that it is a monumental bluff that is being shown. These distributor-interests can't control the theatre situation unless they can control productions. Thank Heaven, producers are getting freer every day and the dominant factor in the rental business today is not the old line monopoly, but the independent producers.

I repeat—a panic can be started by a mouse. Forget the mouse; it can do no harm unless you let it throw you into a panic.

There is a remedy for the whole situation—a sure curb to any attempt at monopoly.

Refuse to sign any contract that ties your hands so that you cannot at all times go into the open market and buy what and where you please.

Don't be frightened into selling the control of your theatre.

That's all. There are more than enough good films made to supply every theatre's needs, and these films can be rented freely and fairly. No distributor has a monopoly of good films and you can get all that you want in quality and quantity.

United Artists Corporation is now booking the DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' releases, "HIS MAJESTY, THE AMERICAN" and "WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY" and D.W. GRIFFITH'S "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" on a single picture basis. The MARY PICKFORD PICTURES and the CHARLIE CHAPLIN PICTURES that are to come to us later on will be booked the same way, each picture on its own merits.

There are many other independent producers making films of splendid quality. As long as this supply is at your command, you have nothing to fear.

Any distributor who insists on a long term contract for product that you know nothing about is imposing on you. You don't need such a contract when the market has plenty of film of superior quality, that the independent producers are not afraid to let you have on a single picture basis.

Remember, to control the theatres you must be able to control productions. Look the field over; check-up the product of all distributors and see if any one company controls all the worth-while product.

Monopoly? Control?

IT CAN'T BE DONE!

Hiram Abrams.

A Powerful Spectacle of the Orient

A Reginald Barker Production

No such photoplay has ever before been created in the motion picture drama.

And no two players were ever more perfectly cast for a drama of the emotions than Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen.

It is Geraldine Farrar's supreme triumph, and it seems almost a desecration to step down from that triumph to a discussion of its money-making possibilities for the exhibitor.

We speak with reserve when we say that the country at large will flock to see Flame of the Desert —and the wonderful Geraldine Farrar!

For Goldwyn

ON December first a Goldwyn advertisement will appear in three hundred and eighty six newspapers.

—a big advertisement—

And there will be one each succeeding week.

Every advertisement will advertise a Goldwyn Picture that is actually being shown. Not only that—but Goldwyn will advertise Goldwyn exhibitors.

Thus the Goldwyn advertising will directly benefit the exhibitor, and bring the crowds to the individual theatre to see a particular picture.

Goldwyn has retained us to prepare this campaign. We are the people who for years have aided in the conception of the advertising of Colgate & Co., Eastman Kodak Co., General Electric Co., Studebaker Corporation, etc., etc.

HER THIRD PICTURE FOR FIRST NATIONAL FROM HER OWN STUDIOS

The public will see in ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild" scenery that is not hackneyed. New locale was secured by going to Scotland and here in this picturesque country, a screen drama has been unfolded that is entirely different in its subject matter than anything the screen has ever seen. This is not a foreign picture that has been re-edited and re-cut for American consumption. It is an American picture that was made in Scotland because we did not have the scenery nor the atmosphere in the United States that would faithfully carry out the author's story. Griffith did the same thing with "Hearts of the World." Herbert Brenon is doing the same thing in England and France today.

Because it is different from all other pictures ever made, makes ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild" the one big bet that it is.

"The Tower of Jewels"

By Lucien Hubbard

Directed by Tom Terriss

Edited by

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester

Corinne Griffith has been called the most beautiful star on the screen. Her beauty fairly sparkles in "The Tower of Jewels."

Here is a picture which opens wide the portals of a hidden realm—the realm of de luxe crime.

It reveals to ordinary mortals an amazing vision of those creatures who employ vast intelligence to the pursuit of burglary.

Corinne Griffith as the star of
"The Tower of Jewels"
has the role of a bewitching maid whose charms are the instrument of the outlaw, but whose heart is as pure gold.

The scenes of
are laid in both the upper world and the underworld.

TRIANGLE----

Creator of Great Pictures and Great Stars

GRIFFITH, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett and others at the very top of their profession were gathered together in one organization.

They made pictures, great pictures, with stars whose successes have made film history — Dorothy Dalton, Hart, Fairbanks, Gish sisters, and others. Truly, Triangle made not merely great pictures but great stars.

These really remarkable pictures, of a quality in advance of their time, have been re-created and brought from the past of which they were the marvel into the present, which they adorn.

Triangle invites the critical inspection of these pictures by those exhibitors who desire the best and only the best.

TO THE SOUTHEASTERN EXHIBITORS:

When I secured "Lightning Bryce the newest fifteen episode serial, I considered that I secured the greatest serial ever made. In my opinion, "Lightning Bryce" is going to be the greatest money getting serial that has ever played this section. It is truly a feature serial with many feature touches that are only seen in the biggest of special productions.

The stars, Ann Little and Jack Hoxie are both high class performers and are stars that will stand advertising in a big way. They perform some of the most thrilling and dangerous stunts that I have ever witnessed, in this serial. Your patrons are going to see a serial, "Lightning Bryce" that will hold their interest from the first episode to the fifteenth and then they will be sorry that the serial is over.

I want all Southeastern exhibitors to accept my judgment on "Lightning Bryce". I cannot praise it too highly and I am sure you will agree with me after seeing it, that it is a high class, high speed serial with wonderful box office value. Do not let your competitor build up his business and make a lot of money out of this serial. SHOW SOME LIGHTNING SPEED AND BOOK IT YOURSELF.

TO THE NEW ENGLAND EXHIBITORS:-

During the past six years I have handled and exploited eleven different serials in the New England States and during this time I have seen some very good serials. I want to state here however, that my new serial, "Lightning Bryce" is without the question of a doubt, THE PEER OF ALL SERIALS SO FAR RELEASED.

duced with such splendid photography, such action, such suspense such story and such perfectly executed details as appear in "Lightning Bryce". There never has been a serial produced with the author has written a story that carries through and one that is worth seeing on the screen.

opinion is the master serial director, Paul Hurst, who in my looked a single detail in the carrying out of them all, has not overscenes and the situations that are developed by the different is a punch and a thrill in every foot of film. There ture touches that are absolutely new in serials. There are feathing about "Lightning Bryce" that will make you regret when the serial is finished. You will want more and more of it. It holds interest throughout.

ial that will please one hundred percent of your patronage. It is truly a feature wonder serial and one that will make you more friends than anything you have ever run before. Unless I miss my guess, this serial will prove you more money than any serial that has ever been released before.

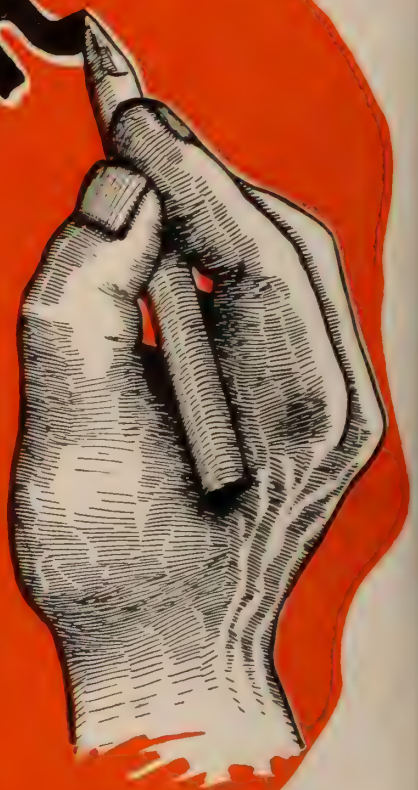
A Sensation in BOSTON!

"The Confession"



The Boston American said:—

"It is superlative entertainment which plays upon all the finer emotions with a story that grips the attention. Photography is especially fine.

The Boston Post said:—

"Laughter chased tears and tense expectation held a large audience fascinated at the first public performance of "The Confession"—the film version of Hal Reid's love lyric of sublime faith on trial. Only a veteran playwright could have written such a drama as "The Confession". Only with the last scene does the tremendous tension relax."

The Boston Evening Record said:—

"Plenty of action amid beautiful scenes, in the Canadian Northwest. All in all "The Confession" carries with it a beautiful love story and more."

The Boston Herald said:—

"The Confession" can without hesitation be placed alongside "The Birth of a Nation", "Broken Blossoms" and other film masterpieces shown in this city in the last few years. It is a soul stirring picture with sentiment that rings true and a plot unique."

The Boston Daily Globe said:—

"The author has skillfully wrought into his tale a charming love story and a background on which humor and pathos of a telling sort are beautifully painted."

The Boston Traveller said:—

"Before a large and enthusiastic audience the motion picture drama—"The Confession" had its first presentation in Boston last night. At the hour of performance the box office was fairly stormed by crowds."

What more need we say?

A tremendous dramatic sensation played by an all star cast including Henry B. Walthall, brilliant star of "The Birth of a Nation."

Don't Be Buffaloed!

WE want to put forth a message to the exhibitor with all the emphasis we are capable of.

We want to back it with the utmost sincerity and with our complete belief in the solid future of this industry.

The message is: Don't be buffaloed!

Rumors, tricks, threats, suspicions are flying fast today.

Forget them.

Just remember that a business as big as this isn't run on pettiness. It is shaped, and therefore your part in it is shaped by big business laws — that's all.

It's a big, solid, permanent industry. And as the retailer in it, the man between pictures and the public you are the most substantial part of it. You've good solid ground under your feet. If you feel any shakiness it's in your head, not in your feet. It's only your imagination.

Just so long as you're a good showman and hold your public you have nothing to fear from any man.

But, you say, you can't hold your public without good pictures; and you are fearful of your future supply.

Nonsense.

Never before in the history of this business has the outlook been so promising.

You will get many good pictures from many sources.

And you always will.

No one concern will ever control the supply of good pictures. Corraling productions is as futile as getting a grip on quicksilver. It can't be done — that's all. It won't be done.

What you need right now is a little hindsight and a little foresight.

If you will look back you will find that every attempt to close and control this market has failed and that furthermore the exhibitors who bowed down before the menace of control got the worst of it.

If you will look ahead you will see the solid permanence of this business of making and showing pictures to meet a great public demand — and your own solid and permanent part in it as an independent factor, shopping freely for pictures for which in turn the public shops freely.

Don't mortgage that future. Don't let any present bugaboo fool you. Sit tight and smile.

Be independent — and you'll win.

What's the Answer?

WE have spoken before of the great new aggregation of picture palaces in this country. It is now estimated that $76,000,000 have been invested in these buildings within the past year, and since the armistice.

We have spoken of the huge responsibility placed upon pictures by this new order of picture theatre.

It is a huge responsibility — because of the huge investment, staggering overhead and large seating capacity of this new theatre aggregation.

We have thought, for instance, that these new theatres might offer a booking circuit to the operatic stars of New York at prices they could not refuse; and thus pictures would be supplemented with the art of the greatest vocalists in the world; and the world at large, through picture theatres, would, for the first time, hear the greatest singers.

Will pictures, alone, present pictures, meet this new responsibility; or will music help meet it; or will pictures, through some new development, of and in themselves, rise to the opportunity?

We like the last thought best. Whatever the new

Why Not Percentage?

AN exhibitor, owning a chain of six theatres in Michigan, replies at length to our editorial — "Percentage is Coming." He is a University graduate, a director and officer in several other corporations, and he has spent six years in this business making a success of his group of modern theatres.

Such a business man's viewpoint is interesting.

"I would be glad" says he "to do business in this field as in others. But I can't. Film rentals are, most of them, arrived at by a species of poker game between exhibitor and film salesman. There's no stability.

"This Fall I was asked, in one town, $150 for a service for which I formerly paid $39. We finally compromised for $50.

"My film rentals run 18 per cent of my gross intake so, by your figures, I am paying considerably over the average.

"Why then am I asked a raise of 400 per cent? It makes me question for one thing the honesty of the film salesman, especially since I invariably find that I can always do better business by going direct to the exchange manager.

"I agree thoroughly with your statement that exhibitors who hold rental prices down too low are just as much to blame as distributors who put them too high. Theatres must have pictures and pictures must have theatres — each on a give-and-take, fair-and-above board, reasonable basis.

"But why am I asked a raise of 400 per cent."

We might reply at length to the above letter.

But one answer will suffice.

It is: Why not percentage?

Tomorrow's Task

THE motion picture played a leading role in the World War.

This is widely known and freely admitted. There is no call to debate here upon the fact nor to trace the effect of the pictures' world-wide campaign of enlightenment.

The question now, the all-important question, is: What is the picture to do for the after war situation?

If ever enlightenment was needed it is now.

The picture's opportunity is a great one, but no greater than its power.

The decision to use the power and certainly not to misuse it rests with the makers of pictures.

Radicalism — a menace greater to the world's security than even the issue of the war itself — has filled the world.

Radicalism rests upon ignorance. Perhaps it, in itself, cannot be untaught, but at least the body politic, the substantial citizen majority, can be taught to cast it away.

We want pictures that inculcate patriotism, good citizenship, industry, thrift and the ideals of good government. Above all, we don't want pictures that foster passion, prejudice, that inflame, that teach wrong doctrines.

The press isn't free from radicalism. The picture is. Let us guard it with all care. May it never carry a flash of the red flag. Let it, on the contrary, so express itself to the millions that no hand will want to, let alone dare to raise a single symbol of anarchy.

Much can be done, with no sacrifice of entertainment qualities, to reconstruct the world back into mental health and happiness. Much harm can be done by anyone who otherwise obeys a selfish and misguided impulse.

The American-made picture stands first today the world over. It can win new laurels as a spokesman of Americanism — as opposed to disorder, violence and bad government. No American will make a picture that expresses anything but Americanism.

Wm. A. Johnson

Longer Runs; Better Prices

A gradual trend toward preference for productions that will play for three, four and six days at advanced prices is apparent among exhibitors in Eastern Pennsylvania, according to W. J. Heenan, an exchange manager in Philadelphia.

"I have less trouble today booking attractions at $50 a day than I did a year ago in arguing exhibitors into paying $25 a day," he declares. "This is true particularly in the small towns in this territory. For instance, the first two Constance Talmadge productions released by First National proved, during their first run presentations in Philadelphia, that they were entitled to be called 'six day' pictures.

"It is for this class of attractions that exhibitors are most eager. I am getting $50 a day now, in scores of instances, from exhibitors who, a year ago, felt that $15 was the absolute maximum they could pay for a day's service."

Brunet Discusses Percentage Booking

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has contributed a most interesting discussion of percentage booking following on the recent editorial by William A. Johnston. Mr. Brunet invites a general discussion of the subject by producers and exhibitors.

Motion Picture News is glad to extend its space for the publication of the views of those active in all branches of the business on the percentage subject.

Present developments in the distribution and booking of pictures are certain to make the subject of percentage booking one of the vital topics of the coming year.

Mr. Brunet's fair-minded and comprehensive contribution starts the discussion off in clean-cut fashion. Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., is another film man who has taken up the subject. His views will appear in next week's issue.

Mr. Brunet's letter follows:

PATHÉ EXCHANGE, INC. EXECUTIVE OFFICERS, 25 WEST 45TH STREET, NEW YORK — OFFICE OF VICE PRES. & GEN'L MANAGER.

November 18, 1919

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON, ESQ., EDITOR AND PRESIDENT, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC., 729 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY:

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Your leading editorial, "PERCENTAGE IS COMING," in last week's NEW'S opens up a tremendous field for discussion, and I sincerely trust that a generous number of exhibitors and distributors will avail themselves of the use of your columns for the purpose of a symposium of opinions pro and con.

Speaking for Pathe Exchange, Inc., I can say that we heartily favor a system of percentage contracts, provided always that a mutually equitable arrangement can be arrived at as between exhibitor and distributor.

Such an arrangement cannot be decided upon hurriedly. There are a great many aspects to be considered. But considering the number of years that the percentage contract has been the standard form of arrangement with speaking stage road shows, and further considering that the said arrangement has worked in an eminently satisfactory manner, it seems reasonable to suppose that the percentage contract method could be successfully adapted for use with motion picture bookings.

Under a percentage contract plan each picture would rely upon its box office attractiveness — the public would set the value — just as in the case of stage plays. The present very arbitrary method of bargaining between the exhibitor and salesman, where the buyer and the seller each places what must necessarily be a purely hypothetic value upon the product, would be relegated to the discard, and an era of absolutely fair trading would be ushered in.

The division of gross receipts under a percentage contract plan would form the first stumbling block, for as a rule the theatre men have insisted upon their "nut" being first taken out of the receipts. It is for this reason that Pathe has hitherto discouraged percentage bookings excepting in cases where the exhibitor will agree to give our picture or pictures a clear share of the gross receipts without any deductions whatsoever. The picture's share of the box office takings must of necessity vary under different circumstances. In the biggest theatres where money is lavished upon expensive orchestras and singers, where big exploitation campaigns in newspapers and upon billboards are the rule, then the big feature picture may not be entitled to more than 15% of the gross receipts — on a $10,000 week's business this would mean $1,500 to the big feature and $8,500 to the theatre for the rest of the programme, rental, advertising, management, overhead expenses and profit. But if the big feature failed to draw the expected gross and only played at $5,000 on the week, its share would be only $750.

In first class neighborhood houses which rely almost wholly on the pictures to attract the crowds, and where the musical programme is a comparatively unimportant item, the big feature is of course entitled to a larger share of the gross receipts — say 20% — and in very small houses where the picture is everything it is entitled to 25% of the gross, clear of any deductions whatsoever.

The above figures are given more or less in a hypothetical sense. I would say they would apply only in the case of a very average feature but they serve to illustrate my point. A production of unusual box office merit which would naturally increase the exhibitor's business much above his normal receipts would be entitled to a much larger share of the gross receipts.

In addition to the actual sharing terms of percentage contracts, there are obviously other vexed questions which would have to be "ironed out" before a proper basis could be fixed upon. The chiefest of these are: Checking up the house at every performance. It is impracticable to travel managers to check up the house, and collect the picture's share nightly, as is done with road shows, but some method must be devised whereby the distributor can have assurance that he will receive a true and correct accounting of gross takings.

This matter of percentage is such an important question, and one which will have such far-reaching effects upon motion picture distribution in the future, that I would respectfully suggest for your consideration the idea of your opening up your columns with an invitation to exhibitors and distributors to contribute their opinions for the benefit of the industry as a whole. At the end of the symposium you can then summarize the question from both standpoints, and in your usual masterly manner outline a basis for percentage contract bookings which should serve as a guide to exhibitors and distributors alike.

I have not considered it necessary to comment upon the arguments advanced in your editorial, because it is so obvious that they are based upon common sense and a desire to be of mutual assistance to all concerned. As you rightly point out, there exists today a grave amount of inequality in the method of booking and renting motion picture product. The "one-man-town" exhibitor is forcing the exhibitor with competition to pay an unequal share of the production and distribution cost of many pictures. A sensible basis of percentage contract bookings would set right such situations, would give the actual "special" its due share of the money which it has attracted to the box office, and would pay to the mediocre picture a real and not a false and exaggerated and purely hypothetical value.

As a means of eliminating the unfit in pictures I can think of no quicker or better means than percentage bookings. Distributors of sterling product would have no need to fear percentage, nor should fair-minded exhibitors object to giving the box office attraction a proper share of the gross receipts which it is responsible for.

The road show which fails to attract worth while business is quickly called in from the road. Why should we in this industry continue to bolster up a system

W. A. Johnston Editorial Brings Straight Talk From Harold Franklin

"PICTURES AND THEATERS," the editorial by William A. Johnston in last week's issue of Motion Picture News brought a speedy response from Harold Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The up-state theater man talks straight from the shoulder in his enthusiastic approval of the editorial and minces no words in discussing the big developments taking place in the industry at the present moment.

As we go to press words of praise for the editorial have also been received from other prominent exhibitors throughout the country. These letters will be published in next week's Motion Picture News.

Harold Franklin's communication reads as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

YOUR editorial "Pictures and Theatres" hits a vital spot! It expresses what is in the mind of most exhibitors, and it is gratifying that your influential pen is directed towards a frank discussion on what is perhaps the most momentous situation in the history of the motion picture industry.

It is quite evident that a group of men are conspiring to secure control of the industry. That is their privilege if they can get away with it, but it is not to be expected that exhibitors who have had a great deal to do with the growth of our industry will stand idly by and let anyone take their business away from them.

If it is the plan of certain producers to monopolize the industry, by securing theatres, they can find comfort in the fact that history shows that even 'Nations' have met with disaster whenever selfishness exerted itself to an extreme.

We will never have a monopoly in the Motion Picture industry; not as long as cameras click, and directors and stars make pictures. Talent cannot be bartered or controlled the same as merchandise, and fortunately the principal factor of success in either the making of pictures or the operation of theatres are men and women of talent.

As soon as it is definitely shown that any producer, distributor, or exhibitor is trying to become the "Dictator" of the motion picture industry, the law of self preservation will assert itself. In fact already we have heard a rumble from the Coast where certain directors have declared themselves independent of any producer or distributor.

A monopoly would hit director and stars most, and they know it. Only by healthy open competition amongst producers can the star and director thrive. This can always be relied upon as a stabilizer of the industry.

Both directors and stars have finally realized that they don't need the producer or distributor to make good pictures and distribute them. No exhibitor need fear the future.

We all remember the sad end of the General Film Company, that at one time planned to dominate everything in the industry. History will repeat itself.

The motion picture industry has thrived through competition. Exhibitors and producers have prospered together. Both have had an equal share in its growth.

The future will see greater cooperation between exhibitors than in the past. In some instances interests will be merged and mutual benefit organizations will spring into being. One thing is certain, that if neccessary the independent exhibitors will have the power to form a cooperative organization that would stagger the "monopolists." It will be said, of course, that it can't be done — that exhibitors will never agree to agree. But necessity is the mother of invention. What an opportunity for a big cooperative exhibitors' organization run on square lines as an agency through which directors and stars could book!

Sincerely,
Harold Franklin

Brunet Discusses Booking

which permits (as at present) totally unattractive photoplays to be foisted on exhibitor and public?

For all first run houses in key centres I am heartily in favor of a percentage booking basis. Let the public decided the value of a picture. When that value has been arrived at, it will be an easy task to place a fair price upon runs in the secondary metropolitan houses and the theatres in smaller towns.

But in this, as with all other evolutionary measures, we must proceed with caution, and "make haste slowly." I am looking forward with keen anticipation to reading the opinions of exhibitors and distributors upon this momentous question, and hope that the response to your editorial will be a generous one, representative of the entire industry.

Very truly yours,

ROYAL GUEST AT FOX THEATRE

THE William Fox Academy of Music was the scene of an historic occasion on Wednesday, November 19th, when his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales attended a motion-picture performance arranged especially in his honor by the William Fox Film Corporation. The large theatre was crowded to the doors by a great audience which grasped every opportunity to cheer and applaud the distinguished guest.

The Prince surrounded by a group of notables occupied the left-hand stage-box during the entertainment which followed immediately upon his arrival shortly after two o'clock. The orchestra of the theatre was occupied chiefly by troops in the uniform of the British Army. The rest of the house was taken possession of by a great crowd of civilians until almost every seat in the big theatre was occupied.

The program for the afternoon included a Mutt and Jeff picture, entitled "Sound Your A"; a Sunshine Comedy, entitled "The Yellow Dog Catcher," featuring Tom Kennedy; and a special edition of the Fox Screen "News" which showed the Prince's arrival in New York and his reception at the City Hall on the day before.

French Film Industry Ceases Marking Time

THE following picture of Motion Picture trade conditions in France, comes from the pen of Royal V. Rothermel, who has recently returned from abroad, where he had opportunity of studying the film situation thoroughly and at close hand

By Royale V. Rothermel

As I see it, after two years of intimate association with her people in every section of the country, mingling with them on their own ground and speaking their language, France, always accepted without question as France the artistic, is turning to the development of France the practical, France the commercial, and in line with this reawakening, for it is not new for her to be either practical or commercial, she has already turned an appraising eye on her cinema.

And no wonder. Fully conscious of the preeminent position she has ever held in the world of Art, she has been shocked as she promenades along her boulevards to see the predominance of American film in her theatres and with an honest appreciation for their surpassing value, realizes that she, France, the Queen of dramatic expression has allowed the commercial development in her own home of the greatest of all the media of expression, the motion picture, to fall into alien hands.

At first sight one might say it was the war. Certainly that had much to do with the overwhelming appearance of American film on the French market but there are reasons deeper and more fundamental than that to explain why the French producer never has been able to feel that sureness of a boundless market for a meritorious film that has always sustained the American in his investment. I should say, after very careful thought given to the subject, that there are two main factors responsible, the French motion picture theatre itself and French social custom.

In respect to their motion picture theatres, cinemas they call them, they are where we were in 1908. Their theatres, and there are not enough of them, are too small, badly lighted, badly designed, poorly ventilated and uncomfortable. Too often they have narrow, bare wooden seats with aisles set too close together and have one projector running film that we, because of its age, would relegate to the scrap heap. As a natural result, they cater in the main to transient business, never even influence a large proportion of their rightful trade and with it all charge prices that here in the States are only asked by the best houses. In all fairness, we must take into consideration that France has been deprived of the possibility of building, reconstructing or even renovating for over five years but then we are speaking of conditions as they are and with no thought of invidious criticism. I merely desire to point out a few of the reasons why American capital should feel attracted to this field and why American producers may look there for an increasing market for their product.

It seems that no concerted, sustained action has been taken by the theatres to attract to them the undeniably large potential element of the general public in whom our managers have demonstrated the possibility of forming the picture going habit. On the contrary, to an American at least, it seems that they have invented ways of discouraging the public. Instead of buying your ticket, going in and taking your seat, you pass through a multitude of hands it seems before you get a ticket written out for you, the conference over the seat between several judicial looking gentlemen behind a high judge's bench is over, your program is bought, tips dispensed and you finally get to an ordinary seat costing from 50 to 75 cents that has nothing in the way of comfort or beanty to recommend it.

While on the subject of prices, the French managers can not or will not take to the theory that it is far better to have a full house at 1 franc 50 than half a house at 2–50. Attracting the masses has certainly not reached the stage with them by a very great deal that it has with us and until it does the industry in France will continue to labor under difficulties. They also achieve a restricted patronage by running but one show a night, starting late and finishing late, with a long intermission in the middle and another at the very end of the show just before the American comedy is put on. They can in this way fortify themselves with the necessary vin rouge, triple sec or quinquina for the atrocious things those foux Americans do to themselves in their comedies. Vraiment. c'est epatant!

An automatic ticket vending machine with a rapid, clean entry to your seat is one of the details they have yet to learn. Indirect lighting sufficient to avoid the necessity of groping around in the dark, sitting in fat ladies' laps and standing on her husband's toes while hunting for the seat is another. A clear, sharp picture on a curtained screen; sloping main floors; (would you believe that almost without exception, the main floor is level?), fading from one reel to another with two machines, all are coming, they have got to. The wonder is that some of the practices that we have come to consider as essential as the very picture on the screen are known to so few of the houses in France.

It is not all to be laid at the door of the theatre manager however. It must be remembered that rapid, convenient transportation is just as necessary to the film industry as it is to any other, probably more so and France certainly does not know the pleasures brought to the doors of our rural and semi-rural populations by high speed, frequent interurban electrics, does not begin to know what cheap automobiles mean and never heard of street cars and subways running all night, not even in peace times in Paris.

Closely combined with this situation and also powerfully retarding the growth of the French cinema, is French social custom. The idea of a young man casually inviting a well brought up young girl to the theatre alone with him is unheard of. Their social custom places him under the necessity of inviting some member of her family to accompany them, the additional cost of which together with the well know tendency of three to make a crowd, effectually militates against the practice. Imagine what our fortunate theatre managers who often fancy themselves badly used would say, if they had to combat any such situation tending to keep the younger element from their theatres.

But is all this any reason to be discouraged over the future of the cinema in France? Not so's you could notice it on the screen! The theatres report a steady even rapid growth of patronage, the business is in a flourshing condition and will continue to remain so for as far ahead as anyone can see at the present time. There is not much fear of the theatres losing ground as long as they furnish the present excellent grade of music found even in the smallest house in the provinces.

Without a shadow of a doubt, the next five years will see great strides taken by either French or American capital, or both combined, to bring the cinema situation up to normal and in keeping with the progress made in other countries in the industry. Considering the inborn, passionate love of the French for the theatre, the studious thought they give to relaxation and the enjoyment of life as contrasted to our mad rushing somewhere, anywhere, no matter so long as we are moving, it is an indisputable fact that the motion picture is destined to find one of its fields of greatest growth in the hospitable soil of France

New Exhibitor-Owned Body Digging In

President Lee Ochs Already Far Ahead on Organization Details For Second National Exhibitors Circuit; Detailed Statement Explains His Plans

PLANS are going ahead rapidly for the active operation of the Second National Exhibitors Circuit, the newly formed exhibitor-owned organization of which Lee A. Ochs is President.

Mr. Ochs and Nathan Burkan, the attorney, have been engaged in outlining the many details that such a large organization entails and have been giving special consideration to the matter of franchises. As Mr. Ochs laid his plans well in advance, went over the ground carefully and inspected the various territories, it is now a case of selecting those applications that seem most desirable.

Although detailed announcement of the plans of Second National are not ready at this time to be given out it can be stated that arrangements are fast being completed not only for the granting of franchises but for the production of pictures.

Statement by Lee Ochs

Early in the week Mr. Ochs issued the following comprehensive statement of the reasons which instigated the formation of the Second National Exhibitors Circuit, and the accomplishments expected of the body:

"In inaugurating the cooperative idea as embodied in United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and in carrying forward the work of organization and, later, my share of the administration of the company, I have been actuated solely by the earnest desire at all times to be of real help to exhibitors of this country. In this work I have served practically without remuneration of any kind and I have been glad indeed to do so.

"But the time has now come when, in justice to myself and my family, I must engage in an enterprise which will insure me a reasonable financial return from my endeavors. For this reason, and this reason alone, I have resigned as Vice-President of United and will immediately organize a company that has already been incorporated under the name of Second National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"In taking this step, I feel that I am in nowise injuring United. I shall strive always to further the interests of that organization in every possible way, for my belief to-day is even stronger than ever heretofore that the United plan is the best that can possibly be devised for the theatre owners of this country. Under the able administration of Mr. J. A. Berst, its president, United will continue its growth in strength and effectiveness.

"I was perhaps one of the first exhibitors in America to advocate the collective buying idea which United typifies. Several years ago, when National President of the Exhibitors League of America, I toured the United States, discussing with theatre owners ways and means of combating those conditions which enabled the film companies to exact rentals which were ruinous to the exhibitor. At a meeting of theatre men from the State of Washington, held about three years ago in Seattle, I strongly urged the formation of a company in which the buying power of exhibitors would be pooled and at many other gatherings in various parts of the country I also advocated the pooling of buying interests. Without exception the men to whom I talked approved the idea and pledged cooperation.

"Then was formed, in February, 1918, the best co-operative exhibitor owned organization that the theatre owners of America ever had, or probably ever will have — United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. I was its president. Shortly afterwards I laid the entire plan before Mr. J. A. Berst, a man capably familiar with every branch of the industry, who had been prominently identified with every big movement in the business since the inception of motion picture, a man whose honesty and integrity has never been questioned. Mr. Berst agreed with me that the time was ripe for a co-operative, exhibitor-owned organization and that the United plan was flawless. He was offered the presidency of United, accepted, and I became the company's vice-president.

"Since then I have worked tirelessly with Mr. Berst building up the organization to the important place it occupies to-day in the motion picture industry. It has been a long hard task.

"Had the exhibitors given United the same degree of support that it was entitled to, United, within a few months from its organization would have reached that stage which has required almost two years to achieve. But, as in all such broad co-operative movements, the exhibitors have moved slowly. That they have moved surely, however, its evidenced by United's present strength. It is the duty of every exhibitor to give to United the fullest possible support, so that the organization may rapidly double its present size and strength.

"My plans for the Second National are not the result of an over-night idea. I have carefully considered the matter from every angle and I am convinced there is not only room but the immediate need for another film company owned and controlled by small groups of exhibitors in the various exchange centers. On April 2nd, last, the Second National Exhibitors Circuit was incorporated. My intention at that time was to resign from United and immediately organize Second National but at the earnest request of Mr. Berst I deferred launching the new company and remained with United, even though it entailed a further financial hardship that I could ill afford.

"In leaving United, the work I have been doing will fall into capable hands, for the company's directorate is being enlarged and the exhibitors themselves will henceforth take a more active part than heretofore in United's management.

"This then leaves me free to carry out my own organization plans."

Citizens Organize to Erect Their Own Motion-Picture Theatre

A novel proposition has been presented to the people of Kitchener, Ontario, for the building of a large moving picture theatre in that center. Mr. F. McCutcheon of the Star Theatre, Kitchener, is responsible for the plan which provides for a popular form of investment on the part of local citizens. The company which has been organized is depending entirely on local capital, and shares are being issued in the form of $10 certificates in the hope that every man and woman in the city will invest a small sum in the enterprise.

The proposed theatre, the site for which has already been secured, is to seat 1,700 persons, and will cost $150,000, according to estimates. A comparatively large sum of money has been subscribed, it is announced.

Robertson-Cole Announces Contests

Two Automobiles to be Given and Competitive Letter Writing Campaign Among Plans to Promote the Big Features That Will be Released

CONTESTS for two handsome automobiles and the starting of a competitive letter writing campaign for prizes totaling $500.00 are the latest announcements of the Robertson–Cole Company's plan to promote the big features about to be released. One of these machines will be given to the champion Robertson–Cole branch manager on the new Martin Johnson Pictures.

The salesmen will have an opportunity to prove their worth in another contest for an auto. This prize will be given to the salesman who secures the greatest number of bona-fide contracts for Robertson–Cole's "Adventure Scenics" up to midnight of December 1. These contests start immediately.

A Chance for the Fan

The third competitive plan is for the fan and will be nation-wide. In the big Gasnier production, "The Beloved Cheater," featuring Lew Cody, Robertson-Cole believe they have one of the most unusual films ever produced and to further exploit it are conducting this love-making letter campaign which will be waged in its favor.

The best love letter written to Lew Cody, care of Robertson-Cole, 1600 Broadway, New York City, will earn $150 in cash for the author. The second best missive will gain $100, while the third prize is a cash bonus of $75. The fourth prize will be $50, and the next best five love letter writers will be given $25 each. This plan is being announced to fans through national advertising mediums.

In keeping with the ever-changing program of the best exhibitors in the land for short subjects, Robertson-Cole in presenting Martin Johnson's stories of the great South Seas attains a new triumph for scenic beauty in photography and pictures that grip and at the same time educate. A publicity and advertising campaign in the trade papers besides the simultaneous publication of the story of Johnson's trip in over 300 daily newspapers in the United States should put "On The Borderland of Civilization" series over as one of the best.

In addition to all of the exploitation schemes adopted by Robertson-Cole for the Johnson series, it was decided to wage this prize contest rivalry to spur the branch managers to even greater success. In addition to putting this series over in a big manner, the contest will give officials of the Robertson-Cole Company a better insight into the individual worth of the men who are in charge of the various exchanges.

The prize for the branch manager will be a machine well worth driving and although announcement was made but this week, many already have commenced to campaign for contracts for the big Cannibal series.

Officials of the Robertson-Cole company have been at work several weeks planning for the two business office contests. To make it absolutely fair for the smallest as well as the largest exchange, territory has been mapped out on a percentage basis and each and every one will be treated in the same degree of fairness.

The business management of Robertson-Cole first planned the contest for branch managers only but upon second considera tion it was decided to ascertain just who was the best salesman employed at the various exchanges, and for this reason, it was decided to allow them to work on "Adventure Scenics" for prizes while the managers compete for the Johnson series and an automobile.

In offering for release "Adventure Scenics" Robertson-Cole display the opposite side of life from that which is shown in the stories of the great South Seas. When Jesse G. Sill of the Adventure Scenics Corporation returned from the forbidden river, he brought with him many thousand feet of film picturing the wildest yet grandest scenery in America. This has been whipped into shape by Robertson-Cole and from the prereviews, officials believe that all records for short subjects will be broken.

To further promote this great series, Robertson-Cole decided to allow the salesmen to compete among themselves for the big auto prize. This contest will be fast and furious for it will terminate on the night of December 31st. Branch managers will not be allowed to compete for the salesman prize. Announcement of the winner will be made about January 15th by officials of Robertson-Cole.

"The Beloved Cheater" will be the best exploited and the best advertised special in the country according to the plans of Robertson-Cole Company. In this picture, Lew Cody in the role of a high liver and high lover, wins added laurels to his screen career. The story is one of those society yarns where clothes, appearances and polished manners count for a lot. Gowns of the latest mode and beauty of settings make it especially attractive.

Robertson-Cole through its staff of publicity and advertising experts decided to interest the fan in this big production. Conferences were held and it was the unanimous opinion of the board that a love letter campaign would be the most effective.

Any girl in the United States is permitted to enter the contest. The only stipulation the Robertson-Cole Company make is that the letter be of the sincere type — one from a girl to her sweetheart. Judges for this big event will be announced later.

Besides the intensive trade paper campaign, especial fan matter will be sent broadcast on "The Beloved Cheater." One of the biggest fan magazine advertising campaigns will be used to exploit this latest Lew Cody success.

In announcing these three contests, Robertson-Cole believe they are breaking all motion picture contests by allowing every phase of the industry to take part in competition for the benefit of the exhibitor.

Reports Kansas City, Kan., Censor Board to Be Having Trouble

According to a report in The Topeka Daily Capital, the Kansas City, Kan., censor board is having trouble, and Governor Allen has appointed Myron S. Miller of Council Grove, Chairman; Mrs. Grace Short of Kansas City; Miss Carrie Simpson of Paola, and Miss Hallie Tuecker of Kansas City, who is secretary. According to reports from Kansas City, Kan., where the board is now operating, the two married ladies do not entertain as liberal views as Miss Simpson, who is generally supported by the secretary, it is said when there are any discussions on proposed rejections. The outcome of Rev. Mr. Collins' investigation is now being awaited to clear up the situation.

Organization Rumor Confirmed

Ince Issues Statement Announcing New Association; George Loane Tucker's Name not Included

CONFIRMATION to the rumor that has been current in Los Angeles for the past two weeks concerning affiliations of several producers and directors, was given November 8th by Thomas H. Ince when statement was issued from his office at Culver City to the effect that Mr. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Alan Dwan, Mack Sennett and Marshal Neilan had agreed to associate themselves in the motion picture business on the expiration of their present contracts.

Negotiations to bring about such an affiliation have been on for several weeks, and following the signing of an agreement by the five men, the announcement was issued from the Ince studio, simultaneously with the statement of co-operation from the other four well-known men involved. Nothing definite has been given out by the new affiliation members other than the fact that they have banded together to organize a distributing chain of offices which will not become effective until after the expiration of their present contracts about September, 1920.

The Ince statement says, "They do not consider it advisable at the present time to divulge the nature of their plans and method of distribution." The inference is made that they have a new plan which they feel confident will be unanimously indorsed by the eight exhibitors of this and foreign countries. The Ince statement concludes with the following:

"The object of this association will be quality rather than quantity of productions and the producers will confine themselves to super-productions of a type which they feel confident will meet with the approval of the public. They announce further that they will welcome and appreciate any suggestions that exhibitors care to offer between now and the beginning of their combined activities."

During the formation days when meetings were being held frequently by the men interested in the new amalgamation, many conflicting rumors were to be heard. For a time the name of George Loane Tucker was coupled with the other producing directors, but this was not included in the statement issued from the Ince plant. Other directors were also named in the rumors who are not to be identified with the organization, according to the later information.

It is hinted here that the formation of the directors brought B. P. Schulberg to the coast, and was also the cause of Walter Greene hurriedly leaving the East for the West.

Sunday Pictures Winning Out

Sydney Cohen of the N. Y. State Exhibitors League Reports Success; National Committee Needed

THE campaign to maintain the operation of motion-picture theatres after church hours on Sunday is making progress, according to a communication just received from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion-Pictures Exhibitors' League, State of New York. The extent of this progress was evidenced by the favorable results of the recent elections wherever Sunday pictures had been made an issue, says Mr. Cohen.

Recommendation is also made in the report for a committee, national in scope, whose headquarters would be located in Washington. This committee, according to Mr. Cohen's suggestion, would co-ordinate the activities of the exhibitors all over the country in the campaign for the right to conduct motion-picture performances on Sunday after church hours. The report calls attention to the fact that the opposition forces have such an organization functioning in the national capital at the present time.

There are two ways pointed out in which the problem can be approached— through an appeal to the courts, and through an appeal to the law-makers. Speaking of the struggle that has been going on in the courts with regard to the Sunday opening of the picture-theatres, Mr. Cohen's report has the following to state:

"I want to call attention to the fact that the courts have within the last year or two shown a marked inclination to differentiate between the motion picture and the regular theatrical performances — always in favor of the pictures. In our own state of New York, the first breach in the ranks of the fanatics was made by the courts. The courts helped to sustain public sentiment and eventually the legislature was forced to follow the courts. Data and statistics we have collected show plainly that other states than New York tend to regard the blue laws as applied to motion pictures with disfavor and disapproval. There will be legislative sessions this year in various states, and we must fight for the rights of the people to have decent and wholesome recreation on Sunday after church hours."

Goldwyn Successfully Increases Its Foreign Business

Although the European market has not yet returned to pre-war conditions, it appears from reports submitted by Goldwyn that Goldwyn Pictures are offering strong competition for the product of the Italian studios.

"Never in the history of the distribution of American photoplays in Italy, declares Goldwyn, has so much advertising space been devoted to the output of an American company, and, according to Arthur Ziehm, who handles the foreign field for Goldwyn, this company is virtually the only 'outsider' to break into one of the most difficult, yet lucrative of markets."

Corinne Griffith's last picture this year will be "The Tower of Jewels," which will be released early next month. Her first picture for the coming year will be "Human Collateral."

Screen's Power Shown in Elections

Statement from Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York Points Out the Weight of Influence of Screen as Evidenced in the Recent Elections

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York, after closely scanning and weighing the results of the recent elections the trend of which will apparently favor the industry in so far as a lessening of restrictions may be looked for, has issued the following article.

In three at least of the populous cities of this State, the recent elections turned entirely on the question of letting the motion picture theatres open on Sunday.

Blue Laws Suffer Set-back

In Mt. Vernon the issue was forced by the Sabbatarians who lined up solidly for the maintenance and strict enforcement of those ancient blue laws. The campaign was conducted by the clergical forces with bitterness bordering on intolerance, while exhibitors of the city did no more than lend expression to the strenuously voiced demands of their patrons. The exhibitors mobilized the overwhelming sentiment in favor of motion-picture entertainment on Sundays, but the people were their own leaders. The laboring element was particularly conspicuous in the battle for the people's ancient rights, or recreation after church hours on Sunday. The Board of Aldermen obeying the clear mandate of the electorate has passed the ordinance permitting the motion-picture theatres to open on Sunday. The vote stood nine to one. In the municipal election of the City of Schenectady, the motion-picture issue overshadowed every other question in the campaign. Indeed, before the battle had been under way for one week, the Sunday question was the sole surviving issue.

The people of Schenectady had always been in favor of motion-picture entertainment on Sunday. Theatres there have been permitted to open, and their closing, due to the action of preachers, had been resented by the voters. This resentment grew when last September the Mayor vetoed an ordinance passed by the Board of Aldermen allowing the motion-picture theatres to open on Sunday. The vote stood nine to six in favor of the ordinance. People who were present at the hearing which preceded the aldermanic vote will never forget the intolerant and fanatical attitude of the ministers who denounced everyone opposed to them as un-American, revolutionary and Bolsheviki.

When the Mayor vetoed the ordinance, he accompanied the veto with a message substantially to the effect that the workingman ought to be satisfied to seek his recreation on weekdays after working hours and not on Sundays. This Mayor, Mr. Simon, had prior to his veto declared himself in favor of Sunday pictures but misjudging the political strength of the church element, he bowed to their dictation and obtained renomination on the Republican ticket. His opponent was a minister, Rev. Dr. Lunn, former member of Congress and ex-Mayor of Schenectady. He was swept into office on the Sunday-picture issue by a majority in excess of 2,000. An amusing manœuver was an attempt by Mayor Simon in the last stages of the campaign.

When he saw how strong the tide was running against him on the Sunday issue, he came out with a statement permitting free motion pictures. He saw his mistake too late as did Assemblyman Edgar R. Davis, Republican, who ran in the County of Schenectady and who was defeated by reason of his opposition to Sunday pictures. The election in Schenectady resulted in making one of the exhibitors there, Mr. J. Shay, a member of the Board of Aldermen. The motion-picture exhibitors in the City and County of Schenectady were greatly aided in their vigorous and aggressive campaign by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York.

Nor was New York State the only Commonwealth in which the power of the screen was emphatically demonstrated. A notable instance of the political power of the screen was furnished in Cleveland, Ohio. Mayor Davis, who ran on the Republican ticket for a third term, was strongly supported by the Cleveland Exhibitors Association who in their support of this candidate voiced the sentiments of a great majority of their patrons. A most vicious campaign consisting largely of mud-slinging was conducted against Mayor Davis. The unanimous support of the screen, however, completely nullified this method of campaigning and brought a strong response from the patrons of theatres who resented the methods employed by Mayor Davis' opposition.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York believes the results of the election in the cities mentioned have more than a local significance and ought to be a source of encouragement and inspiration to exhibitors everywhere. The League will be glad to forward to exhibitors throughout the country valuable facts and figures on the question of Sunday opening.

Johnson and Hopkins Make Answer to Niebuhr Statement on Stock

The Johnson & Hopkins Company declare that the statement of Walter F. Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation, contained in the November 15th issue of the NEWS, is misleading. The statement referred to appeared under the following editorial introduction: "Walter F. Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation, seeks to correct any false impressions that may have been acquired with regards to a reported issue of stock belonging to that company." The more important paragraphs of the Johnson & Hopkins Co.'s letter follow:

"Mr. Niebuhr's statement refers to Johnson & Hopkins Co., which was appointed fiscal agent for the sale of 30,000 shares of American Cinema stock, as 'alleged' specialists in motion picture securities. This is Mr. Niebuhr's first error. We are specialists in motion picture securities, and the coloring given the statement by his use of the word alleged, is most embarrassing because of various motion picture security sales which we are conducting through brokers in various parts of the country.

"Mr. Niebuhr states that we printed advertisements in daily newspapers announcing that we had 'purchased 30,000 shares of American Cinema stock.' We made no such statement in any of our advertising. We were appointed fiscal agent and given an option on the sale of 30,000 shares of the stock as our advertisements read. Nothing regarding our having bought the stock was mentioned."

Among the recent visitors of note at the Lasky studio in Hollywood were G. Harold Powell, formerly right hand man to Herbert Hoover, at the left and A. F. Whyte, right, who is a member of the English Parliament. Theodore Roberts, Wanda Hawley and Mrs Whyte are also in the group

Tells of American Film Abroad

D. P. Howells Delivers Address to Motion-Pictures Advertisers' Assn. on Industry Abroad

AMERICAN Films in Europe," "How Europe Regards the American Motion Picture Trade Papers," formed the text of an instructively interesting informal address delivered at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Friday last at the Cafe Boulevard by David P. Howells, the well-known exporter of films, who has recently returned from an extended visit to France. Germany, Spain, Bohemia and the British Isles.

Owing to the disruption of manufacture during the long period of the war, Mr. Howells said in part: American motion picture product, which on all hands is admitted throughout Europe to be in the lead as regards quality and finish and universal interest, was in great demand immediately following the cessation of hostilities. Now, however, due largely to the low value of the mark, franc and shilling when applied to foreign purchase of films, a resuscitation of home industry is on foot that bids fair to provide domestic films in increasing quantity to the partial exclusion of American product.

In Germany, Mr. Howells informed his hearers, there had been a continuance of film production on a limited scale throughout the course of the war, and several de luxe motion picture theatres that could compare with even the best in America have been constructed in Berlin and Vienna during that period.

Interrogated as to current newspaper reports that food and personal comforts were not so limited throughout Europe as reported, Mr. Howells painted a gloomy picture of the condition of the masses of the people, particularly in Germany, and said that the outlook for the coming winter was full of menace.

Speaking of a comparison between American Motion Picture Trade Journals and Magazines, and those published in Europe, Mr. Howells remarked that everywhere abroad the American publications were regarded with envious astonishment — their advertising pages and general "get-up" in particular receiving universal admiration.

At the conclusion of his address, which was listened to with deep interest, the speaker invited specific questions that might occur to any of the advertisers, and advantage of the offer was taken by a number of the members. A cordial vote of thanks to the guest of the day was passed with acclaim.

More Picture News in Dailies

The Buffalo Express and Buffalo Commercial Give More Space to Film Items, Heeding Demand

THE Buffalo Express, a morning paper, is now devoting an entire page every day to drama, and in its new policy the paper is said to have the backing of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association. One inch of reading matter for every inch of advertising is reported to be the new rule. Screen news is equally as prominent, if not more so as the legitimate stage matter. It is something unusual to see a four-line head on a moving picture theatre review, but that is what is being done on the Strand, Shea's Hippodrome and Family notices on this new page.

Under the new order of things theatres are getting notices every day and the editor is also devoting space to producer items. For instance, last week, a notice appeared about the forthcoming private screening to be given of "Soldiers of Fortune," by Henry E. Wilkinson, local Realart manager. The Express is on the right track, and it is hoped that the managers will continue to give their aid on the new page and keep up the advertising end.

Recently, the Buffalo Commercial also started a two-column section under the caption "At the Movies," which again is a start in the right direction. These Buffalo newspapers are realizing the fact that the motion picture has become the national pastime and that readers are demanding news about the activities in the industry just the same as they do about the baseball and football games. The best proof of the interest of the public is to be seen in the jammed theatres every night in this city. It is not only mother's pastime or sister's pastime, but the whole family is jumping into the film arena with both feet.

Many Theatre Rumors Rife in Springfield

The air is choked with rumors these days about new theatres for Springfield. The Friedman deal for the Harris Hickox and Edgar Barnes property at Fifth and Capitol avenues seems to have fallen through, but there are at least three new propositions in the wind.

The most persistent of these rumors and the one which seems to have the best foundation is that of a new combination vaudeville and picture house to be known as the Orpheum. Two prominent film men are connected with the deal, and at least one other person is in on the project. The new house will be located downtown, that is, in close proximity to the public square, and will seat about 2,000.

Rumor number two, and one that looks to be genuine, is that which says Finn and Heiman, owners and operators of many vaudeville theatres, have selected a site in Sixth street, upon which they will build a magnificent new playhouse. Just whether it will be another vaudeville house, or a combination vaudeville and picture theatre cannot be learned.

Tom North Resigns From Fox

Tom North who has been special sales manager for Fox Film Corporation, has resigned his position to enter into business for himself. His resignation is effective November 22d. He recently purchased the Princess in Sioux City, one of the largest motion picture houses in Iowa, and has placed them both under the management of H. M. Thomas, who also directs the policies of the new Rialto and the Strand theatres in Omaha for Mr. Blank. The policy of running all First National productions, which prevails at all the Blank theatres, will be instituted at the two newly acquired ones.

Mayer M. C. Garber announces his plans for building a $100,000 theatre on East Broadway at Enid, Oklahoma. The building is to be started next spring, and will be rushed to completion as rapidly as possible. It will be one of the handsomest moving picture theatres in the southwest.

Nashville House Raises Rates

Mgr. Sudekum Says Increase is to Cover Advanced Cost of Showing Films of High-Grade Standard

THE Knickerbocker Theatre of Nashville, under the management of Harry Sudekum, has put into permanent effect an increased admission price, which is thirty cents for all seats at matinees and fifty cents at evening performances. These prices are said to beat the scale of any motion picture house in this territory, and equal the admissions which have been asked in the past only for special feature attractions.

The experiment by Mr. Sudekum, in establishing the higher scale, has been watched, it is said, with great interest by other exhibitors in this territory, for many of them are facing the same condition which caused Mr. Sudekum to make the change. This condition is the inability to pay the increased cost of properly staging feature pictures, and other increased expenses, on the scale of prices which had been charged.

In arranging the new scale Mr. Sudekum did not have greater profits in mind, but arranged for the outlay of the entire proceeds of the increase, based upon the Knickerbocker average attendance. The improvements consisted chiefly in an enlarged house staff and a bigger orchestra, as well as a more generous use of advertising space.

He put the new policy into effect at the beginning of a week's run of Anita Stewart in "The Kingdom of Her Dreams." Large newspaper space was used in advertising the First National attraction, but no other unusual exploitation was employed, it is claimed. The audience on the opening night is reported to have been a little larger than those of the usual opening nights, but before the week was over the theatre was doing capacity business.

Manager Sudekum in discussing the new plan of operation for the Knickerbocker, said: "By charging thirty cents for matinees and fifty cents for night performances the manager is assured of a reasonable profit and a sum sufficient to cover the ever-increasing cost of exhibiting photoplays. By this same plan, the audience is assured of getting the high-grade pictures which only higher admissions will permit, and getting them new and in good condition from the exchanges."

Arrest Reveals Big Film Theft

Film Theft Committee Active and $100,000 Worth of Pictures are Soon Recovered

THE largest and perhaps the most daring individual theft of films in the history of the business, together with the quickest arrest of the alleged thieves and recovery of the loot, is announced by the Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. From $75,000 to $100,000 is the value placed on the recovered reels. Within 12 hours of their disappearance they were located and Nat Greenfeldt, charged with stealing them, had been placed under arrest.

These films, all first-run stuff, were over 500 in number and were owned by such companies as the Universal Film Mfg. Co., the Exhibitors Mutual Dist. Corp., Vitagraph, Inc., Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Select Pictures Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Beehive, Magnet, Fox Film Corporation, World Film Corporation, Pioneer Educational Films and Griffith Enterprises. They were taken together with the truck on which they were loaded, from in front of the Goldwyn Exchange, 509 Fifth avenue. The truck belonging to the Prudential Film Delivery Company, was said to have been unguarded at the time.

This case, although it is the largest, is only one of many such since the Film Theft Committee, of which H. Minot Pitman of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is chairman, began months ago on a crusade to break up the gangs of film thieves operating in New York and other large cities. On October 28th Gustav E. Gooes, president of the Film Renewing Company, Inc., whose office and factory is at Palisade, N. J., was arrested at his factory after selling, it is alleged, four Paramount features to a third party for export to Mexico. It is claimed that he offered at the same time many other Famous Players-Lasky and Triangle features for sale.

Gooes who has been doing film renovating work for years for some of the largest motion picture companies, had concealed about his factory, it is said, over 150 reels of Famous Players, Vitagraph and Universal products.

Lesser Opens Up New Executive Offices in Los Angeles

Word has been received from Sol Lesser, now in Los Angeles, to the effect that he has established a permanent executive office in addition to the exchange he already maintains in Los Angeles, with Harry B. Caulfield as its manager.

While in Los Angeles Mr. Lesser closed for the world rights to George Beban's next production, now in the process of completion and at present untitled. The other important deal was his decision to finance producers, as a result of the scarcity of pictures for the State right market.

Picture News From Canada

Appeal for the Removal of Reel Tax; Canadian Exhibitors, Ltd., Secure Distribution of Sunbeam Comics

A STRONG representation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario and delegations of other moving picture leagues in Canada arranged to invade Ottawa, the Canadian capital, on November 20, for the purpose of appealing to Sir Henry Drayton, Federal Minister of Finance, to remove the 15 cents per reel per day tax which is imposed by the Canadian government as a special excise. The reel tax has long been a thorn in the side of Canadian exhnbitors, and the owners of the small rural houses have been the strongest objectors because they have been charged exactly the same as the great theatres in the large cities.

The Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, which is the distributing company controlled by many exhibitor-members of the association of Ontario, has purchased the distribution rights for Sunbeam Comedies, and the Exhibitors' company also recently purchased no less than seventeen British film productions for release from the two offices of the exchange at Toronto and Montreal. The first of the numerous British subjects, "Romany Lass," a five-reel feature, is already being released from the two Canadian cities. The Exhibitors' Association has also been showing signs of progress by arranging to open a third exchange office in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Thomas Scott, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, recently issued his souvenir album for the current season. This contains much information about members of the association, their theatres and their co-operative exchange. This is the second souvenir book that he has published since becoming secretary of the healthy organization.

Thirty-five members of the Ontario association attended the regular meeting for November at the association's headquarters, 143 Yonge street, Toronto, when a number of trade matters were discussed. Complaint was made that the Y. M. C. A. had been operating a moving picture theatre at Chapleau, Ontario, in direct competition with local exhibitors who pay heavy taxes for the privilege. The matter was turned over to the Grievance Committee with instructions to report details to the Ontario authorities and to the exchanges which have been supplying service to the Y. M. C. A.

Ban Forced Industrial Bookings

Prominent Men Among Theatre Owners Banded to Assert Right to Take Only Such Films as Wished

THEATRE owners have linked themselves together to assert their right to place only such educational and industrial films on the screen as they believe the public will accept.

A meeting was held in Cleveland recently in which several state and city exhibitors' organizations were present. At that meeting it was decided to formulate plans whereby the screen of the theatre would be protected against its common abuse by the display of objectionable advertising films and advertising inserts. It was also decided to enlist the aid of other city and state exhibitors' organizations. Mr. Fred J. Herrington was selected to make a trip to several states to secure the endorsement of the state and city organizations of several important states.

Mr. Herrington accomplished his mission in a very short time over a limited territory and is now in the field organizing other states, and the general plan of the committee formed at Cleveland has been adopted by the following state and city organizations: New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Michigan, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Illinois.

The details of the plan are being perfected and an announcement will be made shortly by the committee composed of the following: Sydney S. Cohen, Sam. I. Berman, Chas. O'Reilly, New York; F. J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; Sam Bullock, W. J. Slimm, H. H. Lustig, Ohio; King Perry, Peter J. Jeup, Michigan.

The committee has sent out a general announcement to exhibitors throughout the country asking them to refrain from signing any contract which will permit industrial films, advertising films, or advertising inserts being shown upon their screens.

Another Ziegfeld Film Recruit

The personnels of the two Ziegfeld organizations — The Follies and The Frolic — have already furnished considerable talent to the motion-picture industry in the way of screen beauties. Kay Laurell, Ruby de Remer, Marth Mansfield, Maes Murray, Ann Pennington, and Marion Davies are some of the Ziegfeld girls seen now on the screen. The latest beauty to come from the same source is Diana Allen, who is playing the leading feminine role in the "Red Virgin", now being produced by B. A. Rolfe.

Archer McMackin to Direct Gale Henry for Model Comedy Co.

Bruno J. Becker, general manager of the Model Comedy Company, announces the engagement of Archer McMackin, who will hereafter direct comedies in which Gale Henry is featured. It is reported that McMackin handled the megaphone in the past for Bryant Washburn, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Montgomery and Rock, the American "beauty" comedies and Essanay. Chicago Jottings

Maurice Hellman of the Universal, Chicago office, is making an extended trip through central Illinois, personally calling on editors of daily and weekly papers in an affort to secure closer co-operation between the Chicago Exchange and the Fourth Estate. Willis, who has resumed active management of Willis & Eckels & Mack, of which firm Mr. Willis is senior member. Mr. Smith formerly was identified with the Triangle office as sales manager.

F. O. Nielsen, formerly general manager of the Micky Film Corporation, has gone into business for himself as a film distributor, opened offices at 1002 Century Bldg., 202 S. State St., Chicago, Illinois. His exchange will be known as the F. L. Nielsen Feature Films, the same name he used when he made a big success with the "Spoilers" sometime ago. His initial release will be A. A. Bronson's "Someone Must Pay," a feature with an all star cast, including Gale Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders and Hugh Thompson. This feature, for which Mr. Nielsen secured the rights to six states. will have its first Chicago showing at the Rose Theatre, on November 23rd.

R. C. Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company, has completed arrangements whereby his Bee Hive Film Exchanges in Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis, will distribute the first Essanay features in which Charlie Chaplin was starred, namely "The Champion," "Work," "Jitney Elopement," and "By the Sea."

Mr. Cropper has also closed negotiations with Mr. Victor Kramer, of the Victor Kramer Feature Film Company, whereby his exchanges will distribute a series of ten features to be made by the Kramer Company. These features will go into the regular Bee Hive Feature program of two features a month. These will be in addition to the Bee Hive Special Features which will be released from time to time.

WHY THE "NEWS" COVERS THE FIELD

You, as an advertiser of pictures, would prefer one trade paper.

Or two at the most.

You could thereby save money and yet put forth the full force of your advertising effort.

But you are afraid that one paper — or two even — do not cover your trade field.

So you use three, or four,— or six.

You shoot with a shot gun to make sure of your target.

You are wrong — wrong in your premises.

You CAN cover your field with one paper.

We make emphatic this statement because the truth is merely a matter of logic and figures.

You proceed on the assumption that there are 17,000, or even 20 odd thousand theatres to be reached.

That is the fallacy at the bottom of the present trade paper situation.

There are Not 17,000 picture theatres in this country.

Such lists exist. But they are wrong. We have used them and we know.

Lists are impossible to check because the postmaster will not return unclaimed mail. Lists grow but don't decrease.

There are not even 15,000 theatres.

There are not, in our opinion and experience, even 11,000 theatres which are selling prospects for you.

Ask your sales manager.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, however, we approximate the picture houses — all theatres showing pictures at all — at 15,000.

You can immediately eliminate at least two to three thousand of these theatres as non-prospects.

Certainly they are non-prospects for a trade paper, for any trade paper. WE KNOW.

They consist of small, very small, country theatres in remote districts running intermittently at best and one or two nights a week; of small city houses, whose proprietors do not read English; of houses so near city exchanges that the managers do not read trade papers if subscriptions are secured.

So we are down now to 12,000 to 13,000 theatres. There are some sales managers of long experience who say there are not more than 12,000 anyway.

But there's a second important factor.

Theatres exist largely under chain ownership today.

And where one man owns two or six theatres in one town he takes one paper — that's all.

We have just finished a test of chain theatre ownership. It shows 2,880 theatres owned by 801 men or companies. This is not complete: but here alone you can eliminate over 2,000 theatres (2,880 minus 801) as non-subscribers to trade papers.

Which now brings us down to 10,000 to 11,000 theatres.

And right here is your limit of exhibitor circulation. It is even less. No trade paper has ever had, nor ever will have, over 9,000 exhibitor subscriptions.

As a matter of fact it is a waste — to the advertiser, to the publisher, to reach more.

Just bear in mind the practical thought that circulation getting is not so difficult. Circulation READING is the only thing that counts.

The difficult thing is to put your paper first among all the others in the exhibitor's estimation.

So we have a field of say not over 9,000 exhibitor readers, and several papers approaching that circulation. The "News" reaches constantly, on a paid basis, from 8,000 to 8,500 exhibitors.

What is the answer?

Simply that several papers duplicate each other. The weaker papers, too, reach the very same exhibitors.

Not 10 per cent of the exhibitors of the country take only one paper.

So instead of several papers dividing up 17,000 theatres between them, half that number is reached at least 90 per cent by several papers.

The proper, logical way is just what invariably happens in other trade fields and will certainly happen in this — namely the selection of the best paper for the main punch in your advertising campaign.

Put your supplementary advertising in one other or two.

Several papers will, of course, claim to be best.

Don't take their say-so. Make your own test. It will cost you a few hundred dollars and you will save thousands.

Just find out which paper the exhibitor holds highest — in service, independence, readability, influence.

That't the one paper.

The exhibitor will appreciate your efforts. He is against duplication. He won't read the same announcement twice, and he furthermore feels that has to share in the needless expense.

Rotation of the same or different advertising between, say, three mediums does not solve the problem. If one paper is, say, 90% strong, another 70%, and another 50%, then, naturally, your advertising has a 90% pull one week, 70% another, and 50% another.

There's but one logical answer: The use of the main medium for your main advertising campaign. And —

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

Just one year ago today the writer "took a chance" in the picture game by opening the Regent Theater. Now in one year we have three shows -- and we feel that we owe some of our success to you.

We want to thank you for the many ideas, suggestions, keys to bookings, and so on that we have been able to get from your columns. We also want to warn any exhibitor not to start in this game without the aid of a trade paper -- especially Motion Picture News.

We never felt that we amounted to much until Tom Mix told us that we were the only live exhibitors in the state.

You can rest assured that as long as we are in the game we will not be without your valuable assistance. This is entirely unsolicited as we feel that we owe you something.

Wishing you all the prosperity that you deserve, we are,

Yours very truly,

Same Story--Forced to Raise Prices

Interesting Letter on Admissions by

Thomas D. Soriero

One of the best known exhibitors in the country is Thomas D. Soriero, managing director of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., and formerly manager of the Park Theatre, Boston.

In his contribution to our series of articles on admissions, Mr. Soriero presents some interesting information on this subject. He also asks some questions of the producers which if answered would no doubt prove of quite as much interest to you showmen as will the part of this story which pertains strictly to admissions. Read what the Strand showman has to say.

ANSWERING your letter of September 12th, I will only be too glad to give you whatever information in connection with my theatre that will aid you in compiling your data.

At the Strand Theatre in this city prices prevailing before Labor Day were: For the matinees, 10 and 15 cents; and for the evening, 20, 15 and 25 cents. Admission prices at this theatre are now: Afternoon, 10, 15 and 25 cents; and for the evening, 15, 20, 30 and 35 cents. You will observe that in all instances this is only an addition of 5 cents to the previous cost of admission. This new rate was inaugurated on Labor Day.

It was tentatively arranged by the managers of the various houses that a general and minimum increase was to become operative on Labor Day. For some reason they all backed down with the exception of me.

Of course there was no breach of faith because they did not go through with it, but now we have the satisfaction of realizing that they have apparently realized their mistake and are now going to make increases in admission for economical reasons which, in other words, means that they have been forced to in order to get an adequate profit on their houses.

I warned my patrons that the increased cost of house operation and cost of film rental would necessitate an increase in the autumn, and when the five cent increase came they expected it and there was no loss of business as a result. I think this answers another of your questions. It is well known that the film business is not immune from the general increase in the cost of living, so the natural outcome should mean an increase in the cost of admissions, etc. In other words, if the manufacturer raises its film prices and it costs more in the nature of salaries for house operation, there should be an increase in the price of theatre admissions to neutralize this. This is all obvious and truly is a "vicious cycle" as attacked by President Wilson, but what can we do about it? So I will say that it is absolutely necessary to raise prices on admissions slightly in order to obtain a fair profit.

However, believe me when I say that I have not raised my prices more than is necessary to make a profit as fair as in the pre-war days.

Do I expect to pay more for films than I have? I am already paying more than I ever have before, but I hope that a halt will soon be called for the universal betterment of the industry. Here your "vicious cycle" enters again. If he (the manufacturer) charges us more for films, then there remains nothing more for us to do than to "pass the buck" and increase our admission charges to the theatre-going public. It is my belief that the manufacturers are getting about all they can now from the exhibitors and still permit the latter to make a decent profit. I don't mean that they are profiteering or anything of that sort, but what I would like to emphasize is that this perpetual increase of everything must stop somewhere, and the only way in which to prevent a flood is by damming the stream at its source. Therefore, why cannot the producers begin with a sort of economical program? I notice that some manufacturing organizations have tentatively begun this policy with fewer and better pictures.

If the manufacturer tries his best to reduce the cost of his product, it will react all along the line. It is his duty to start the ball rolling, for he is in a position to achieve something of lasting benefit.

Although the moving picture industry has been touched by labor unrest and the general upward trend in costs, it is so solidly built and its workers are so universally well paid that I don't fear any more so-called "industrial strife."

I have been using lobby displays in Lowell, and this feature has proved an attractive novelty for the theatre. This week, in view of the fashion show coming next week, my display was several wax mannequins attired in the lastest fashion hits, carefully and skillfully draped with velvet, etc. Each week there is some feature in the lobby that the public has become accustomed to look for. My policy here has been wholly open booking and I am giving my patrons the best pictures obtainable without regard to cost.

Very truly yours,
Thos. D. Soriero,
General Manager, Strand Theatre.

Uses Mailing List to Good Advantage

MANAGER William Vance of the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, used his mailing list very effectively the week of Sept. 21 when he played Constance Talmadge in her first First National attraction "A Temperamental Wife." Mr. Vance obtained from a local post card publishing firm 5,000 colored souvenir cards and had his ushers and several especially employed girls write the following, in ink, and adresses upon them: "Dear M:—Have just seen Constance Talmadge's latest picture at the New Lyric and it reminder me that I owed you a call. Will see you Thursday. Yours L."

The cards were then stamped and mailed out and judging from the way box office receipts soared the last three days of the week the novel stunt proved more than a good investment.

Your Idea and Ours

WITH the exception of the catch lines used in this three-column, ten-inch display on "The Perfect Lover," we would say that the Strand has adopted the right angle in advertising this picture and this star.

We wouldn't have used "Here's a new star." Rather would we have started off with a line which would have inferred that

Mr. O'Brien had been elevated to stardom by popular demand. Say, "Your favorite leading man elevated to stardom." Of course the selling talk used in this display does carry out this idea, but the catch line sort of looks as if an unknown player was being exploited. In the use of the face cut of the star the Strand is absolutely correct. This star has a considerable following. They like him and the sort of parts he plays. This is a direct appeal to these fans. Featuring the star's name above the title is also correct, the same angle being involved. Like all Strand ads this one is to be commended for its white space. Strand ads always stand out on the page.

Happy are those who do not want the things they can not have.—Trotty Veck.

WITH the "dog tracks," the house name cut and the star's coat, all but the fur part, printed in red, this display of McCormick's for "Back To God's Country" riveted the attention of the reader to the display and demanded that he read every word about the production which has been couched in sentences most liable to further incite the curiosity of even one who happened to glance at the page of the newspaper in which the ad appeared.

Mr. McCormick has done something in this ad which he doesn't often do and that is list the cast. But there is a reason for this, as he says in his caption over it:

It is this fact that makes the use of valuable space for this purpose worth while. We have seen several of these "dog track" ads used, the idea came from the press book but this is the first time that the novelty really registers for something more than good, and the reason therefor is the colored ink used. The display in its original certainly was a startling bit of work. In size this was six columns wide and a half page in depth.

A bird in a bush is worth two in your pet fig tree.

WE are always hunting for displays which are different than those previously shown in these columns and have found this one on "Broken Blossoms" the work of Louis K. Sidney of St. Louis, who is managing director for the six houses scheduled for showing of the Griffith picture, as stated in the display. This display we thought to be very attractive, especially in the scene border used which is suggestive of the Chinese atmosphere of the feature.

However, having to take up so much space with the theatre name lines rather spoils the appearance of the lower part of the ad. This of course was unavoidable with the six houses to list as showing the picture. This really can be called exceptional advertising, quite worthy of being copied. In size this was three columns by ten inches.

There is one thing about baseball players—they never go out on a strike. It takes three.

THERE isn't much use of commenting on a McCormick ad. for it is in this end of the game that the Indianapolis showman has his town house and country estate. The obvious thing to do is to have the cut made, say here it is and tell you to study it it and pattern yourself accordingly.

attention to in this display on "A Temperamental Wife." Note the style of the selling talk used, high class "kidding" stuff suggestive of the fact that the picture is a comedy. Now, McCormick could have conveyed the same thoughts in sentences framed in perfectly orthodox English but would the result been as effective? We are sure it would not. Here is a display that is worthy of being read for the originality of its construction. It is typical of what one has grown to expect from an Anita Loos film, keen satire with a bit of slang thrown in. But we weren't going to comment on this display. In size the ad was three columns by eight inches.

title in letters large enough to command attention and follows this advantage with a good line of selling talk concerning the feature's merits. We always like to reproduce a display of this kind, good stuff, which any exhibitor can get set up at his newspaper plant no matter how small the town. Keep this reproduction for your showing of "Desert Gold." It is excellent.

It is impossible to fear those you love and a hard job to love those you fear.

WE have seen lots of better and more artistic displays on the latest Fairbanks picture, "His Majesty, The American," but when the fact that this was a full page used in a rather small town, Newark, Ohio, and was printed in two colors, we don't believe that anything has showed up which entitles the showman who evolved it to any more credit for the results achieved considering the opportunities presented than this one.

We, of course, aren't sure but figure that in order to get this in two colors the Grand manager had to induce the publisher to run the edition twice probably on a flat-bed press. This was not an easy task if what we remember of small town print shops still holds good.

In the use of the face cuts of the star the Grand has grabbed the best advertising bet with any of Fairbanks' features. They are attracted by his personality and in this page the Grand ad man has certainly played for patronage on this angle by their use in his ad. There is one other observation we might make here. We are willing to bet that a year ago we would have heard the Grand manager growling because he had to advertise somebody's trademark if he used a stock cut and here he has gone out of his way to do that very thing, and he isn't the only one either.

IN selecting this page tie-up that has been accomplished for "Oh Boy" by the Casino of Marshalltown, Iowa, we have only one object in view, that of showing the exhibitors in smaller towns how easy it is to pull a stunt of this kind and to sort of lend encouragement by a practical illustration that you should be getting in occasionally on this form of publicity. What one small town guy can do you should be able to accomplish. We could hardly call this page out of the ordinary. We get any number of newspapers with as good results but seldom see anything from a city the size of Marshalltown. Just accept this as a reminder that here is another case where an exhibitor has secured all the advantages of a page smash for his feature for a small percentage of the cost of the page. If you havn't gone in for co-operative advertising lately it is time to do so.

A man whose thoughts are pleasant pals is never lonely even when alone.

THE selling talk of an ad. should excite curiosity above all other things should it not? It should be the first instalment of a continued story, the final chapters of which it is necessary to go to the theatre to see, in the projecting of the film.

If this is true then we want to call your attention to a fine example of doing that very thing, in this display on "Luck in Pawn" used by Grauman's of Los Angeles.

It begins with an appropriate and interest-exciting catch line, "Forgotten," and then comes the first instalment of what is told in the picture story, with an implied "continued in our next" with the word "then" as the selling talk sentences finish.

In design this is the usual Grauman calibre, hand drawn and nicely tied together. Again we call your attention to the Grauman policy of listing every number on the bill. Sid Grauman says it pays, and take it from us, he knows. This display was three columns by eighteen inches.

LOEWS' Hippodrome of Baltimore has chosen to let the producer's cut advertise "The Last of the Duanes," not even bothering to add some selling talk about the story. In this we think Loews is in error. No doubt Bill Farnum is popular and the name of Zane Gray means quite a lot to fans, but neither are strong enough so a house can afford to let an important item in advertising pass by entirely. We will be frank to admit that we wouldn't know where to put the selling talk if we were going to use this cut as a basis for our display, which leads us to say that we would have passed up the cut. In its place we would rather have taken a cut of Farnum and framed our own display lines, arranging the sentences so that proper selling talk could be utilized and thereby gotten more for our money. This was two columns by nine inches.

HERE is another by the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, which is notable in that it serves to give practically equal billing for the feature and comedy without making the ad look "cut in two."

The center of this display is producer's cut. Across the top has been placed the name cut and reading matter. Below it is the "Salome and Shenandoah" advertising. Ordinarily we would say that bothering to list the cast of a comedy was wasted space, but here is an instance where it may be considered perfectly proper, for the reason that in this comedy a most brilliant array of fun makers have been gathered, all of which means something to audiences.

This ad is within the reach of practically every exhibitor in the business and we take pleasure in recommending it as a model for exploiting this double bill. In size the display was four columns by fifteen inches.

As a sample of good produer's material the cut for this Marguerite Clark picture is to be commended, especially since it is possible to use it for the basis of an ad and have the whole display look right well.

A Hindu proverb—Six evils must be overcome in this world by a man who desires prosperity—Sleep, fear, sloth, anger, idleness and procrastination.

WE don't often say anything but complimentary things about Plaza advertising, but this one, according to our idea, isn't up to the San Diego, Cal., standard, and here is our reason therefor.

To begin with the cut is one of those which are framed in such a way that it is impossible to use anything with it in the way of type matter and have it fit in as a part of the display.

Next the Plaza is using a whole lot of eight point matter stating what New York and other cities said about the stage production and not concerning the picture which is not just a legitimate way to advertise. Next San Diego probably doesn't give a hang what New York thought of the picture or the farce either. It wants to be told enough about what to expect, to whet the curiosity and prepare them for the fun. Then the biggest bet of the whole display, the personal appearance of May Allison and Henry Otto isn't played up as the head line attraction, unless personal appearances have become old stuff in San Diego. No doubt "Fair and Warmer" did business, and no one will be able to tell whether any was lost because something else was not done in the way of exploitation but nevertheless we believe that our criticism as a theory and all comment is bound to be that, is founded on good logic. In size the ad was three columns wide and fifteen inches deep.

Two Prize Winning Stunts Which Proved Good Advertising Mediums

F. P. MAYLAND, owner and manager of the Rex Theatre at Seward. Neb., has been added to the list of prize winners in the Holah Contest for Motion Picture Theatre Exploitation, as the result of two novel ticket-selling "stunts" he used in connection with a recent run of Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs."

The contest was originated by C. E. Holah, general manager of the First National Exchange of Omaha, to encourage exhibitor interest in the exploitation of special feature attractions. As prizes to the winning theatre owners or managers he offered each of them their choice of any First National attraction, rental free. One hundred and fifty-five exhibitors entered the contest, with descriptions of exploitation stunts they have used. From this number the board of judges selected the eight prize winners, one of whom is unknown because he neglected to include his name and address with his entry of descriptive matter.

One of the "stunts" used by Mayland favored strongly of the Tom Sawyer fence painting episode. He let it be known that on a certain day he would treat a number of kiddies to an automobile ride all over the city. When the day arrived the theatre was crowded, and Mayland selected twenty-five, chiefly on account of their long hair. He had the selected kiddies braid their hair in pigtails, and then he garbed them in gingham gowns. The whole twenty-five were put on a motor truck carrying "Daddy Long Legs" streamers and the outfit made a most attractive and effective advertising feature for "the love story of an orphan."

Mayland did not rest there, however. He convinced a number of grocers that a window display of prunes and cider would be an odd and attractive feature, if accompanied by a card announcing the Mary Pickford production.

Log Cabin Lobby and Gold Field Atmosphere Exploits "The Westerners"

JESS DAY, who is managing director of the Des Moines, A. H. Blank house the Palace, recently played a most successful engagement with "The Westerners" much of the success of which he attributes to the use of a lobby display and other out of the ordinary stunts, in his exploitation campaign.

A log cabin which took in the entire front of the lobby was one of Mr. Day's first publicity ideas and he had a force of carpenters at work immediately after the close of the previous week's performance Saturday night until four o'clock Sunday morning, while he stood by with a "still" of the cabin shown in "The Westerners" in an effort to have his lobby setting as skilful a reproduction as his small working staff could make it in the short time allotted for its erection.

Though the big crowds that flocked to the Palace all week stood in amazement when they saw the transformation from the front, they were fairly taken off their feet by what Mr. Day had accomplished on the inside. They stepped on a dirt floor that stretched from the entrance to the hut back to the ticket office, a distance of 75 yards. They saw four well-worn cots, a baby crib, in fact, everything that was seen in the makeshift shacks erected by seekers after gold as visualized by Stewart Edward White in his story of the mad rush for wealth to the Dakota Black Hills. After enjoying to the full the unique lobby show there was nothing left for the crowds to do but take the tip from a post-road sign in the center of the hut reading: GO IN AND STAKE YOUR CLAIM TO CHOICE SEATS FOR THE GREATEST PICTURE BOOM THAT EVER STRUCK DES MOINES.

Manager Day did equally well by "The Westerners" in his newspaper and billboard advertising. The Palace carried half-page ads. two days in advance of the opening though it has always been the Blank policy to bend all advertising efforts to the current attraction. And all during the presentation half-page ads. attracted thousands to the remarkable lobby display and the picture. The Palace also had twenty-four sheets plastered in choice locations.

Manager Day found 18 bookshops eager to co-operate, the Grosset & Dunlap bookstore link-up campaign accounting for that many window displays in Des Moines. Through an arrangement with the local superintendent of schools, Mr. Day enjoyed a highly profitable children's matinee on Saturday morning. The school official and members of his staff were guests of the Palace management at a private showing of "The Westerners" and heartily recommended it to principals and teachers as a splendid picturization of the story known to every book-lover in Iowa. As a result, Manager Day had little trouble in obtaining free advertising in all schools on his children's matinee.

Works With Schools in Exploiting "Evangeline"

IF you know a good thing when you see it, and find that it is as good as it looks, and even better, don't keep it to yourself; tell it to the world and you will be repaid tenfold.

This is the working policy of John Burke, manager of the handsome Parkway Theatre at 2743 West 22d street, Chicago, one of the windy city's most popular motion picture theatres. This — though it is backed up by a personality which has made friends of thousands of his patrons — is what Mr. Burke declares is responsible for the enormous steady patronage he has built up for the house he manages.

Some time ago Mr. Burke saw "Evangeline," recognized its exploitation possibilities as well as its entertainment value and booked it for a three-day run. Then off came the theatreman's coat and he began taking time by the forelock by hastening his advance exploitation campaign against the dates he was to play the feature at the Parkway.

He visited every teacher in his neighborhood. He asked each of them what he or she thought of "Evangeline" for the screen. He asked the same question of the members of the Chicago Board of Education, laying special emphasis on the educational value of the magnificent production. The replies were what he had expected to hear — superlative praise from those who had already seen the picture and a keen desire on the part of those who had not been so fortunate.

Then he made known the object of his inquiry, and explained that he was to show "Evangeline" for three days — impressing upon all the opening date at the Parkway. He urged the teachers to interest their pupils and his request met with a most enthusiastic response. They were only too glad to co-operate with him in the interest of the picture. Also it was a fine opportunity for the teachers to bring home to their classes the truthful reflection of the life, character, types and homes of the unfortunate Acadians. The eighth grade classes in the Chicago schools were studying "Evangeline" at the time and were given an opportunity to see the story picturized while it was still fresh in their minds.

As a result of this personal campaign, Mr. Burke showed "Evangeline" to four thousand seven hundred and ninety-four school children during the three-day run; this in addition to crowds of adults. All were highly pleased.

"Evangeline" made more money for me than any picture I have played this year," said Mr. Burke.

As a means of exploitation for "Evangeline" the public school proposition is the first to consider. Regardless of the box-office value of the production and the approval and praise it has received from the trade paper reviewers and the public press of the country, the Parkway might not have done such exceptional business but for the fact that the manager exhibited, in addition to the picture itself, a keen knowledge of showmanship in carrying the news to his prospective patrons.

In some cases the teachers brought their classes in a body and read the parts of the poem to the pupils.

Unusual Exploitation by a Residential Theatre

ONE of the most frequent "kicks" we hear against the lobby display as an exploitation asset comes from the managers of the suburban houses in the larger cities. They seem to believe that they can not afford such methods of advertising and that the results therefrom are not large enough to justify the expense. This may or may not be true in many cases but at least we have visual record of what one man has accomplished who operates a neighborhood house and that real motion picture exploitation paid him in the following story and cut of what Adolph Powell, owner and manager of the Rex Theatre located at 69th street and Racine ave., Chicago, did when he booked "The Right to Happiness."

Mr. Powell chose this feature to celebrate the Fifth Anniversary of the opening of his theatre, and used live publicity methods with the result that his house was filled every day of the engagement.

Mr. Powell billed the neighborhood liberally with twenty-four and one sheet posters for some days before "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" opened, and had a "musical" auto decorated with big announcements of the feature, touring the district. Autumn foliage, cut outs, posters, photographs and electric signs were used in decorating the front of the theatre and the lobby. The effect was striking and brought the crowds, although the expense was not excessive.

How The Savoy Put Over "The Midnight Man"

LOUIS KERASOTES, manager of a 300 seating capacity theatre in Springfield, Illinois — the Savoy — grew weary of the way in which he and his competitors tried to put over a new serial, which was usually about once a month. The usual formula was to distribute several thousand free tickets, good for one admission when the war tax was paid. It will be seen that this was not a very profitable way of doing business. The idea of the free tickets was to get them in on the first chapter, and trust to luck that they would continue to come until the serial was run out. Of course the theatre was packed on the "free tickets day," but the cash box at the end of the day looked like somebody had raided it before the manager got around to counting up the receipts.

So it was that when "The Midnight Man" was booked Mr. Kerasotes decided that he would break away from the old routine and began thinking of something which would accomplish the desired result.

Publicity and newspaper men were called in and soon plans were being made for the turning loose of a real "midnight man" in staid Springfield. The State Journal, one of the city's enterprising newspapers was consulted and a deal was made whereby the paper agreed to give twenty-five dollars in gold to the person who could detect "the midnight man." The paper devoted big space to the stunt, and before two days were over, the entire city joined in the hunt. Not a word was mentioned in the reading matter about "The Midnight Man" coming to the Savoy, although ads. were run daily to that effect in the amusement columns.

For five days the paper kept telling its readers about "the midnight man," where he had been, where he expected to be, and a resumé of the day's journey every morning. Every kid in town was scurrying around with a copy of the State Journal under his arm, peering into the eyes of every man and trying to locate the mysterious one. When the paper announced that "the midnight man" would mail a letter in the post office between eleven and twelve o'clock, there was a terrific jam in and around the building. Extra police were called out. The man they were after went into the building and came out without being captured. Which gave him a chance to appear again in the afternoon. That afternoon he announced he would be at Jewish Relief Headquarters, between two and four. Another big crowd was on the job, and "the midnight man" was caught by two young women at the same time. The only thing to do under the circumstances was to divide the award, which was agreeable to both women.

Of course all the noise and excitement helped to call attention to "The Midnight Man" picture, which was then being heavily advertised. A big story and a picture of "the midnight man" and his captors appeared in the State Journal on the day the serial opened.

Exploitation Which Cost Little And Brought Big Business

EXPLOITATION that costs little and brings big business — the Utopia of every exhibitor — has been perfected by George H. Fischer, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., as a result of experimenting with the methods through which special feature attractions may be played with the maximum for box-office success.

Mr. Fischer's method is applicable to all exhibitors in a more general way than perhaps any other exploitation novelty which essentially relies on newspapers, the expense of billboard advertising and the expenditure of money for novelty or tie-up purposes.

His system is a direct method of reaching theatregoers by unusual and attractive lobby displays that require neither the building of a special "set" nor the outlay of considerable money for the purchase or rental of fixtures.

"There is a common belief that exhibitors do not appreciate the value of exploitation," said Fischer. "I am inclined to think that this sentiment is without foundation. I have never known an exhibitor yet who failed to readily agree that exploitation was an essential to the proper running of a motion picture theatre. The reason why there is not more exploitation is because the kind which has previously been designed costs too much money. There are times when an exhibitor would like to put over a stunt but he feels that he cannot at the time spare the funds. Thus he does not exploit, and in many cases some one is apt to term him 'behind the times' for his lack of showmanship.

"In deciding upon a plan of exploitation for the Alhambra, my central thought was to map out a system that would serve to arouse the interest of even the most casual theatregoer and at the same time not entail any unnecessary cost. There is a most important angle that the average exhibitor is overlooking when he begins to figure out an exploitation campaign. This is the proposition of reaching people who wouldn't go to a theatre even if you paid them to go.

"In other words, when an exhibitor spends money on newspaper and billboard expoitation, he necessarily meets and reaches some people who are impossible. There is a certain percentage of the people of every city who don't go to picture shows for some reason. Perhaps it is because they can't afford it; maybe for some other cause. Box-office records will show that they don't go. Then why should an exhibitor waste money trying to reach these people when, by spending less money he can attract the attention of dyed-in-the-wool theatregoers by paying attention to his lobby?"

Thus Mr. Fischer explains how he hit upon the plan of specializing on lobby displays for his exploitation of forthcoming special feature attractions. For instance, in adopting advance exploitation for "Back To God's Country" he hit up the tracks of a dog and bear. A dog plays the title role of the story and the theme of the picture is centered about the relationship of animal to man. Therefore Mr. Fischer decided that a dog track and bear track winding about his larger foyer would be a decided hit. And it was!

An attractive window display arranged by Manager Walter of the Amusu theatre, Elmira, N. Y., as a publicity aid to his showing of "World and Its Woman"

Walter's Advertising Campaign Raises Prices Without A Murmur

THE Amusu Theatre of Elmira, N. Y., is one of the houses which has gone along its exhibiting way and rather discountenanced the spectacular and unusual in exploitation. Mr. Walter, the Amusu manager, has been on the job daily for the ten years of the theatre's history, giving his patrons good programs at popular prices — ten cents top — until recently and made money. He put out his paper and photographs, used the newspapers to some extent and got by. Mr. Walter argued that what people wanted was good pictures for the least possible amount of money, and he could prove to you that he was right by citing his experience in the exhibiting field. For instance, when the Artcraft program was first inaugurated he booked the Mary Pickford subjects, gave them extensive advertising, advanced his admissions, necessary since he was paying big rentals for those days and waited for results, which were that Elmira couldn't see even "Little Mary" at twenty-five cents admission.

But times change and Mr. Walter is too good a showman to refuse to change them. At last he has raised prices for special productions and begun to give his attractions special advertising and this time he is successful, which only shows how this business changes, for it is less than five years ago that such a policy with America's sweetheart to start it off didn't prove up as it should.

The accompanying cut shows you one of Mr. Walter's tie-ups on this picture, a display in the window of the Elmira Arms Company's store, one of the city's leading music houses. Other similar advertising ideas were put into practice and the result was that the same Elmira which a few years ago absolutely refused to pay twenty-five cents to see Mary Pickford in "Pride of the Clan," etc., walked up to the Amusu with their two bits for "The World and Its Woman" and thought nothing of it. Mr. Walter in his first attempt to increase prices was just a bit ahead of the times. He is now in the procession of live-wire managers who are realizing the value of interest inciting exploitation ideas and cashing in. There is many an "old timer" like Mr. Walter who was "stung" in the old days when he tried too boost admissions above ten cents and who is still "gun shy."

We just want to remind you that since times have changed in Elmira they have without doubt changed in your town, and if you haven't as yet begun to do something extra to attract business for the extra good picture you are missing some extra profits and running a chance of getting to be a back number, which you must remember is fatal in the show game.

One of Walter's recent attractions which he has played to big business at advanced prices is "The World and Its Woman."

He advanced the prices to twenty and twenty-five cents and launched an energetic exploitation campaign calculated to convince the public that the increased admission charge was justified.

Instead of running conventional newspaper advertising announcements, he increased his space and prepared special copy that carried a "punch." Then manager Walter secured tie-ups with the leading merchants, along the line of "Fine Furniture for The World and Its Woman," or "Exclusive Millinery for The World and Its Woman," or "Quality Groceries for The World and Its Woman." An artist was engaged to paint really attractive signs for these tie-ups and they were given a prominent place in the shop windows before and during the presentation of the picture.

A Good Story of a Good Exploitation Stunt

EIGHT hundred people living at Ada, Minn., and vicinity imagined all sorts of things the other day when they opened their morning mail.

Visions of a bolshevik poison plot flashed through the minds of some of the more faint-hearted. Others believed that possibly the government was unloading some of its surplus food stores in order to relieve the present high cost of living situation. Some returned war veterans turned up their noses when they saw what their mail contained; and thought that at last it had come — a prune strike in the army! — and that as a last resort and the only means of getting rid of its prunes, the quartermaster corps was dumping them on the public.

Each of these 800 souls received a prune. It was a real honest-to-goodness non-poisoned and, as nearly as can be ascertained, non-military prune, and it came through the mails in a neat little paper bag, the top of which was closed by a paper clip.

A little closer inspection of the bag dispelled all fears of poisoned prunes, bolshevik plots, H. C. of L. measures and army strikes. In its stead hope mounted in the hearts of some who, at first glance of a check for $40,000, thought they had received a legacy from some distant and forgotten relative, but a careful reading of the check on both sides brought them back to normal.

But what in Sam Hill did it all mean? That was the thought that was uppermost in the minds of those who had carefully examined the prune and the check. The paper bag contained nothing else. On one side of the bag was of course the name and address of the recipient.

On the back of each bag was the printed information that Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" would be the attraction at the New Orpheum in Ada for two days and that the enclosed morsel of food was the cause of an orphan strike in one of the big scenes in the photoplay.

The "check" was a facsimile of the one paid by Mary Pickford to Klaw and Erlanger for the story, "Daddy Long Legs."

It was a master stroke of clever advertising engineered by C. E. Wentsel, owner of the New Orpheum, and it caused much amusement and talk in the town and country. Of course, all of the patrons of the New Orpheum did not get a prune, but all nevertheless heard about the gifts to their neighbors. There was a lot of good-natured "kidding" between those who did not get a prune and those who did.

"Daddy Long Legs" opened to the greatest business ever handled by the Ada picture house. Many were turned away, not only on the first day but on the second as well. Mr. Wentsel realized that he should have booked the picture for more than a two-day run, and, not wanting to pass up such an extraordinary opportunity, he wired the Minneapolis First National Exchange, and obtained permission to hold "Daddy Long Legs" over for two extra days.

Shea's Hippodrome Joins Week Run Houses

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" received an unusually attractive presentation at Shea's Hippodrome by Harold B. Franklin, managing director. As a prelude to the actual showing of this Griffith production, a symbolical stage setting was unveiled, consisting of a large corsage of flowers with one large broken blossom. On each side of the flowers were two large candles, representing Time. In front a large bowl was placed from which the smoke of incense arose before the flowers, giving the Oriental atmosphere. On each side of the setting hung two large black and yellow Chinese banners with Mongolian symbols upon them. No one has been able to figure out just what was written on these banners, but no one seemed to take offense. As a musical setting for the stage picture the symphony orchestra played an overture composed of selections from the special Griffith accompaniment for the picture. As the selection neared its end the curtains of the two small openings at the side of the center setting were drawn aside and revealed Chinese garden scenes. The whole was illuminated from the rear by a strikingly beautiful light blue hue. During the screening of the picture this blue color was thrown on all the subtitles, the blue lights at the front of the stage being lighted simultaneously. The effect was most pleasing.

In the lobby Mr. Franklin had suspended blossoms over all the mahogany frames together with Chinese lanterns and umbrellas, which also aided greatly in giving the desired "Land of the Rising Sun" atmosphere. Artificial blossoms were spread over the marque in front of the house with red lights intertwined.

The advertising campaign was, as usual, Franklinesque. The large ad used on Sunday was four columns, three inches, hand drawn, with a black and white pen drawn scene from the play and as a departure a small selling talk in the upper right hand corner. The supplementary features were advertised under this talk and a slight divertisement on the orchestra silhouette introduced on the left hand side of the ad.

"Broken Blossoms," was a great success in Buffalo and departing from the usual policy of two changes a week, Mr. Franklin booked the picture for the week and reported excellent business right through the seven days. The entire Griffith score was used by the orchestra as a musical setting.

Plays up Author as "Michigan's Own"

WHEN "The Westerners" played the Majestic and Orpheum theatres in Detroit, both Charles H Miles houses, Mr. Miles paid particular attention to advertising Stewart Edward White, the author of the novel, as being "Michigan's Own Author." It is believed that this feature of the exploitation campaign was one of the best ideas employed for putting over the feature.

The Jefferson of Hamilton Booms "The Miracle Man"

WITH a theatre named the Jefferson in a town called Hamilton, one might expect a story with its period, a century old, but this is not the case.

The theatre we mention is located at Hamilton, Ohio. The managers of this house are Messrs. Broomhall and Schwalm. They are living and working in the year 1919 and not in the palmy days of Hamilton and Jefferson, as the following story of their exploitation for "The Miracle Man" will prove.

Broomhall and Schwalm booked "The Miracle Man" as soon as they could get dates, and as soon as they were all set they started letting Hamilton know about what was coming to the Jefferson.

Then one day the lobby of the Jefferson blossomed out with the clever blue and yellow "sniper" teaser strips. "The Miracle Man is Coming." For three weeks before the actual date of the showing these "snipers" formed a neat border along the lobby of the theatre. And everybody commented on them.

Then ten days before the date of showing hundreds of these teasers were "sniped" all over town. They are of such a size — about 9 inches by 36 inches — that the billposter got them into many places where a larger sniper would not have fitted or attracted so much attention.

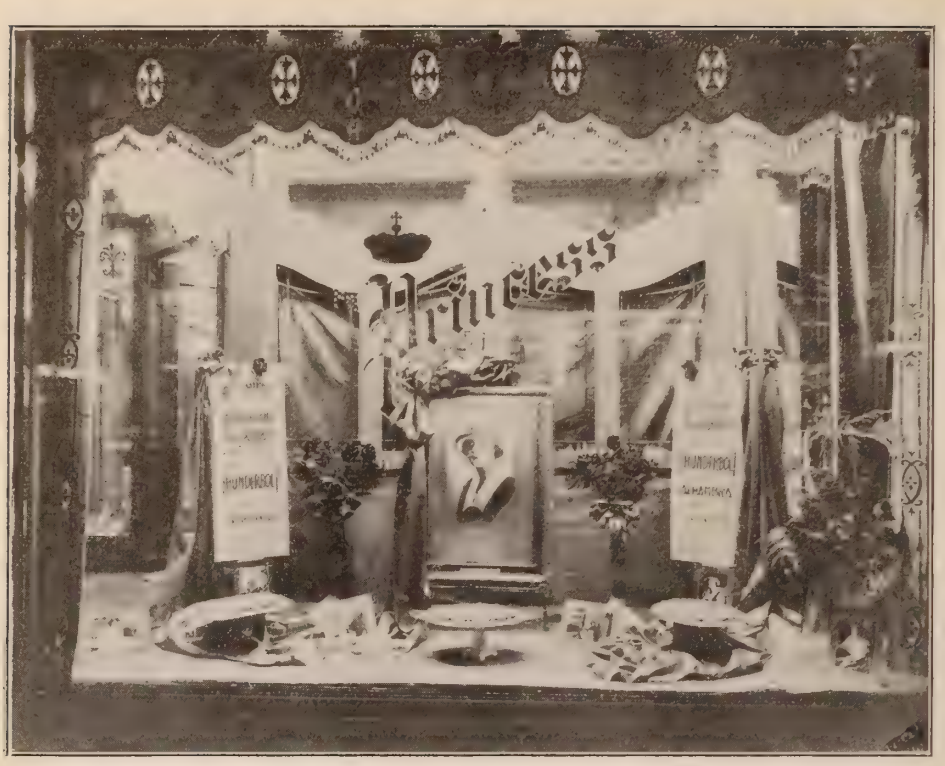
Then Managers Broomhall and Schwalm began a newspaper campaign the like of which Hamilton had never seen before. "The Miracle Man Is Coming," read the teaser ads for several days, growing in size. Then came the smashing quarter and half-page announces with the striking illustrations from the press book furnished by the exchange.

Supplementing this the billboards began to cry forth "The Miracle Man" with the colorful, dashing 24's, 6's and 3's. Thousands of heralds — clever arrangements showing a supposed bank check returned by the reformed crooks — were distributed. Window cards were placed all over the town. A twenty foot banner was stretched across the main street. Smaller banners were attached to trucks.

A special newspaper stunt was to get up a page of mercantile advertisements announcing that a personal representative of "The Miracle Man" would be in those stores at certain hours and give free tickets to the Jefferson to those who correctly addressed him. The stunt aroused great attention and much publicity in the Hamilton Journal.

Another stunt was the giving of a special, private advance showing on the Saturday morning preceding the opening. Clergymen, the mayor and other city officials, judges, school officials, etc., were invited and came with a vim. More newspaper publicity and much word-of-mouth advertising. The Rev. Charles Matthew Brown, president of the Hamilton Ministerial Alliance and president of the Hamilton Rotary Club, co-operated in inviting the clergy, sending out a written statement of endorsement urging all to attend.

A novel stunt that had all Hamilton guessing was that framed by manager Schwalm. He had three of the girl employees in his office begin calling up everybody in Hamilton who had a telephone — some 2,000 families and firms. "Are you going to see the Miracle Man at the Jefferson?" the girls asked and then hung up the receiver. The calls were varied by having one of the men in the office put the question over the wire — thus it appeared that many persons were making the calls.



Confectionery store window display which enabled George Fischer of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., to put over "The Thunderbolt."

Getting Co-operation From Your Neighbor

AN excellent opportunity for exhibitors whose theatres adjoin novelty, stores, confectioneries or enterprises of like nature, for remunerative exploitation has been brought to the list of showmen's aids by Edward J. Weisfeldt, director of Exploitation for the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Weisfeldt's plan is virtually the doubling of the lobby display of a theatre through the simple matter of showing the owner of the next-door-store that a mutually profitable plan may be worked out.

The Alhambra Theatre, as in the case of many others, adjoins a confectionery store. Display windows face the street on two sides of this store, and the intersection is the busiest and most popularly traveled corner in Milwaukee.

"It was not a proposition of cold-bloodedly going to the owner of the confectionery and asking him to let us use his windows," said Weisfeldt. "Such a thing would take a man with more gall than I have. I went to him with the proposition that we would do our 'darndest' to get each of our patrons to patronize his ice-cream parlor if he would make it a fifty-fifty proposition and give us a plug on the picture by the use of the window. I told him the more people his pretty windows induced to see Katherine MacDonald in 'The Thunderbolt,' the more people he would reach in urging them to try his fine 'American Beauty Special.'

"It was difficult at first to arrange for the mixing of another drink. It seemed that this fellow had already devised every combination known to those who ply the gentle art of soda-jerking and he couldn't think of another drink.

"Seeing how much in earnest we were, he took down all advertising matter for other mixtures of his and specialized on his one big drink, 'The American Beauty Special.' It is needless to say that he sold many a drink. It is now a permanent product at this confectionery and dedicated to Katherine MacDonald, the American Beauty."

In addition to making a special drink and dedicating it to Miss MacDonald, the proprietor arranged a remarkably attractively window display, characterized by the prominence with which Katherine MacDonald's portrait was displayed and the two written announcements that Miss MacDonald would appear in "The Thunderbolt" at a given date.

Rather than have the candy display detract from the idea of the window, the owner was content to fill the window with but three trays of chocolate caramels. He arranged the color scheme so that it reflected the thought of the color of the American Beauty Rose.

An announcement calling attention to the splendid delicacies ready-to-be-served in the confectionery was placed in the Alhambra lobby and a slide announcement called attention to the fact that a special drink, "The American Beauty Special," had been conceived and invented by the soda-water-store proprietors in honor of the "most beautiful woman in the world." The co-operative system worked out with splendid results for both concerns.

You can always guess what a woman's hand bag contains.

"One more lock, one less watch dog."

Little drops of water, we used to think, were simply made for chasers and now they're the whole blamed drink.

"Bearcat" Given Unusual Exploitation by Shafer

WALTER D. SHAFER who recently assumed the management of the William Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis has given "When Bearcat Went Dry" an exploitation campaign that will stand as a model for many a day.

When Shafer attended a private screening of this production several weeks ago he realized that it could be made a box office success if it was properly exploited. The advertising possibilities based on the title of the production appealed to Shafer and he immediately booked the picture for a solid week.

That his judgment was sound is amply demonstrated by the fact that the Liberty Theatre, catering to the best people in the city of St. Louis and having a seating capacity of more than 1,700, was compelled to hang out the S.R.O. sign for every performance.

But how Shafer succeeded in attracting so many persons to his theatre is herewith told.

The first thing that he did was to buy 10,000 circular stickers on which was printed "When Bearcat Went Dry." Then he employed a small army of school boys, who, after school hours, pasted these stickers upon every conceivable object in the city of St. Louis.

Street cars, ash wagons, automobiles—from the lowly jitney to the aristocratic and liveried limousines, billboards, department store windows, office buildings and even the vinegar cruets in a cafeteria conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association all bore a part in the advertising of this picture.

One of Shafer's assistants entered the Y. W. C. A. cafeteria during a meal time a week before the picture was to be shown and pasted a sticker on each vinegar cruet. The announcement appealed to those in charge of the cafeteria and they permitted the stickers to remain on the cruets.

When the Liberty advertisement that "When Bearcat Went Dry" was a photo play to be shown at the Liberty Theatre it is safe to say that a goodly number of the members of the Y. W. C. A. saw it.

By arrangement with the management of the Woolworth five and ten cent stores in St. Louis Shafer was permitted to use two of the best windows in the largest of the downtown stores to advertise "When Bearcat Went Dry."

A canvas curtain 12 by 18 feet showing a deserted log cabin on the side of which was painted "When Bearcat Went Dry" was used as a back ground for the windows. Other novelties of advertising this production were used to fill in the space in front of the curtain.

The Woolworth stores used many thousands of stickers in sealing parcels instead of using string. This method of securing parcles was adopted in other retail stores in the city.

It is needless to say that every person who took a parcel home that bore a "When Bearcat Went Dry" sticker was mystified as to what the wording actually meant.

Easton Gives "Broken Blossoms" Big Exploitation

CONSERVATIVE Pennsylvanians are being shown things these days in the form of real high classed theatre exploitation by the management of the Third Street Theatre, of Easton, Penna., who have not only been developing a constructive plan of business building for their institution, but have been blazing away with good ideas during the past few months that has attracted the attention of an increased clientele, to such an extent that regularly each week their box-office records are being broken.

There never was a doubt in the minds of Eastonian theatre managers that exploitation of the "bigger and better" pictures was a paying proposition, but their greatest anticipations were greatly excelled in the results that marked the work done on the "Broken Blossoms" presentation by the Third Street Theatre, which campaign was followed with keenest interest by all persons interested in theatre management and theatre exploitation.

"Broken Blossoms" according to the management of the theatre was welcomed for many reasons, principally however because it was a Griffith production and the management knew that there would be no censorship cuts in it, which has been the case in so many of the recent bigger productions, and which has caused much hesitation in promotional ideas in Pennsylvania, since on a number of occasions, just the specific point upon which the exploitation was centered, the censors cut out those scenes from the picture and the exploitation work went flat.

To begin with, H. E. Woehrle, manager, and Donald W. Bernstein, assistant manager, of the Third Street Theatre, for three weeks prior to the opening of the week's run of the picture, had all the correspondence paper and envelopes specially printed with "D. W. Griffith's Broken Blossoms," spread over the top in light blue type, and which very attractive design caused much comment. All mail issued from their office, in sending out correspondence, programs and advance announcements, the printed envelopes were used. Two weeks prior to the opening of the run a special large sized herald, four pages, printed in blue on orange paper was distributed to every house in the community. This herald contained much interesting information about the production, the producer and the players, interspersed with illustrations from scenes of the production, and portraits of Mr. Griffith, Miss Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmes. This campaign covered all towns within a 15 mile radius of Easton.

The week before the opening a well planned constructive newspaper campaign was begun, the management using all the town newspapers with ads., ranging from six columns wide and ten inches deep, to single and two column ads. which were run during the playing of the production. An attractive window card was designed by the management and the town was flooded with them. They also succeeded in getting a number of the leading department stores on the main street to have window displays, in which were used stills from the production.

In all of the material used the theatre management followed in every detail the exploitation ideas that were supplied them by the press book, and in the course of their campaign they utilized every cut, photograph and suggestion that was made by the distributing organization's exploitation, advertising and publicity department.

The result of the campaign brought a new box office record to the theatre. The first three days, at all performances, afternoon and evening, the management was compelled to turn hundreds of people from the theatre, and in their advertising they expressed their regrets, and by their clever methods of injecting their feelings into their advertising they brought about a friendliness of feeling which made the "turned away" and disappointed ones want to try again the last few days of the week.

Another Holah Contest Idea

THE Holah contest brings forth this exploitation idea:

J. H. Vaughan, owner and manager of the New Orpheum, Maquoketa, Iowa, spoke from the stage of his theatre for a week in advance of showing Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" and told of the star paying $40,000 for the picture rights to the story. During the run he used a quartet of four little girls, who grouped in the lobby with a pet dog, and at each show sang "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs."

Free Publicity Scarce in Kansas City; Feld Breaks Through Occasionally

ACCORDING to our good friend, Milton H. Feld, manager of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, the general attitude of the newspapers in Kansas City toward motion pictures, has been such that Kansas City has been a bugaboo for so-called exploitation experts. While it is not possible to get the newspapers to say a lot about current attractions, by laying awake nights, scheming, plotting and planning to give to the newspapers a story that to their critical minds is of such a nature to interest their readers, the newsman occasionally breaks into print.

The following is a story which went over on the basis of news in the Kansas City Star. We call it the real thing, mighty well written and containing a lot of interesting information. This is about the highest form of publicity which can be secured.

"MAKING EAVESDROPPING PAY"

The Distograph Finds New Place in the World of Business

"I don't care for this guy Wallace Reid," says Bill to Mamie as they pass through the foyer after the last lingering kiss and soothing "fade-out" have marked the end of the movie romance.

"I think he's a dear," returns Mamie.

In an office on the second floor, separated from Bill and Mamie by a lot of thick walls, sits the manager of the theatre, listening for just such remarks as those made by Bill and Mamie. And when he hears this particular conversational passage he mentally jots down the notation: "Show making good with the women." Which means that the week's show will be a winner, because it is the women's choice that controls the attendance at the motion picture houses. What a mere man thinks of the picture is a matter of little passing consequence to the manager.

But how does he overhear the remarks made by Bill and Mamie and the many other movie fans, when he is removed from them by a floor or so and several walls that smother sound like a wet blanket does a flame? That is the latest secret of the movie theatre, and it enables the manager to get a line on how his show is "getting over." It permits him to overhear valuable criticism and suggestion that may mean several hundred dollars to him that week.

SECRETS IN A RECEIVER

If one could peer into the manager's office he would get a hint of the secret in the receiver that the manager holds to his ear. It looks just like an ordinary telephone receiver — but it isn't. The receiver and the little switchboard on the manager's desk enable him to overhear what is being said in almost every part of the theatre. It is one of the latest applications of the dictograph.

A Chicago motion picture house is said to have been the first to try the dictograph. It was an instantaneous success. When Frank L. Newman built the Newman Theatre here he installed a dictograph apparatus and, according to Milton H. Field, manager, the device has been of inestimable value in registering opinions of the audiences.

Just to see how the dictograph operates, let one drop into a manager's office and take the receiver for a little while.

There comes a lull in the orchestra's playing; it is the end of the picture. A feminine voice is heard speaking:

"That love scene is just too sweet."

"Yes, but who would want to kiss with a hedge fence between them? Why doesn't he climb over?" comes the highly practical masculine answer.

Another switch is opened and the listener thereby connected with another part of the theatre.

A masculine voice now is overheard. It is that of "the man who knows," that chap who is present in every movie audience and who explains how it is done and what is going to take place next.

"The speed of the film is regulated by ——" but what is the use of listening to an old acquaintance whom we've heard many a time — much to our distress. So another switch is opened.

"It is too warm in here," remarks a feminine voice. There is a criticism the manager needs to hear. The dictograph has proved its worth. The manager hurries out to see that some of the heat is shut off.

"Did you see that woman's coat? Isn't it positively ridiculous?" speaks up a feminine voice. Interesting, but of no value to the management in the way of helpful criticism.

"I wish they would show another Charles Ray picture. I like the bashful way he makes love and he can do so many funny things," says another feminine voice. The management mentally notes that Charles Ray is a good drawing card with the women. He will watch out for the next picture featuring the timid Mr. Ray.

GET CRITICISM AND PRAISE

So the conversation runs. There is much in it that is valueless to the listener in the manager's office — things about motor cars, plumbing, the high cost of living, the relative beauty of brown and blue eyes and other subjects of great consequence to the speakers, but of no importance to the man running the show. But interspersed in between these remarks will be bits of illuminating criticism and praise, with here and there a hint as to how the show can be improved. One manager says he has obtained at least one valuable suggestion at every night performance. Perhaps several remarks will be anent the music. If that is favorable, the music will be repeated the next night. A singing feature was retained an extra week at the Newman just because of the dictograph. A certain type of picture went into permanent disfavor for a similar reason.

The dictograph at the Newman is connected with eighteen different sections of the theatre. The microphones, or sound detecting apparatus is cleverly concealed so that nobody in the audience ever would suspect their presence. And, for the comfort of those in that audience, it may be said that the dictograph doesn't register worth a hang when the orchestra is playing. It is only in the lulls in music or during intermission when the audience is passing out that it performs its helpful work.

Prologue and stage setting at Graumona, Los Angeles, used for the "Anvil Chorus of 1920" one of Sid Grauman's specialties which made a big hit with the fans

Getting the Personal Touch into Your Exploitation

I. LISBON, manager of the Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky., attracted considerable attention and caused widespread comment recently when he linked the off-stage names of Katherine MacDonald and Thomas Meighan with their character parts in "The Thunderbolt."

In quarter-page advertisements Lisbon announced "the strangest marriage on record." And in bold-face type on the lower half of the page he stated: "On Their Wedding Night Thomas Meighan said to Katherine MacDonald: 'You shall never be a mother — never know the touch of a baby's hand. I married you not because I love you but because I hate you and all your family.' Imagine the husband of a beautiful woman starting his married life that way."

Photoplay fans immediately wondered whether an important film marriage accomplished without their previous knowledge had ended in a scandal.

Another view of Grauman's "Anvil Chorus of 1920."

Another Illustration of Grauman's Superior Showmanship Ideas

IN connection with a program featuring Marguerite Clark in "Luck in Pawn," Sid Grauman offered the patrons of his million dollar cinema temple in Los Angeles an unusual number of special added features. The outstanding event was "The Anvil Chorus of 1920" in which three splendid singers, Al Sather, Fred de Bruin and Jack Van, attired in the proverbial blacksmith garb, sang the Anvil Chorus from "Il Trovatore" and followed with renditions of the late popular hits, "The Vamp" and "Golden Gate." The scene opened with a tawny red lighting effect suffusing the entire stage, representing the interior of the blacksmith shop. As the curtains part the sound of clanking metal and other sounds peculiar to the smithy are heard. One of the men, striding over to the forge, began working the bellows and the others busied themselves about the shop, while the orchestra played some introductory music to the Anvil Chorus. Then, as the famous old melody was heard the men station themselves at anvils and begin striking in time with the music, while the stage darkens somewhat and sparks fly at each stroke. At the conclusion of the Anvil Chorus the trio stepped forward and sang, in a characteristic way, "The Vamp." This number got over bigger than anything else on Grauman's entire program. As an encore they stepped back and grouped picturesquely, sang "Golden Gate" in a very subdued tone, the last bars faintly floating into a memory as the lights deepen and the curtain closed. The blacksmith shop setting represented a considerable outlay of money and was atmospherically almost perfection itself.

Another enthusiastically received novelty was C. Sharpe-Minor's organ satire on "Playing the Movies." With humorous subtitles that sent the audience into an uproar of hilarity, he burlesqued the melodramatic type of picture throughout seven minutes of cleverly conceived effects. He showed how every emotion and every situation could be handled through one musical theme played in different moods and tempos. He used as a theme Rubenstein's Melody in F. The imaginary entrance of the villain, the lovers at church on Sunday and the cunning plotting of the accomplices, all were musically interpreted in a satirical vein that was not "over the public's head" and received a deluge of applause.

Another conception from the fertile brain of the youthful theatre magnate was the appearance of 17-year-old Lucy Merz, a discovery of his own, in the garb of sweet sixteen a la the Civil War period. This beautiful girl, of a dark eyed, exotic type, proved exquisitely appealing and her two numbers, "The Last Rose of Summer" and "Annie Laurie," sung in a coloratura soprano voice of a clear, bell-like quality, were heartily applauded.

Sid Grauman seldom repeats, but he duplicated an idea of several weeks ago, by again having a solo violinist, with the spotlight, render the music incidental to the screening of the scenic. This time "Midst Peaceful Scenes," a veritable screen poem, with poetic subtitles, depicted nature at her most sublime, while the violinist played the sweet, haunting Bach's "Air for G String."

From an advertising viewpoint, Mr. Grauman took advantage of the fact that the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra had received considerable praise for their rendition at their initial concert of the famous overture to "Oberon" through the daily press. Feeling that only the musical elite attend such symphony concerts, he had Grauman's Symphony Orchestra, which will play to some 90,000 people in the course of a week, render this brilliant and inspiring composition.

Allens Feature Lobby Displays In Their Exploitation

MESSRS. Jule and Jay J. Allen, of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, who control theatres in every principal city of the Dominion and whose theatres now under construction represent an investment of several millions of dollars, are great believers in all forms of motion picture exploitation. This they have shown by installing a comprehensive advertising and publicity department under the direction of Mr. R. E. Pritchard, whose work is known to nearly every exhibitor in the United States.

But with the large amount that they are spending in the Canadian newspapers they are not losing sight of other forms of attracting the eye of the public. They are encouraging their various managers to make special lobby displays where the subject offers a good opportunity, and this is one of the phases covered in the advice from headquarters that goes out in advance of each picture being shown over the big circuit of nearly fifty houses.

One of the leaders in this form of exploitation is J. F. Price, manager of the Allen theatre in Calgary, Alta. Erection of this house marked the expension of the interest of the Allens from a comparatively small beginning to one of the organizations that is attracting a world-wide interest, and naturally Calgary occupies a position of especial warmth in the hearts of Jule and Jay J.—the active heads of the enterprises.

Two of recent releases offered opportunities that were quickly accepted by Mr. Price. For the showing of Madge Kennedy in "Through the Wrong Door" there was a screen placed in front of the box-office bearing the silhouetted figure of a man and girl and then the inscription on the door, "The Midnight Romance in Apartment X." There was another clever idea achieved by having the patron enter at the left instead of the right. At the right of the lobby there was a card reading "The Right Door is the Wrong Door to enter the Allen to see Madge Kennedy in 'The Wrong Door.'" And then the right-hand door carried a huge hand pointing to the door at the left. At the left there was another sign bearing the inscription: "This is the right door to enter the Allen to see Madge Kennedy in the 'Wrong Door.'"

Equally striking was the effect achieved with Mabel Normand in "Upstairs." Here there was a balcony effect built in the front of the house and in the background a picture of the star as she appears in the pool game scene and in striking letters and colors the name of the star and the title. Leading up to this was a stairway, bearing the following inscription on the respective steps, from top to bottom:

"'Upstairs'
With Mabel Normand."

"A pair of silk stockings and the world was hers."

"A ragtime romance with Cupid at the drums."

"Some Jazz Baby—That's Mabel in her funniest comedy."

"She didn't know a soup ladle from a salad spoon, but she could jazz."

"You just can't make your feet behave when you see Mabel jazz."

"Do you like ragtime?"

The remainder of the lobby was kept free from decorations except for a couple of palm trees, and so the stairway and its legends stood out sharply.

Fischer Stages a Fashion Show With Usual Results

TWICE each year the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, is always sure of "packing them in," for every spring and fall Manager George Fischer stages a fashion show. With the co-operation of a leading women's apparel house, a hosiery manufacturing company and a shoe firm, Manager Fischer has made his two fashion shows a civic institution as far as the female population of Milwaukee is concerned. The display is scheduled for thirty minutes, during which eleven models appear making rapid changes of costumes. The stage setting is severely plain, and brilliantly lighted. Three spotlights in the gallery of the house follow the three models, who are constantly on the stage and runway which extends out into the auditorium for about twelve rows. Included among the models is one who shows gowns suitable for stout women and another who dresses in children's frocks. Besides the drawing to the house of many new patrons, the style show also results in the advertising of the Alhambra theatre in the newspaper ads of the houses showing their wares, as well as special displays in these firm's windows

Good Showmanship If Your Bluff Isn't Called

THE Holah contest which has been explained elsewhere in this issue brought out many new exploitation stunts. Here is a prize-winning idea:

Joe Gerbracht and Miss H. Gerbracht, owner and manager, respectively, of the Twin Star Theatre, Ames, Iowa, entered the contest with an explanation of how they got publicity out of the refusal of the authorities to issue a permit to use a live bear (which they did not have) in a jungle in the lobby of his theatre, in a showing of "Tarzan of the Apes." The jungle was made of foliage and grass and Gerbracht used stuffed animals and electrical effects at night.

Triangle Announces Re-Created Pictures With Famous Stars

The new sales policy inaugurated by Triangle beginning in November, it was announced this week, has resulted in increased business in every one of the 18 exchanges. A widespread demand has been reported for the re-created Triangle plays with famous stars which are to be released every third week beginning November 23d with "The Flame of the Yukon," one of Dorothy Dalton's pictures.

An important part of the selling campaign on Triangle plays and the Mack Sennett comedies, which are to be released every week, will be a series of advertisements in the recognized trade publications, it is said.

Following "The Flame of the Yukon," Triangle will release "Betty of Greystone," on December 14. This production was supervised by D. W. Griffith and directed by Allan Dwan. It features Dorothy Gish, with Owen Moore. The third release of the series will be "The Clodhopper," in which Charles Ray achieved considerable success.

The Triangle report further announces: "Additions to the sales force have recently been made in practically all of the exchanges. Manager Kunn of Denver reports that during his first week one of his new salesmen took on almost $33,000 worth of new business. In the Washington exchange, $1,500 new business was reported in two days."

"Male and Female" at Big Houses in N. Y. in Different Weeks

Cecil B. De Mille's latest production for Paramount-Artcraft release "Male and Female" will be given a first showing at the Rivoli Theatre the week of November 23 following which it will play a week at the Rialto Theatre, New York.

Great Goldwyn Campaign Starts

December 1 will See Launching of Nation Wide Newspaper Publicity; Plans are Big

AFTER months of preparation, during which every angle of advertising designed to benefit the exhibitor has been considered, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's great national newspaper advertising campaign will be launched December 1. On that date Goldwyn copy will appear in the leading newspapers throughout the country, reaching an audience conservatively estimated at thirty million people. Every worth while newspaper in cities and towns will carry the copy.

The campaign, as perfected by Frank Seaman, Inc., one of the leading advertising agencies, in co-operation with Ralph Block, advertising and publicity director of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is unique It has been worked out with the utmost detail in order that the advertising will be of direct benefit to the exhibitors showing Goldwyn Pictures. And it will be backed up by all the resources of the organization's exploitation forces at the home office and in the field, including the twenty-two press and service men in the exchanges.

The newspaper drive is only the beginning of a widespread national publicity campaign.

The question of national advertising has been given the most painstaking study. For the last six months, campaigns conducted in the past have been analyzed with a view to avoiding mistakes that have been made, and instituting what may properly be called "service" advertising. As a result, something entirely new in the publicizing of quality pictures has been designed.

Every advertisement will be directly tied up with a Goldwyn exhibitor. It will carry the name of a theatre, the title of a picture being presented and the name of a Goldwyn star. In addition to that there will be included an announcement relative to Goldwyn as an institution irrevocably dedicated to the making of the finest productions that modern art and science can bring forth.

A distinctive feature of the Goldwyn campaign is the complete circulation of the advertisements. In a city of 150,000 population, for example, with three newspapers in good standing. all will carry Goldwyn copy, and the exhibitor showing the Goldwyn production will profit by advertising that literally covers the community. In New York, nine of the leading morning and evening newspapers are on the list.

In securing the co-operation of Frank Seaman, Inc., to handle the campaign along the most approved advertising lines, Goldwyn enlisted the support of a concern whose reputation is nation-wide.

Holmes to Release via Metro

Taylor Holmes has Completed Plans for Production of First Three Pictures of Light Comedies

METRO Pictures Corporation announces that it will release through its system of exchanges in this country and its affiliations in Great Britain the new Taylor Holmes productions, the first three of which are to be "Nothing But the Truth," "The Very Idea" and "Nothing But Lies."

Mr. Holmes has now practically completed his plans for the production of the three features named, and with the arrangement to release them through Metro is in a position to begin work immediately.

J. Davis Pendleton originally acquired the motion picture rights to the three plays, "Nothing But the Truth," "The Very Idea" and "Nothing but Lies" some time ago, and announced that he was ready to dispose of them. Taylor Holmes seized the as quickly as possible, realizing that they offered the precise light comedy material for which he had been looking.

Concerning his plans Mr. Holmes announces only that they are on such an elaborate scale that he will be unable to give definite news until they are complete. It is understood, however, that he has already made arrangements for a studio near New York City and that he is now organizing his executive, sales and advertising forces. The personnel of the staff of the business organization will be made public shortly, according to Mr. Holmes.

Metro Transfers Play-Reading Department to the East

Because he considers New York the fountain-head of supply for big plays, stories and novels, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, has detached the reading department from the scenario department proper, and is transferring it bodily from the Metro studios in Hollywood to New York.

Jasper Ewing Brady, who for more than a year has headed the reading department at the studio on the West Coast, left California with Mrs. Brady a few days ago for New York, where he will assume the same position at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in the Longacre Building.

June Mathis continues as actual head of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario department.

December Robertson-Cole Films

Holiday Month Will see Hayakawa, Edith Storey, Lew Cody and Others in Big Offerings

TO mark the ending of the year, Robertson-Cole in announcing their releases for December have provided an elaborate holiday bill. In addition to four Robertson-Cole Superior Pictures there will be a big special and eight features of the short subject variety. Included in the holiday bill is the first release starring Edith Storey under the Robertson-Cole banner and also marks her return to the silent drama after two years spent in active war work.

"The Beloved Cheater" a Gasnier production starring Lew Cody will be prereleased in December as a Robertson-Cole Special. This picture is acclaimed by Robertson-Cole officials as the biggest they have ever put their name to and to back their assertion, the most extensive advertising and publicity campaign of national scope they have ever handled is well under way.

W. Christy Cabanne, directed under personal supervision of Mr. Gasnier, Eileen Percy, Doris Pawn, Jack Mower, Alice Fleming, Frederick Vroom, Andrew Robson and Wang the famous Chinese actor, are in the cast.

"Where There's a Will" produced by Brentwood for Robertson-Cole is one of the regular releases for the holiday month. In this production de luxe the ever fascinating little actress, ZaSu Pitts is featured. Motion picture exhibitors throughout the country have reported to Robertson-Cole that Brentwood productions are in great demand. Brentwood is doing everything within its power to secure stories suitable to the ever-increasing demand for high-class productions.

Claude H. Mitchell who directed this picture for Brentwood has given to the screen world a production that will long be remembered. In fact this great director declares that the photo-play exceeds even the fondest hopes of Brentwood officials. Supporting Miss Pitts in "Where There's A Will" are Henry Woodward, Hughie Mack, Frank Hayes and others of equal import.

Robertson-Cole in presenting Bessie Barriscale's next starring vehicle "Beckoning Roads," made by B. B. Features, believe they have a production which will take like wildfire and which will add laurels to this great star. This story was adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates from Jeanne Judson's famous novel, "The Call of Life."

In December Robertson-Cole will release "The Tong Man" with Sessue Hayakawa and a cast of merit. This picture, it is predicted will be the banner production for this screen artist. For in it the star has an opportunity to show his dramatic as well as his athletic skill.

"The Tong Man" is unlike any previous Hayakawa starring vehicle for it is a "rip snorting melodrama." Exhibitors have been clamoring for such a Hayakawa picture and those who have seen it have placed their stamp of approval on the next Hayakawa release.

So great has been the demand for pictures starring Edith Storey by exhibitors throughout the country that Robertson-Cole will shortly release "The Golden Hope," a story of the great outdoors. This picture is said to be one of the very best in which the celebrated star has played. The theme is in keeping with the dramatic powers of Miss Storey and is a real play in which to bring the heroine of the West back to the screen world. Miss Storey saw the full force of the great world war for she was in the midst of it as a war worker.

Director D. Grasse has surrounded Miss Storey with players of note. Marin Sais, Carl Gerard, Howard Gays, William Elmer, Omar Whitehead, Frank Shaw and A. J. Fleming have big parts in the great story.

"Tulagi, a White Spot in a Black Land," "Through the Isles of the New Hebrides," and "The Home of the Hula Hula," are the titles of the December releases of the famous Martin Johnson stories of the great South Seas.

Pathe Bookings Shoot Higher

Business for November, Spurred on by Sales Contest, Promises to Surpass That of Past Months

SPURRED by the competition for the prizes offered to branch managers turning in the heaviest business in November, "Quimby Tribute Month," Pathe bookings and collections attained record proportions during the last, according to reports. Feature bookings went still higher, and in spite of the unusual marks set in September and October, all Pathe feature sales figures will be overshadowed by the reports for November it is said.

Heavy bookings were recorded on "The Gay Old Dog," "A Woman of Pleasure," "The Right to Lie," "A Damsel in Distress," "The Thirteenth Chair," "The World Aflame," "The Virtuous Model," "The Moonshine Trail" and "Oh Boy," which is still booking heavily despite its long run. Other features which met with popular favor from exhibitors during the week are "Twin Pawns," "The False Code," "Impossible Catherine," "The Love Cheat," "The Unknown Love," "Common Clay," "Gates of Brass," "The Bishop's Emeralds" and "The Master Man."

The Pathe report further announces that not only are the bookings surpassing all previous records, but exhibitors have recognized the merit of the Pathe features, and are paying higher prices for the product than ever before. "A Woman of Pleasure" and "The Gay Old Dog," latest of the series, are making the pace for the other productions. Each of these photo-dramas is on the way to equal the performance of "Oh Boy," "Common Clay" and "The Thirteenth Chair," which have enjoyed longer and more prosperous life than any other features Pathe ever distributed.

Sennett Just Completing His Latest Super-Comedy

MACK SENNETT is just completing his latest special super-comedy production and as soon as it is ready, which will be in about two weeks, E. M. Asher, Mr. Sennett's representative, will leave Los Angeles for New York with a print to arrange for the premier showing at one of the large Broadway theatres. It is probable that the production will be shown simultaneously in New York and Los Angeles.

This is the fourth multiple-reel picture produced by Mr. Sennett, the others being "Tillie's Punctured Romance," "Mickey" and "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," all of which made and are making big money for exhibitors. The new Sennett comedy will probably be five reels in length. The title has not as yet been announced.

In the new Sennett comedy production, all the famous Sennett comedians appear. In addition, the wonderful trained animal actors which are a feature of the Sennett comedies, have prominent parts and new animal actors make their first appearance on the screen.

This production is the first of the series of multiple-reel productions which Mr. Sennett will make, although he will continue to produce his regular release comedy features. The Sennett plant is being enlarged in order to provide for the new productions, all of which will be made as usual, under the personal direction of Mr. Sennett.

"Once to Every Man" is Sold For Many Territories in the U. S.

George Stockton signed a contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation acquiring the production "Once to Every Man," for the territory of Ohio. The All Star Feature Distributors have also purchased this production for the territory of California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands. This deal was closed through the New York office of Sol Lesser.

It is asserted that these two contracts close every territory in the United States with the exception of Oregon, Washington, Northern Idaho and Montana.

Players in the Limelight Seen in Educational Feature

"Shooting desert island stuff" for the coming Cecil B. DeMille production "Male and Female" is to be the important feature of the new tenth issue of "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," announced by Vice-President E. W. Hammons for release in November through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

The sunny beaches of Santa Cruze — off the coast of California — provide the locations, while Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts and Lila Lee are a few of those included in the all star-line-up of players engaged in making M. DeMilles silver-sheet adaptation of J. M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton." No photoplay in many months has been so widely anticipated as "Male and Female" — and seldom do photoplay fans have the privilege of standing behind the camera during the making of an important feature as they do in these "Supplement" views.

Nor does that end, by any means, the attractions of the reel. Mrs. Charley Chaplin, Bessie Barriscale, Pauline Frederick, Eddie Polo and others of note will be "at home" for their admirers.

Three Morey Features for Vita Have Mountainous Settings

The Vitagraph Company announces that Harry T. Morey is acquiring quite a reputation as a mountaineer, principally because of the fact that his last three Vitagraph features have been taken in mountainous districts amid picturesque exteriors of towering rocks, deep valleys and lumber camps. "The Darkest Hour" was "shot," at least in part, in the White Mountains of New Hamphshire, according to the Vitagraph report. For his "Birth of a Soul" Mr. Morey went to the moutains of North Carolina, says the same announcement; while Lake Placid, situated in the Adirondacks, is reported to be the setting of his present effort, entilted "The Mightier Strength." The recent inclement weather is said to have hampered the work on the last-named production, temporarily.

Change in Handling of Universal Product in New Haven District

H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges, announced a change in the handling of Universal Special attractions and Jewel productions in the New Haven, Conn., territory. According to the statement all of the bigger products will now be handled from Universal's New Haven office in addition to the short subjects and serials.

Heretofore all the bigger productions were released under the direction of the First National in that territory. The new plan according to reports gives the New York office full charge over the territory for all products. It is said that all of the New Haven territory will be handled by Morris Josephs, who has been in charge of the New Haven office for some time. The New Haven office is under the direct supervision of Charles Rosenzweig, New York exchange manager.

Aerial Dep't Trade Necessity

Rothacker Plant Finds Establishment a Boon in the Taking of Industrial Features

THE purpose behind the establishment of the latest Rothacker department, its aims and the reasons that brought it into existence, are described in a statement issued by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., which follows:

"Necessity was the reason for the establishment of the newest department of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.— the aerial department.

"Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the company wanted to be in position to make any kind of picture — an educational, industrial or advertising film — on a moment's notice. He couldn't do this without a permanent aerial department, which will operate from the Rothacker Chicago laboratories.

"The aerial department was established largely to meet the increasingly exacting demands of clients who wish industrial pictures made. Pictures taken from the ground cannot tell the whole truth about a large industrial plant.

"Advertisers nowadays are selling the organization behind the product as well as the product itself. This is particularly true in the case of firms which are casting a covetous eye toward the foreign trade.

"Abroad where an American firm's reputation is not yet established, prospective buyers are being impressed by motion pictures showing the bigness and stability of a firm as well as by pictures showing the quality of material and workmanship put into the firm's product.

"Frequently the industrial plants of Rothacker clients are situated in small towns or at the edge of a city, and upon arriving at one of these plants the director and his cameraman shadow invariably find that some one has neglected to erect a tall building at a strategical point nearby from which a panoramic birdeye view of the client's plant might be made.

"Such was the case at the Oliver Typewriter Co. plant at Woodstock, Ill. It required an airplane to get a film that would do justice to the Woodstock plant, scattered as it is over many acres.

"The aerial department was needed for scenes of the picture Rothacker is now making for Libby, McNeill & Libby at the company's Blue Island plant. The completed Libby picture will be a comprehensive compact visualization of the Blue Island plant — the whole plant as seen from the sky, intimate visits inside the different buildings, production of Libby products in various stages and the Libby plan of shop methods and executive management.

"W. B. Klingensmith, cameraman of the Rothacker aerial department has in mind some nature study educational pictures, particularly shots of various species of birds in flight.

"Lieutenant Ralph C. Diggings is the aerial pilot."

Metro Purchases Famous Novel

Vicente Ibanez's "The Four Horse-Men of the Apocalypse" is Sold to Metro for Picturization

PURCHASE of the screen rights to "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by the Spanish novelist, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, is announced by Metro Pictures Corporation. It is stated also that options have been obtained by Metro on several other of the author's works which have been published in English. Negotiations for "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" were concluded upon the recent return of Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, from a tour of inspection to the studios of Screen Classics, Inc., at Hollywood.

The Metro Pictures Corporation announces that the acquisition of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is in the nature of a literary coup for Metro, with a number of large companies bidding for this great dramatic story. Negotiations for the novel have been under way for some time and were concluded when the author himself gave approval to the sale after he had arrived in this country a short time ago.

Metro was impelled to the purchase of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," it is asserted, by a great popular demand made upon it by exhibitors. Recently the company announced that it would purchase any story which exhibitors requested. Hundreds of suggestions were received, but Ibanez's novel is said to have headed most of the lists and was missing from only several.

Taylor Holmes Now Producing

Stage Comedian Has Secured Screen Rights to Three Farce Comedies; Will Appear in Stellar Roles

TAYLOR Holmes, the comedian who scored in "A Pair of Sixes" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" has embarked upon a career as a producer of his own pictures.

It has just become known that Mr. Holmes has acquired the screen rights to three stage farce-comedy successes, namely: "Nothing But the Truth," "The Very Idea" and "Nothing but Lies." He will star in each of these, he announces, and already has plans under way for the procurement of his own studios and the organization of executive, sales and advertising forces with a view to putting into immediate production "Nothing but the Truth."

The motion picture industry last week was apprised of the fact that "Nothing but the Truth," "The Very Idea" and "Nothing but Lies" had been placed on the market through J. Davis Pendleton, who held the rights to this trio of successful comedies. Close upon the heels of Mr. Pendleton's announcement came the news that Taylor Holmes had instantly snapped up these stage plays as vehicles for the exploitation of his talents as an exponent of light comedy on the screen.

Neal Burns and Marie Eline are Starred in Capitol Comedies

The National Film Corporation of America announces the release of their first Capitol Comedy in which Neal Burns and Marie Eline will be the featured players. Miss Eline has appeared in support of several comedy stars, and her talents as a comedienne will find a natural outlet in the two-reel photoplays in which she will co-star with Mr. Burns.

Neal Burns has had a long and active career both on the stage and on the screen.

The first production in which Mr. Burns and Miss Eline will appear together for Capitol is "Two Dollars Please," a comedy in which the particular talents of both players will find full scope. The picture will be released through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Faith--And Its Relation to Pictures

By Arthur S. Kane

Arthur S. Kane, president Realart Pictures Corp.

Shakespeare and John James Ingalls were of one mind.

"There comes a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to victory."

So said the Bard of Avon.

The late Senator from the Sunflower State matched him with:

"Master of human destinies am I!" in his great apostrophe to "Opportunity."

"If feasting, rise; if sleeping, wake; it is the hour of Fate."

Twentieth Century philosophy knows Opportunty does not knock once "and I return no more!" It has learned Opportunity comes back time and again thumping on the door and all but kicking it in.

So it is in our industry. Leaning, again, on the Bard, he it was, I believe, who said: "The only crime is ignorance." I would change this for our business to read up to the present: "The only crime is cowardice."

Perhaps "lack of vision" could be substituted for the "shorter and uglier" phrase and mean the same thing.

Timidity has been the paramount offense.

"Nothing ventured, nothing gained," has been the all encompassing rule of conduct for our vocation. Being even moderately equipped and capable of practising that law as the beginning and the end, the ne plus ultra, ultima thule and E Pluribus Unum as it were, of all endeavor, the other fifty-six axioms of "How to Become Successful" could go into the discard.

Not only fortunes but the advances in the forms, as well as the quality of our art, have been made by the Men who Dared.

This is no pæan of praise to the writer, who has on numberless occasions been guilty of diffidence to say the least.

But as we live we learn. If we do not we continually try to batter down a stone wall with our heads.

So engrossing, so chameleon colored, so kaleidoscopic and many hued the endless combinations of our ever changing commercial art that to grow old in it seems remote.

"A person who has traveled far and seen much is apt to think he has lived long," says James Fenimore Cooper, as his opening sentence of "The Last of the Mohicans." As this business goes I have "traveled far and seen much," but do not feel I have "lived long." Instead of years, as it actually is, it seems only months since George Kleine used to call George Spoor on the 'phone (Yes, this was was after the invention of the telephone):

"Say. George, I just got a letter from Edison and they are going to have out a new subject next month."

"That's great! How long is it?"

"Sixty feet."

"Be sure to get enough copies for me."

From that time to this day men have been venturing, companies have been embarking, over-production has been decried at all times on every hand and when all has been summed up the records show "the only crime is cowardice."

Pittsburg Phil would have been a Croesus in this business. The field was made to order for John W. Gates.

This does not take one whit of credit from those who have got to the front. They have been men of vision and nerve. So were Pittsburg Phil and John W. Gates.

Never was the cry that the market was way overproduced and promoted more insistent than when Realart Pictures Corporation came into being. The usual tales that so and so was just two jumps ahead of the sheriff, that this and that concern had only got a new lease on life through interesting new money were just as healthily active as they have been all down the years.

Our industry is more nervous than Wall Street. A film Marathon needs no messenger of defeat. A rumor of impending or accomplished disaster outstrips the telegraph, outspeeds the wind, puts to shame the velocity of light. The only difficulty is while actual celluloid Waterloos have been so few compared to the enterprises of any magnitude launched, the tidings of imagined catastrophe breed faster than Belgian hares, are more fecund than guinea pigs.

At such a time, and under such circumstances, Realart was born, because it was believed that overcrowding in this new art form invariably takes place only in the lower levels; that the pushing and crushing and crunching is in the subways, as it were; that one can travel healthily and safely on the surface and in the sunlight; that there never has been, is not now and never will be an overproduction of what our industry depends upon — fine pictures.

And here a word to exhibitors. In the constantly widening scope of your enterprises, in your continuously expanding appropriations for music and other contributory factors to surround the pictures and create atmosphere for them and standing for your theatre, do not forget this — these are "but the trappings and the suits" of entertainment. If there is any doubt in your mind, run your theatre a week with all these appurtenances, but no pictures. Then use pictures the following week without these adjuncts. The takings of the two weeks will tell you the public estimate. So you will know how much importance to attach to each part of the bill in apportioning receipts.

The belief when Realart was formed in there always being room at the top is proved by the event. I might say that never has the entire country risen to a new proposition in the spontaneous manner it has welcomed us. But there have been other occasions when new concerns have so stirred the imagination of an expectant film world that everyone was on tiptoe, awaiting first releases.

No, that is not now, the outstanding feature of Realart's short existence, although we do feel that accomplishing the confidence of the trade and establishing the approach to the market in the brief space of two months constitutes a record and makes that period of our progress distinctive.

The joy of Realart's situation is that having not overpromised, but having secured the confidence and goodwill of the buyers, we are delivering! Realart pictures and making good!

Do you remember what an invariable rule it has been in this business for a new concern to start with a lot of flivver first releases? Think back to all the manufacturing and distributing enterprises of magnitude which have fared forth in the last three or four years. The inflexible, immutable procedure has been to arouse keenest anticipation and dash it with dullest realization. Not that the promoters of these enterprises did not move heaven and earth to put their best foot foremost at the start. But luck played against them. Fate ruled otherwise. After disappointing early hopes they had to fight their way back to confidence and standing by gameness, persistence and healthy bank rolls.

Understanding all this one can realize how fortunate we of Realart feel. George M. Cohan never gives much credit to Providence, though he was born there, but we feel otherwise.

In "SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE" by Richard Harding Davis, our first release, we have one of the undoubted, acknowledged, successes of the year.

For this we are indebted to the artistic bigness of ALLAN DWAN and the business acumen of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, President Isaac Wolper and his associates.

Then, we are repeating right away with two bang-up Star pictures and a Special that make Realart's first quartet so far ahead of any similar number of first releases ever published by any firm that there can be no comparison.

Use Stage Technique in Filming

Universal Man Believes he Can Produce Picture in Time it Takes to Rehearse Stage Play

AS a result of a heated argument during a recent conference of directors at Universal City, an experiment will soon be tried at the Big U studios which may mark a new epoch in photoplay production.

Harry Franklin, who was formerly a director in the spoken drama, having staged several Broadway successes as well as a hundred productions in stock companies which he personally controlled, contends that it should be possible to produce a five or six reel feature in the same length of time that it does to rehearse and open a dramatic production. His brother directors are just as positive that such an accomplishment would be impossible.

Franklin's argument is that motion picture players have no set lines to memorize and that, given a competent company and the full co-operation of the technical department, he can produce a six-thousand foot feature in three weeks.

The director has been promised every possible aid by the various departments at Universal City and will soon start to demonstrate his theory.

But the revolutionary idea back of Franklin's experiment is his determination to apply stage technique to the production of a motion picture. His plan is to spend eighteen or twenty days of the three weeks in rehearsing the various scenes, so that the players, carpenters, property men and electricians will be as perfect in their knowledge of the production as is the dramatic company on the eve of a New York premier. All the sets necessary for the production will be constructed in close proximity to each other, and all the wardrobe, properties and effects will be prepared during the time the company is rehearsing.

At the end of the eighteen days' rehearsal Franklin will call the company for a "performance" and they will play the entire drama according to continuity. He will use two sets of camermen to avoid delay as the players move from set to set, and dressers will be furnished both the men and women players to aid them in making quick changes of wardrobe. In this way Franklin believes he can film the entire production in six hours, and that the result will be a better picture, because the actors will be playing the drama in sequence instead of in the fragmentary way now in vogue.

For his company the director will select players who have had experience on the speaking stage, preferably, in stock. They will be given lines to memorize and will act their parts naturally because each one will know the story the same as in a stage performance.

Anita Stewart Goes To Coast

Actress Will Start Chicago Xmas Fund, en Route; To Start Work Soon After Arrival in West

ANITA STEWART left for the Coast last Friday after two months of vacation in the East, during which she was thoroughly rested, it is reported, and put in shape for the strenuous year which is planned for her in Louis B. Mayer-made productions. Accompanying Miss Stewart to the Coast was her mother and her brother, George Stewart.

She will make but one stop on her way to Los Angeles, which will be at Chicago, where she will start the ball rolling for a gigantic Christmas Fund for the poor kiddies.

A week after the star's arrival at the new Mayer Studios in Hollywood, she will begin work on her first picture of the season to be directed by Edward Jose, who is already in California making preparations.

It is also announced that General Manager Rudolph Cameron, of the Anita Stewart Productions, left for the Coast last week to prepare for the "shooting" of the first Anita Stewart production of the season, "The Fighting Shepherdess" by Caroline Lockhart, for which Louis B. Mayer is said to have paid a record price.

New Universal Branch Head Cashes on Activity

G. L. Levine, one of the youngest managers of a big film exchange in the country, believes in getting out and doing things, no watchful waiting for him. Four weeks ago he succeeded J. D. Roderick, promoted to district manager, as manager of the Milwaukee Office of the Universal Film Corporation, and is elated over the month's business which he reports is the biggest in the history of the Milwaukee Office. The sales force has been increased by two men, making six men now working his territory. He has also placed long bookings on "The Right to Happiness." Mr. Levine is planning a big holiday drive for Universal features from November 15th to December 31st, inclusive.

Announces an Elaborate Line of Paper Ready on "The Hellion"

According to the reports received, the American Film Company, Inc., has put out an especially effective and varied assortment of advertising paper on its second big "Flying A" special, "The Hellion," in which Margarita Fisher, George Periolat and a good cast enact Daniel F. Whitcomb's powerful story.

There is said to be a striking 24-sheet bearing upon the hypnotic angle of the production, with the "Hellion's" sinister hands reaching out toward the shrinking figure of "Mazie Del Mar." In conception, execution and coloring this is reported to be a most artistic and compelling poster. There are also included a 1-sheet, a 6-sheet and two 3-sheets, one of the latter being of the "vision" variety, showing the star in Oriental garb materializing out of thin air as she takes form in the mind of her brooding master.

Ernest Truex Plays Role of "Dub" in an Amusing Comic Film

According to reports Ernest Truex presents an amusing characterization of a "dub" — one of those queer, inconsequential little fellows with an humble exterior, beneath which smoulders a spark of genius — in "The Night of the Dub." This initial Paramount-Ernest Truex fun-film, made by the AyVeeBee corporation and presented by Amedee J. Van Beuren, will be released on November 30th by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. John Joseph Harvey directed this screen comic which was adapted from Albert Payson Terhune's story of the same name, published in the Saturday Evening Post.

George Fawcett Will Direct Miss Corinne Griffith, Vita Star

George Fawcett, the well-known character actor of the spoken stage, has joined Vitagraph's staff of directors and will direct Corinne Griffith in her next feature. He comes here from the West coast where he has been assisting D. W. Griffith. Mr. Fawcett deserted the stage for the screen a few years ago and has since played in several notable productions. For several years he conducted summer stock which admirably prepared him for the duties of screen director.

Six Cameras Catch Spectacular Auto Scene at Night

Catching, with a motion picture camera, a touring car as it hurtled 85 feet from a bridge in the night time, was the feat achieved by Director Ray C. Smallwood with the aid of six cameramen and a powerful battery of arc lights. The scene was for "The Best of Luck," the famous Drury Lane melodrama now being picturized by Screen Classics, Inc., as a Metro release under his direction.

Robert B. Phelan has been added to Metro's staff of motion-photographers by Clifford Butler, general superintendent of the big studios in Hollywood, Calif. He will be assigned to a Screen Classics, Inc., production. "Bob" Phelan is said to have been the first camera man to film "Charlie" Chaplin.

Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" Smashed Strand Records

According to reports received, it is now definitely established that the Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" has broken every existing record of the Strand Theatre and has played to the biggest week's business in the entire career of the house. "Broken Blossoms" opened at the "Strand Theatre" on October 19th.

Reports published last week from many big theatres in widely separated parts of the country indicate a record business for all, it is said. Particular interest attaches this week to reports given out from the office of Hiram Abrams covering first runs in some of the smaller cities. Among others, a report from W. W. Smith, manager of the Rialto and Orpheum Theatre in Tulsa, Oklahoma, is particularly significant. He writes:

"'Broken Blossoms' opened Sunday at the Rialto Theatre at $0.50. Admission receipts were $400—larger than any other motion picture that has ever played here. This includes 'The Birth of a Nation,' which played at $1.50 top and every big feature that has been released."

Louis Burston Completes Second Serial, "The Hawk's Trail"

Louis Burston writes the home office of Burston Films, Inc., in the Longacre Building, New York, that he is now supervising the editing and titling of the last episode of "The Hawk's Trail," in which King Baggot has been starring since he finished his last feature release in a New York studio. According to reports, this makes two serials which President Burston has completed under his own personal supervision during 1919, the other being The Mystery of "13," with Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby in the lead. "The Hawk's Trail" will be offered in the State Rights market in a very short time, and a very elaborate advertising campaign will soon be launched, it is said, in support of the feature.

Loew's Metropolitan Circuit to Show Entire Lloyd Series

Last week Joseph Schenck, acting for the Marcus Loew Circuit booked the entire series of two-reel Harold Lloyd $100,000 comedies, beginning with "Bumping Into Broadway." The booking was made by salesman John J. Dacey, of the New York Pathe Exchange. A minimum of not less than 65 days' bookings is guaranteed the Lloyd comedies in the 27 theatres in the Metropolitan district, according to the Pathe report.

Jane Novak is Engaged For the Marshall Neilan Production

Jane Novak has been engaged by Marshall Neilan to appear under his direction and will be seen in one of the leading roles in his first independent offering now in the course of production. Miss Novak is among the popular leading ladies of the screen and during her six years' career in motion pictures has played opposite some of the famous male stars, including William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Lewis Stone and Sessue Hayakawa.

D. S. Davidson Wins Fisher Cup

Contest Carried on For the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons is Won by Cleveland Salesman

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Fox Film Corporation that D. S. Davidson, a salesman at the Cleveland branch of the Fox company, is winner in the contract campaign carried on by 250 Fox salesmen in the interests of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

Mr. Davidson received from Captain Bud Fisher, creator of the Mutt and Jeff series, a beautiful silver loving cup as an expression of appreciation of his splendid efforts. Messrs. Reed and Barton designed the loving cup.

Mr. Davidson had no easy task to achieve victory on this contest, it is said, for there were a large number of exceedingly energetic competitors. Mr. Weatherly of the Fox Atlanta exchange was second in the race. Mr. Furst of the New York exchange proved a close third, and Mr. Campbell of Chicago was fourth. Some of the other participants who established records in their respective territories, named in the order of position in the contest, are reported to be: Hall of Dallas, Nichol of Pittsburgh, Goodwin of Buffalo, Levy of Pittsburgh, Murphy of Cincinnati, Fessinger of St. Louis, Gross of New York, Green of Kansas City, Barnes of Minneapolis, Davis of Denver, and Boland of Los Angeles.

Mr. Davidson attributes his success to the selling merit of Mutt and Jeff and to his intimate acquaintance with the exhibitors of his district. He himself was an exhibitor before entering the sales department of the Cleveland exchange of the Fox organization. He is considered a most efficient salesman and is reported to be very popular with the exhibitors of his territory.

Demand for Realart Film Grows

Home Office and National Branches Report Big Contracts; Jensen-von Herberg Circuit Make Bookings

ACCORDING to the reports from the Realart Pictures Corporation, a heavy demand has set in for Realart products all over the country. In support of this assertion, Realart officials point to the large number of contracts reported to have piled up in the office of Lewis S. Knisskern, supervisor of contracts. Moreover, the branch managers located in various parts of the nation are said to have informed the home office of the heavy demands made upon them for prints of the Realart pictures.

The Realart announcement declares that "all the big strings of theatres in the country have signed from two or three to 26 houses for Realart first runs, insuring showings in all the larger cities of the country. In the smaller cities and theatres the demand for star productions and features is reported to be unprecedented," continues the report.

Among the new contracts announced this week are those of the Jensen-von Herberg circuit of theatres, which insures Realart showings, it is said, in first run houses in the largest four cities of Washington, Oregon and Montana. In Seattle Mr. von Herberg has the Liberty, Coliseum, Strand and Mission Theatres; while his partner, Claude Jensen, at Portland, Oregon, operates the Columbia, Liberty, Majestic and Peoples houses. In addition to these theatres the Jensen-von Herberg chain includes the Columbia, Rialto and Victory Theatres in Tacoma, Wash., and the Rialto and Peoples in Butte, Montana.

Pioneer Reports Brisk Business

Subjects Handled Get Wide Bookings; Grace Davidson Well Along on New Production

UNDER the direction of Charles T. Horan, Grace Davison and her company, which includes Montague Love and Stuart Holmes, are now in their second week of production work at the Plimpton Studios on the outskirts of New York City.

In the making of this picture no time limit was placed upon Director Horan. Work is proceeding, and it is expected that several weeks will elapse before finishing touches are put upon the production. Details of the story of the new picture are being kept a secret; even the force at the Pioneer Headquarters have yet to learn particulars concerning it.

The Pioneer Exchanges at New York and Buffalo both report that during the past two weeks business has taken a remarkable leap upward. With "The Unpardonable Sin," Walthall in "The Boomerang" and "The Long Arm of Mannister," booked up solid for weeks ahead, and advance bookings on "The Sins of the Children" and Grace Davison in "Atonement" breaking all previous records, the prospect is extremely bright.

On December first "Baseball and Bloomers," the initial chapter of the Facts and Follies series, will make its bow to the general public. These pictures are to be released at weekly intervals. The first sixteen are ready for release, and the Facts and Follies Company is now working in Florida under the direction of Wray Phlsioc.

Another offering which is to receive its first showing in the New York and New Jersey territory is the fifteenth episode serial, "The Lurking Peril," in which George Larkin and Anna Luther Play the stellar roles. This will be ready for release about December 10th.

Arthur F. Beck, president of Artco Productions, Inc., and of Beck Productions, Inc., has bought from Augustus Thomas the picture rights to "The Harvest Moon" which was one of the most successful of the Thomas offerings.

Universal Hears From Far East

Film Expedition Reported to Have Secured Interesting Views of Siam; at Present in Borneo

CARL LAEMMLE was recently the recipient of two letters from Edward Laemmle and W. F. Adler who are in charge of the Universal expedition to the Far East. The epistles contained interesting narratives of the experiences of the two men, it is said, and informed as to the accomplishments of the expedition in the way of securing film material.

Many intimate scenes and incidents relative to the life of the Laos, the natives of Northern Siam, are said to have been secured. The two explorers and photographers have been hob-nobbing with Siamese royalty. The Prince Kom Pang Pet, brother to the King of Siam and Minister of Railways, accorded them a reception and placed at their disposal many natives and much equipment with which to make a jungle trip that had been planned.

The picture of a tiger hunt is expected to make two good fascinating reels of film, according to the letter. The film is being sent to the Universal home office in New York under heavy guard. Mr. Adler was reported to have been attacked by a tiger during this hunting trip. The letters received this week stated that Mr. Adler escaped with a slight injury and that the pictures taken actually show the attack. The hunt was staged in the country of Siam.

One of the scenes obtained was that of the Siamese Monkey Theatre. A group of traveling monkeys who act a Siamese drama in full make up and costume were photographed. According to Mr. Adler, the animation was perfect and the reel will probably create a sensation as a comedy.

The letters received were written from Singapore where the two men had returned from the Siam country. They expected to sail within a few days for Borneo where they would explore the Malanau River, noted for its savage tribe of head-hunters.

Irish Feature Warmly Welcomed

Spectators at First Showing of "For the Freedom of Ireland" Enthusiastic at Results

IT is a curious happening in connection with the initial showing of the new patriotic picture, "For the Freedom of Ireland," which took place at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on Monday evening, November 10th, that no one connected with the moving-picture industry was invited to see the picture.

The showing was exclusively for the friends of Ireland, and, it is said, they literally packed that big house to the extent of over 2,500 persons. The film had been assembled only for purposes of continuity, one reason for this being that in this shape it afforded the audience an opportunity to see all the noted people connected with the production, including such men as Eamon DeValera, president of the Republic of Ireland, former Governor Edward F. Dunne of Illinois, Frank P. Walsh, Chairman of the Irish Commission, and Colonel Donovan. Even in its unfinished condition the picture evoked much commendation, it is reported, and aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

"For the Freedom of Ireland" will be completed in its entirety at the Los Angeles studios of the Capital Film Co., where on November 19th President Eamon De Valera will go to pose for a series of special pictures which will form the conclusion of the Irish production, thus giving the logical sequence to the absorbing narrative of his escape from Irish prisons and British bayonets.

Pathe Issues "Dawn" Nov. 30

This Second Blackton Production, it is Predicted, Will Outstrip First as a Box-Office Attraction

WITH the success of "The Moonshine Trail" as the basis of its predictions, Pathe claims that "Dawn," second of the new series of J. Stuart Blackton productions, will be the biggest winner of the film pioneer's career. There is every reason for this forecast, for the advance bookings on the picture, which headlines the Pathe releases for the week of November 30th, have attained great proportions, it is claimed.

"Dawn" was adapted from Eleanor Porter's novel, and is said to possess all the human elements and pleasing notes struck by the same author's "Pollyanna." Houghton, Mifflin and Company, publishers of "Dawn," assert it is one of the biggest sellers they have handled in several years. The story permitted Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, co-stars of the production, to appear at their best, the Pathe officials report.

"Dawn" is represented as a story with an appeal for every class. One of the greatest recommendations of the production is that Commodore Blackton filmed it exactly as it was written by Miss Porter. It is claimed that the artistic nature of the attraction places it in a category even above a majority of previous Blackton photoplays, which, regardless of all other criticisms, have been noted for their fineness and thorough human and artistic feeling.

A nation-wide campaign on behalf of "Dawn" will be promoted by the publishers of the novel, in conjunction with the release of the Blackton picture. Every book store handling the Houghton, Mifflin product will be asked by the publishers to cooperate with exhibitors showing "Dawn." Pathe is supporting the offering with the customery aggressive publicity campaign, according to reports.

Theme of Fox Feature is Set to Music; Has Special Ad Values

The Fox Film Corporation announces that its production "Should a Husband Forgive?" has lent its title and theme to a new musical composition, which has been published in attractive dress by Jerome H. Remick & Co., and is being widely circulated by this popular music house.

The cover design is an exact reproduction of the illustration carried on one of the three-sheet posters published by Fox Film Corporation for the exploitation of the picture. This feature is felt by Fox officials to be a notable one, in view of the combined advertising values offered by the poster illustration and that on the cover of the song, on sale in all music and book stores. The words and music of "Should a Husband Forgive?" are the collaborated work of Herman Holland and George Rupert.

In "Should a Husband Forgive?" Miriam Cooper is seen in the leading female role. In the cast with Miss Cooper are Vincent Coleman, the handsome leading man; Mrs. James K. Hackett, Eric Mayne, Lyster Chambers, Percy Standing, Charles Craig, Martha Mansfield, James Marcus, Johnny Ries and Tom Brooke.

The educational influence of newspaper editorials and columnists' views, has been extended to the screen in Pathe's release, "Topics of the Day," which is now recognized as a high class, popular program feature. Pithy paragraphs, both witty and timely, selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest, are now being shown and have been accorded a most welcome reception by motion picture and vaudeville audiences. The Palace Theatre in New York City is showing "Topics of the Day" as a special attraction, it is said, and they have proved so entertaining that they have been added as a special feature in the Keith theatres throughout the country according to reports.

A special Victory Loan supplement was recently prepared for the Canadian Victory Loan Drive, now in progress, and by this medium the drive was given wide publicity throughout the Dominion. Nathan Hirsh Announces Release of "Mother Love and the Law"

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, 729 7th avenue, New York City, announces what is characterized as the most sensational court case ever screened, "Mother Love and the Law," based on the famous Dolly Matters case that occurred in Chicago, Ill. The production has been directed by George Seigmann. The scenario has been prepared by A. O. C. Lund, well-known in films as a scenarioist and photoplaywright.

In offering this production, Mr. Hirsh feels that a story with such a thorough and consistent amount of human interest will appeal to all classes of picture patrons. It is represented as a real true life story of a most sensational case. Furthermore the very fact that it offers Dolly Matters, herself, as the star, will make it a top-notch money-making attraction for the motion-picture exhibitor, declare the Aywon officials.

To aid the exhibitor in putting the picture over, Mr. Hirsh has prepared three, six and twenty-four sheets, that are said to be lavish, attractive and portray the deep heart appeal in the story to perfection. Advance slides, 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 lobby-display photographs, and electros all have been made with the one point in mind to be of service to the exhibitor, according to reports.

Long Runs the Rule on "Gay Old Dog," Pathe Reports

Hailed everywhere by critics, exhibitors and the public as heart epic, and one of the best produced photoplays of the year, Hobart Henley's, "The Gay Old Dog," starring John Cumberland of stage fame, is establishing an enviable record, according to reports from Pathe. Exhibitors, who never booked a picture for more than three or four days, are giving full week stays to "The Gay Old Gog," which provides the most valuable avenues of exploitation.

F. G. Heller, manager of the Starland Theatre, Anderson, Ind., paid the highest tribute to the production when he booked it for a ten-day run immediately after he had seen it projected.

Goldwyn Buys an O. Henry Story To Star Jack Pickford In

One of the best O. Henry's short stories, "Double-Dyed Deceiver," has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for Jack Pickford, and will be placed in production as soon as he has completed "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," by John Fox, Jr., on which he is now working at the Culver City Studios. "Double-Dyed Deceiver" is considered a motion picture "find," in that it supplies an abundance of dramatic action centering around a character said to be ideally suited to the age and personality of Pickford.

The plot of the story is thought by the Goldwyn officials to be full enough to assure five reels of the most spirited sort of action with a typical O. Henry surprise climax for a wind-up.

First National Has Strong List

Releases For Next Two Months Will Include Important Productions of Some Leading Stars

BETWEEN November 17 and January 26, First National Exhibitors' Circuit will release six attractions of importance, including the third Mary Pickford feature from her own studios and a D. W. Griffith special production.

"Heart O' The Hills," starring Mary Pickford, will be released on November 17, affording exhibitors excellent opportunity for booking it as a Thanksgiving week or Christmas week feature.

Probably one of the strongest society dramas to be published this fall is "The Beauty Market," starring Katherine MacDonald. This production shows the beautiful star at her best and affords her ample opportunity for the display of her histrionic talent. Its advance bookings are said to have already exceeded those of "The Thunderbolt," her initial starring release through First National. The release date of this feature is December 1.

What is described as unquestionably the most ambitious of the Anita Stewart productions to date is "In Old Kentucky," the famous American racing classic, directed personally by Marshal Neilan. This production will be ready for release by December 15. It is said to abound with an unusual amount of local color obtained by establishing an entire production force in the heart of the Kentucky mountains.

December 22 has been set as the release date for Charlie Chaplin's reported fourth "million-dollar production" through First National. A drastic departure from the subtle comedy of "Sunnyside" and other releases is made in this attraction, according to reports.

On December 29, D. W. Griffith's initial special attraction for First National, entitled "The Greatest Question?" will be released. This attraction provides exhibitors, it is claimed "with unprecedented exploitation material in addition to the work of the master-director." Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett and other well known Griffith players are in the cast.

"Evangeline" Scoring Heavily

Fox Film Reports That Two More Evidences of Public Approval Have Reached Home Offices

THE Fox Film Corporation announces that two more testimonials of the wide-spread popularity of the Fox feature, "Evangeline," have been received recently at the home office of the corporation. The first consists of a telegram from Frank T. Buhler of the Stanley Company in Philadelphia in which the feature is made the subject of great praise. "This picture should be the pride of the industry. Newspapers acclaim it most wonderful attraction shown in Philadelphia for years," reads the telegram in part.

The Fox report further states that despite the simple character of the Stanley Theatre front during the week's run of the picture — the report declares that the theatre's announcement of the feature consisted in merely an electric-letter display, reading "William Fox presents 'Evangeline'" — the house "was crowded to the doors." The management is reported to have asked for an immediate extension, but the heavy demand on the prints in circulation made an extension of the date on the rental period impossible at this time. However, Mr. Buhler has arranged to book the picture for the entire circuit of theatres under the management of his concern, according to the Fox report.

The second testimonial of appreciation is reported to have come from the National Juvenile Motion-Pictures League with headquarters at the Hotel Belleclaire, New York City. At a joint meeting of the board of the association an endorsement of the Fox production was unanimously adopted, according to the report from the Fox Film.

This announcement was made this week by Robertson-Cole, following receipt of a telegram from W. J. Connery, acting for the Haworth concern.

This taking over of the Griffith establishment is the outcome of the increased demand made by Robertson-Cole exhibitors for more Haworth pictures. Many small studios could have been leased, but the Haworth producers promised the Robertson-Cole Company to get the best in California. From now on the Griffith studios will be utilized for productions for the Robertson-Cole Company.

Already the picture has met with much approval in several Broadway houses in New York, including Loew's New York, Circle, Eighty-sixth Street and Forty-second Street theatres. According to the Fox organization, "Sacred Silence" has been given more than 750 performances in the metropolis alone; while in Brooklyn at the Halsey Theatre, one of the B. F. Keith Circuit, it played to large audiences for a half-week.

Ohio and Michigan Bookings for "Erstwhile Susan" Are Heavy

The enthusiasm displayed by Michigan exhibitors, according to Neil Kingsley, Realart's manager at Detroit, augurs well for the reception Constance Binney's first Realart picture, "Erstwhile Susan," will receive as soon as it is released. Miss Binney opened at the Shubert-Garrick in Detroit on Sunday, November 9th, in "39 East," the Rachel Crothers play which is said to be a sensation on the road. The release to the Michigan houses of "Erstwhile Susan," following immediately upon Miss Binney's personal appearance in "39 East," and the enthusiasm and prestige created by the Crothers play, is expected to react most favorably upon the box-office wherever her initial Realart picture is screened.

"Erstwhile Susan" opened at the Stillman Theatre in Cleveland on the 9th, following Miss Binney's personal appearance there the previous week in the Crothers play. James B. Reilly, Realart's Cleveland manager, reports that his territory is booked practically solid and predicts that the reception "Erstwhile Susan" received at the Stillman, will be duplicated wherever Miss Binney's picture is to be shown.

Alice Joyce Is Busy Player

Action and Then More Action is Schedule Being Followed by Actress For Close of Year

WITH one production nearing release, another completed and being assembled, and a third well in the making, Alice Joyce is ending up the present year with plenty of action.

"The Vengeance of Durand" will be the next Alice Joyce special production to be shown, coming the latter part of this month, it is said. This is the photoplay adapted from Rex Beach's story by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester. It had a pre-release showing at the B. F. Moss Broadway Theatre where it was accepted as one of the best features Miss Joyce has made under the direction of Vitagraph. Tom Terriss directed the picture. The bookings are said to be heavy.

"Slaves of Pride" was completed about three weeks ago so far as the camera work is concerned. This is an adaptation by William B. Courtney of a successful novel and was directed by George Terwilliger. Miss Joyce has the support of an excellent company including Percy Marmont, who is again Miss Joyce's leading man, Louise Beaudet, Tampler Saxe, G. V. Seyffertitz and Charles A. Stevenson. It will be released early in the New Year.

"The Sporting Duchess," the famous Drury Lane spectacle on which Miss Joyce is now at work, will be one of the most pretentious productions made by Vitagraph in several months. Miss Joyce and her supporting company have spent three weeks in the vicinity of Stamford, Conn., and Rye, N. Y., making some of the outdoor scenes. This week the company will go to the Little Belmont race track, on Long Island, where there is a turf track, and where the race scenes will be made. It is stated that hundreds of extra people will be used in these scenes. From there the company will go to the vicinity of Upper Montclair, N. J., where additional outdoor scenes will be made.

To Push Non-Theatrical Films

Famous Players Organize Campaign in Bay State to Show Worth of Film in Non-Theatrical Field

IT is stated that within the next few weeks an intensive campaign will be initiated in every city, town and village of Massachusetts by the entire executive staff of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the adequate showing of better motion pictures in the non-theatrical field. Church organizations, women's societies, school boards, commercial clubs, fraternal organizations and associations of every description which have evidenced a desire to utilize the motion picture will be visited. The staff to conduct the campaign will include: David K. Niles, general manager Non-Theatrical Distribution Department; Rev. Dr. Chester C. Marshall, editor of religious films; Miss Rose Tapley, manager of the club and social service section; Edward Lipkin, managing editor, recreational section, and Carl H. Carson, managing editor of the pedagogical section.

Primarily, the campaign is intended to develop the constructive side of motion pictures and to evidence their potency as a means of instilling religious precepts, of furnishing educational knowledge and of inspiring the fundamentals of Americanism. It aims to encourge constructive commendation of motion pictures rather than legal criticism and to demonstrate the power of the screen for good.

Any further queries, Mr. Niles has announced, should be addressed to the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange at 8 Shawmut street, Boston, where they will receive his attention. Requests for a speaker from the Non-Theatrical Department during the campaign should be despatched to this address. A special effort will be made to comply with the numerous requests which have come from women's clubs of Massachusetts for a speaker.

United Announces Florence Reed in "The Eternal Mother"

FLORENCE REED'S next appearance in the silent drama will be in the United Picture Theatres of America release, "The Eternal Mother."

Jere Austen, formerly leading man for Pauline Frederick, is seen in the role of the young husband. He does full justice to the part. Gareth Hughes plays the part of a young fellow of the East Side, a chap that is lovable and far above his surroundings. Hughes, as usual, seems to have grasped the idea of the role superbly and gives a fine performance.

"The Eternal Mother" has been given a fine production. It was filmed by Tribune Productions under the direction of Will Davis. The six reel feature will be released by United Picture Theatres of America in the very near future.

Claims Northwest Wants Pathe

F. C. Quimby Reports Pathe Films to be Popular in That Section; Lloyd Comedies Being Well Received

FRED C. QUIMBY, Director of Exchanges, has reached the Pacific northwest on his tour of the country in the interests of Pathe. In a wire received last week by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager, Mr. Quimby waxed enthusisatic over the motion picture situation.

During his stay in Chicago and Minneapolis, Mr. Quimby met practically every prominent exhibitor in that territory, it is said, and learned of the cordial feeling entertained by them for the new type of feature productions Pathe is now releasing. Such pictures, says he, as "The Thirteenth Chair," "The World Aflame," "The Gay Old Dog," "Oh Boy," "The Virtuous Model," "The Moonshine Trail," "Twin Pawns" and "A Woman of Pleasure" are meeting with the warm approval of the exhibitors.

In Seattle, Mr. Quimby is to meet "Jim Clemmer, the well-known exhibitor of the Northwest, who has been having great success with Pathe features and serials, it is asserted. The Clemmer Theatre in Seattle recently played "Oh Boy," Albert Capellani's most successful feature, and after the week's run Mr. Clemmer commented upon it as follows: "'Oh Boy' went over big and far exceeded the average weekly gross business."

Commenting upon the reception tendered by the new Harold Lloyd $100,000 comedies, Mr. Quimby wired Mr. Prunet as follows: "Lloyds going great everywhere. In Chicago, we have booked every important house. Bigger prices and longer runs for new Lloyds than are being accoded any two-reel comedies.

Mr. Quimby will be on the road for another three weeks. This trip, the second he has made to the Pacific coast within the last six months, has been productive of every result he had hoped to attain, it is stated.

Gouverneur Morris Tale in Film

"The Penalty" Chosen as His First Story For Eminent Authors, Released by Goldwyn

A PHOTODRAMA based on Gouverneur Morris' novel, "The Penalty," will be the first production by this Eminent Author and the sixth in the series of Eminent Authors' Pictures produced by Goldwyn. "The Penalty" contains some amazing characters and situations and was published serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine and in book form by Scribners.

Samuel Goldwyn and Eugene Mullin, chief of the Editorial staff in the east, are looking for the best scenarist available to write the first continuity for "The Penalty." Gouverneur Morris will then take active part in the preparation of the script, the cast and the production, in accordance with the arrangement of Eminent Authors with the Goldwyn organization. The production will be made in the east as it is a picture of New York Life. It will follow Leroy Scott's production of "Partners of the Night" which Paul Scardon is directing. The director for "The Penalty" has not been named as yet.

In Barbara Ferris the author has pictured one of the most delightful girls of American fiction. In Blizzard, the legless begger, Gouverneur Morris gives to the screen an amazing figure, whose mysterious power and strange passion have not been equaled since Svengali appeared in the story of "Trilby." He would sit in the street by a hand-organ and a tin cup, while in his hat factory sat fifteen or twenty young girls plaiting straw hats. Blizzard was also a musical genius. He was in love with Barbara and haunted Washington square to see the young sculptress. Wilmoy Allen, son of wealth and apparently a gambler and a failure, also loved Barbara. Bubbles, the street Arab, lived to run her errands.

Realart Moves Into New Home

Move Into Luxurious Offices at 469 Fifth Avenue Made With But Little Confusion

REALART Pictures Corporation is "at home" in its new headquarters at 469 Fifth Avenue, New York.

President Arthur S. Kane and his cohorts moved over to Realart's permanent residence on Monday, November 10th, and despite the slight disorder attending the change, there were smiles everywhere.

Realart's new home is as well equipped and luxurious as one might expect of a motion picture company which has done things in this concern's masterful way. Realart occupies the entire fourth floor of the Winfield Building at Fortieth Street and Fifth Avenue, directly facing the New York Public Library. A formal opening probably will be announced later.

The New York Exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation will remain temporarily at 729 Seventh Avenue, where it will take over the office space left vacant by the removal of the administration departments. Later the exchange will take permanent quarters at 130 West Forty-sixth Street.

Lester W. Adler, Manager of the New York Exchange, who will be in charge of this end of Realart's operations announces that his personal staff will be expanded immediately in order to meet the increasing volume of business. This was impossible up to the present because of lack of space. Now, however, Mr. Adler will devote his time to organizing several new departments and developing those already in existence.

The first addition to Mr. Adler's staff is Miss Jeanette Berliner, who will supervise booking.

Mayer Fortunate in Selection of Waldemar Young, Scenarioist

One of the foundation stones of successful motion picture production is expert scenario writing. Without expert adaptation even the most famous and successful stories fall flat.

With the organization of the Chaplin-Mayer unit of the Louis B. Mayer studios, Mayer selected Waldemar Young as a member of an expert staff of scenario writers. Young's general knowledge of writing, his success as a newspaper man, his expertness as a dramatic critic, his reputation as a successful scenarioist and above all his reputation for thoroughness of detail caused his selection as author of the screen version of "The Inferior Sex," Mildred Harris Chaplin's first starring vehicle under her contract with Louis B. Mayer.

For ten years Young was noted as a critic on San Francisco's biggest dailies. Other years were spent in magazine and special writings and in the preparation of vaudeville sketches.

Arthur Jacobs Engages Marion Burton as Scenarioist

Following his expressed policy of supplying "the best talent for the best producers" in various departments of the motion picture industry, Arthur H. Jacobs has enlisted the services of G. Marion Burton, the well-known dramatic and screen writer.

Mrs. Burton rose to screen note with her first scenario, an adaptation of O. Henry's "The Unknown Quantity," which was hailed by the critics, both here and in London, as a screen classic. She has since written scenarios for Marguerite Clark, Constance Binney, Corrine Griffith, Gladys Leslie, Bessie Love, and Elaine Hammerstein.

Variety Marks W. H. Pictures

Comedy and Drama Reels Appear on Schedule Ready to be Released on the State Rights Market

W. H. Productions Co. announce that they will soon have ready to release on the State Rights market the following features:

"The Iron Strain" produced by Thomas H. Ince, featuring Dustin Farnum, Enid Markey and Louise Glaum. The exploitation for this production covers many interesting angles that will produce results at the box office, it is said.

Commencing in January, seven Olive Thomas features produced by Thomas H. Ince will be released at the rate of one a month, backed, according to reports, by a big publicity and advertising campaign.

In addition to the one-reel Charlie Chaplin special "Some Nerve," formerly entitled, "A Gentleman of Nerve," another one-reel Chaplin comedy reissue of equal quality, it is reported, and box office attraction will soon be ready for release, entitled "Lord Helpus." It will be put over in the same manner as "Some Nerve," there being a complete line of advertising matter consisting of posters, photos, press stories and cuts, it is stated.

There is also said to be a series of 18 special single-reel Keystone comedies, among which are seven Sydney Chaplins, now ready for marketing.

Exchangemen who are looking for something truly unique, something which will draw by its sensationalism, will find everything they are looking for, it is said, in "The Superman," a five-reel melodramatic production.

It is asserted that "Everybody's Business," and "The Lost Battalion," five- and six-reel specials respectively, are both creating tremendous interest and popularity in the territories already disposed of. This is due, according to the W. H. officials, to their high character and the splendid exploitation campaign backing them up.

Gladys Leslie on Next Vitagraph Vehicle "The Golden Shower"

With the release of her latest feature, "The Golden Shower," less than a month away Gladys Leslie is making rapid progress on "The Midnight Bridge," which will be her following picture. Her new Vitagraph offering, which is being filmed under the direction of William J. Humphrey, is based on a magazine story by Charles Stokes Wayne, and published as a magazine story under the title of "The Marriage of Little Jennie Sterling." Mr. Wayne wrote "The Winchester Woman," recently released by Vitagraph with Alice Joyce in the title role.

Miss Baker's lecture covered the entire subject from the selection of the story to the release of the picture, and also included a detailed treatment of the handling of titles, the illustrations of her points being selected from actual current releases of the Fox corporation.

At the request of the club, voiced through Mrs. Belle De Rivera, its president, the William Fox screen version of Longfellow's "Evangeline" was shown to the members as an illustration of distinctive production in both dramatic subject and titling of the story.

Defect in Wall of the New Fox Building Quickly Repaired

As a result of carelessness on the part of a workman, employed by the contractor who is erecting the studio and administration building for William Fox at Tenth avenue, 55th to 56th streets, part of the north wall of the structure was torn down last week and then reconstructed.

After William Fried, the building architect, detected the defect, an extra force of laborers, concrete men, bricklayers and carpenters were immediately detailed on the job. The braces were shifted and the wall torn away for some distance on either side of the crack. The removed portion was then rebuilt. This accident will not interfere with the time planned for occupancy of the building, it is said.

Undersea Picture Again Demonstrates Williamson Apparatus Value

Following the four previous films featuring submarine photography, comes "Girl of the Sea," which is predicted by those who have seen it at pre-release showings will meet with even greater success than the others. The latest offering, featuring the Williamson photographic apparatus by which these deep-water scenes are made, is conceded a triumph of Williamson genius, combining deep sea photography with exceptional scenic beauty and an engaging story, interpreted by a representative cast under skilled direction.

The story, supplied by E. Lloyd Sheldon, is laid in the tropical islands and the clear waters of the West Indies, and thrills in abundance keep the coveted animation well supplied.

In discussing the matter of his resignation, Mr. Eisenhardt said: "I am leaving Hallmark with the kindliest feeling possible. My connection with the concern has been one of the pleasantest periods of my career in the film business, and it is with a certain sense of regret that I sever such pleasant relations with Mr. Hall. From Heavy Drama to Love Theme Jumps Maurice Tourneur

There is apparently no end of resource that Maurice Tourneur has to call upon when he makes up his mind to "do a picture." Jumping from "darkness to daylight," so to speak, means nothing in the life of this noted producer, for he is as equally at home directing a scene of bloodthirsty pirates as he is in showing the leading man his idea of the gentle art of lovemaking.

Mr. Tourneur finished his latest production, "Treasure Island," a few days ago. In this picture there was little romance save the everlasting romance of the seas. In place of romance there are many thrills telling of the adventures of Jim Hawkins and his experiences with the desperate pirates.

But in the new picture, "Glory of Love," Tourneur is about to start, the lovers of the silver-sheet will find the theme of love abounding on every side.

Porter for the New York engagement of "The House Without Children," when the executive heads of the unions served notice that picture attractions would not be permitted to fill theatres closed by the actors' strike; since that time Broadway theatres have been at a premium. American Film Has Strong Cast

Interesting Character Studies are Found in "Eve in Exile," Cosmo Hamilton's Play

IN consonance with its new program of "big stories exclusively and big casts specially engaged for the single picture in hand," the cast selected by the American Film Company to support Charlotte Walker in the Cosmo Hamilton drama, "Eve in Exile," is one of really exceptional caliber. And it needed to be, for the play, while replete with action, presents a series of delicate character studies, worked out with all the charm and delightful incident for which Cosmo Hamilton is famed. They exact the utmost in mentality and technical skill from the players handling the interpretation.

Charlotte Walker, who is at present starring on the speaking stage in "Tea for Three," is the ideal embodiment of "Eve Ricardo" as visioned by the author. Miss Walker's interpretation of "Eve" adds new laurels to those she has already won in legitimate drama.

Playing opposite her is Wheeler Oakman, star in his own right and one of the most popular leading men of the screen. His is the role of "Paul Armitage," whom Hamilton describes as poet and dreamer; friend of children, animals and the flotsam and jetsam among human beings; a lover of birds, flowers, fairies and the sea; who, having done nothing until he is twenty-eight but store up impressions, has settled down to work as a writer and caught the fever of creation. Always unaffected and "believable," Wheeler Oakman's work in this attractive role will rank as one of the most finished performances of his career.

Thomas Santschi, who enjoys what is practically a corner on the "brute market" of Filmdom, has been assigned a part in "Eve in Exile" that is adapted to his screen personality. He figures as "John Sheen"—a morose, rather brutal man of middle age who rides hell for leather, rules his house with a rod of iron, drinks hard, and has no faith in men or women.

Melbourne MacDowell, Harvey Clark, Violet Palmer and Martha Mattox are outstanding in the cast for the finished manner in which they interpret their roles.

Cosmo Hamilton, who wrote the play; Lois Zellner, who made the adaptation; Burton George, who handled the megaphone; Dal Clawson, to whom the splendid photography is credited; the American Film Company, Inc., which made the production, and the cast entire, individually and collectively, are all said to have abundant reason to feel satisfied with the quality of this third offering in the "Flying A's" new series of super-feature productions.

Hodkinson's December Releases

A Benj. Hampton Production, a Drama Starring J. Kerrigan, and a New Leah Baird Play Announced

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the second Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors' production, "The Sagebrusher," by Emerson Hough for December pre-release engagements in the largest American cities. The Hodkinson report also includes announcement of the December releases of a J. Warren Kerrigan screen play, "The Lord Loves the Irish," and a Leah Baird production, entitled "The Capitol."

"The Sagebrusher," besides being a story of love and faith, is another strong cast production with Roy Stewart, Marguerite de la Motte, Noah Beery, Arthur Morrison, Betty Brice, Gordon Russell, E. N. Wallock, Thomas O'Brien and Aggie Herring. "The Sagebrusher" was directed by Edward Sloman, who supervised the production of "The Westerners."

Pre-release showings will be held in twenty or more of the country's largest cities for the second and third weeks in December, bookings already having been made as of these dates.

"The Lord Loves the Irish" is a lively comedy drama with a touch of melodrama. It is a Robert Brunton production and is directed by Ernest C. Warde, who supervised the production of the recent J. Warren Kerrigan pictures.

The, cast comprises Fritzie Brunette, James O. Barrows, Wedgwood Nowell, William Ellingford, Aggie Herring and the well-known character actor, Joseph J. Dowling. "The Lord Loves the Irish" is available for pre-release engagements in every part of the United States for December 14th and thereafter.

Leah Baird's third Augustus Thomas screen-play, previously announced as to title and cast, "The Capitol" is a tense emotional society drama of social and political Washington—a gripping interest-compelling story of a woman's fight for her husband and her honor. "The Capitol" is available for pre-release presentation in theatres for December 7th and thereafter.

First National Gets New Chaplin Comedy, "A Day's Pleasure"

"A Day's Pleasure," Charlie Chaplin's fourth production made for distribution by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been delivered to First National's executive offices, it is announced.

In this picture, for one of the few times since he has been on the screen, Chaplin appears as the father of two bouncing twins, the husband of a dimpled wife and the owner of a battered-and-bent automobile of popular make. The theme of the production follows closely on the though that often a day of recreation is the hardest day of the week.

The family journeys forth to the river where it joins a merry excursion. A rough voyage, a negro jazz band, hot-buttered pop-corn and a typical Charlie Chaplin fight are some of the incidents that are said to make this angle of "A Day's Pleasure," one of extreme delight for an audience.

United Fully in Exhibitor Hands

New Policy Announced by Berst Will Place Company's Control in Showman's Hands

AN important announcement coming from Mr. J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres of America, will bring into operation a plan United officials have had in mind for some time, and which will place the actual control and business policy of United in the hands of the exhibitors.

By this cooperative plan, United exhibitor stockholders in the various territories will elect an exhibitor committee, the chairman of this committee will represent his territory on the National Board of Directors of United, and in this way the exhibitors will have a voice and a voting power in all meetings of United, and so shape the policies of the company, be active in conducting its business affairs and work in a truly cooperative way to make United bigger than ever.

The local executive committees will operate in much the same manner as the famous Rotary Clubs.

In the statement just issued by Mr. Berst from the home office he has this to say in regard to the plans now being put into active operation:

"United is about to increase its Board of Directors to thirty-six. Thirty of these directors are to be selected from the different exchange centers according to their respective quotas.

"This increase of directors is in accordance with the plan to make United bigger and greater than it has ever been before. It is aimed to get exhibitor cooperation throughout the United States to the fullest extent by giving exhibitors the say, not alone in the operation of the company, but also by having some one in each territory who shall be representative of exhibitors' sentiment and thus keep the company in close touch with existing conditions.

"The selection of directors is to be made by the franchise holders in each territory. We do not desire to influence this selection. As a matter of fact the selection should be free, wide and open.

"For the purpose of cementing the relationship of our large body of exhibitor members and of exercising the power of cooperation locally as well as nationally, a local United Exhibitors Board of Trade, with headquarters in our local exchanges, will be formed. These boards will work along the same lines as the Rotary Clubs, which have done so much to build up business cooperation in other lines of industry. Meetings will he held once a month and the Boards are to be most active in the management of United.

"United's Cincinnati office has already formed one of these Boards of Trade. and the plan is working splendidly, as it places the individual exhibitor in the position the big circuits now occupy, for effective combination buying is the greatest power in this industry."

The above statement from Mr. Berst means that the United exhibitors will control absolutely the business policy of the organization.

Music Service for Real art Film

Dr. Reisenfeld Composes Settings for "Mystery of Yellow Room;" Helps to Exploit Picture

DR. HUGO REISENFELD, director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, has been commissioned by Isaac Wolper, President of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to furnish musical settings for the "Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production. Realart Pictures Corporation is having the music published and will distribute it as a part of the exhibitor service on this production.

The benefit to exhibitors of this plan was proved, it is said, at the Washington showing of the "Mystery of the Yellow Room," when the first compositions of Dr. Reisenfeld were tried out in conjunction with the screen showing. According to reports their incorporation into the performance, which Tom Moore staged at his Rialto Theatre in the capital city, substantially aided in making "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" the record-breaking production it was.

The use of the musical background has been developed by the alert exhibitors of the country to a highly artistic point, and in going a step farther in this direction Realart officials feel that they are materially assisting the exhibitor in getting the most out of a Realart presentation. The valuable custom of furnishing a set of musical cues to accompany motion pictures is to be made even more valuable to the exhibitor by the addition of original themes for each Mayflower special.

It is stated that Dr. Reisenfeld's musical themes will henceforth be made into cuts and printed in Realart's campaign books for exhibitors. This is said to be an entirely new departure in the make-up of these exhibitor aids and will contribute, according to Realart sponsors, to a better and superior showing of Realart productions. The plan of having original musical themes for Realart's special follows the company's early announced intention of cooperation and special service for exhibitors.

O'Brien Enjoys no Respite from Work Between Productions

Myron Selznick, a short time back, thought that his producing organization had established an unbeatable record for speed and efficiency, when Olive Thomas, finishing her fourth Selznick picture, "Out Yonder," on Thursday, began work on her fifth, "Out Of The Night," the following Monday. But now, according to reports, the Selznick studio staff has enabled Eugene O'Brien to beat that record. O'Brien, under the direction of William P. S. Earle, finished his third Selznick picture, "The Broken Melody," on a Friday and the next morning he had begun his fourth, "His Wife's Money," with Ralph Ince at the megaphone.

As soon as Mr. Bowles reaches Europe he will complete arrangements for elaborate productions of "Broken Blossoms" at leading theatres in Paris and London and when these campaigns are launched will establish branches in the other capitals and distributing centres of Europe and Asia. The Scandinavian countries and all of South America have been disposed of for Broken Blossoms." Negotiations will be completed this week for the sale of the entire Orient and other disposals of the Griffith production will follow in rapid order.

Mr. Bowles will also, for Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., handle the distribution for Europe and Asia of Mr. Griffith's other great success, "Intolerance."

A. George Smith, general manager, conducted negotiations for the International Agency for the foreign rights.

Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchanges, in Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee, announces the purchase, for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, of the Tyrad Feature, "The Red Viper." The "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" for November

"Shooting desert island stuff" for the coming Cecil B. DeMille production, "Male and Female," is to be the important feature of the new tenth issue of "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," announced by Vice-President E. W. Hammons for release in November through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

The sunny beaches of Santa Cruze—off the coast of California—provide the locations, while Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meigham, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts and Lila Lee are a few of those included in the line-up of players engaged in making M. DeMille's sliver-sheet adaptation of J. M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton."

Mrs. Charley Chaplin, Bessie Barriscale, Pauline Frederick, Eddie Polo and others of note will be "at home" for their admirers in the forthcoming reel. There will be a ramble through Hollywood gardens with Mildred Harris Chaplin and her Director; and, a little later on, various scenes of Pauline Frederick with her mother at home.

Must Not Hold Stop-Watch On The Efficient Continuity Writer

Eugene Mullin, scenario writer and editor who has just come East to head Goldwyn's scenario department in New York, in an interview on his arrival arraigned many of the present methods of continuity writing, summing up his conclusions in the declaration, "The continuity writer should have as much time on his script as the director is allowed when it is filmed."

"Too many producers have an idea that a five-reel continuity can be written in a week or two," said Mr. Mullin. "It is true that it is possible to set down in rotation a number of scenes sufficient to make a five-reel picture in that time, but there is more to genuine continuity-writing than finishing a certain number of scenes within a limited time. It is my experience that a script cannot be completed with deference to actual constructive ideas within less than four or five weeks."

"U" Plans District Publicity

Harry Rice Explains Plan Whereby There Will be Ten Key Cities; to Greatly Aid Exhibitor

WITHIN a year the theory of national publicity-exploitation service at the producers' expense, of which Tarkington Baker was a pioneer and perhaps the originator, has borne fruit.

Within a year the Universal publicity organization has grown from two men to 37 men. That in itself is sufficient proof that the idea was a worthy one. Recent comments in different trade publications have praised the idea and have asked the exhibitor to make use of this free service from the producer.

After a year's experimenting and investigation a new plan for the handling of Universal publicity has been announced by Harry Rice, Universal's publicity director. The plan will become effective within the next six weeks. As outlined the plan will create 10 district supervisors in the country, each with three to five assistants in the neighboring cities. All of the 10 supervisors will be in constant touch with the New York office.

Although the publicity-exploitation men will be under the supervision of the district supervisor each will receive direct from the New York office information and material the same as has been the custom in the past. The district manger will of course receive a similar copy, etc., and will instruct and advise his assistants as to placing the publicity.

Each of the 10 district managers will make a trip monthly over his entire territory making personal calls on newspaper offices and exhibitors. Exhibitors in each territory will be asked to call upon the Universal service man at any time for any purpose whether it be exploiting a production or selling tickets in the box office.

The time for impressing the newspaper editor, according to Mr. Rice, was never so ripe as it is now. Within the past year, investigation shows, more newspapers have adapted daily and bi-weekly columns devoted to pictures than in any year previous. The most conservative of newspapers have been compelled to heed the call of the exhibitor and producer. The picture art ranking as it does in industry to-day has beat down the barriers erected to films some 10 years ago when two-reel productions were the standard. To-day the reader of the newspaper wants to know what the picture folk are doing and editors have admitted that their circulation has increased two-fold after the installation of a picture page.

One of the duties of the Universal service men will be to propagate the idea of picture publicity and its value. To obtain the maximum amount of publicity in newspapers will be the creed of the Universal service men.

There will be 10 key cities, nine in the United States and one in Canada. With the exception of the Canada office each of the key cities will be related through the district manager to other cities in the same vicinity. The assistants to the district managers will be located in the branch city offices.

Following is a list of the key cities and their subsidiaries: San Francisco, supervising Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle; Denver, supervising Butte, Mont., and Salt Lake; Chicago, supervising Milwaukee and Indianapolis; St. Louis, supervising Oklahoma City and Kansas City; Minneapolis, Supervising Des Moines and Omaha; Cleveland, supervising Cincinnati, Detroit and Buffalo; Philadelphia, supervising Pittsburg; Charlotte, N. C., supervising Atlanta and Dallas, Tex.; New York, supervising Boston. Toronto will be the Canadian key city.

At the present time only three permanent district managers have been chosen. They are George DeKruif for Chicago, R. N. Engle for St. Louis, and J. A. Daly for Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Rice announces that Banks Winter of Milwaukee will be assigned in one of the territories

Aywon Has New Serial Ready

AN important announcement has been issued from the offices of Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, to the effect that there has been placed on the market a new serial which is entitled "$1,000,000 Reward." This serial which consists of 15 episodes of two reels each was made for the Aywon Film Corporation by the Grossman Pictures Corporation of Ithaca, New York.

The production is described as one with "breath-taking situations," and the Aywon officials feel that this fact coupled with the appeal of the story involved will result in its enthusiastic reception on the part of the motion-picture audiences. In addition this chapter picture has the advantage of featuring a popular screen artist in the leading feminine role, Miss Lillian Walker.

Understanding the real value of advertising for future success of serials, Mr Hirsh has arranged for a big national advertising campaign. Billboards and newspapers throughout New York and New Jersey will come in for their share of the advertising. The national advertising campaign will be of a thorough character, according to the announcement at hand, and every exhibitor who books this production will derive valuable assistance from the Aywon Film Corporation. The release date for the first appearance of this serial will be announced later.

Edwin Carewe has just completed for Pathe release, a powerful modern drama in seven reels, under the working title, "The Web of Lies," with Dolores Cassinelli as the star. It is the second feature in which he has directed the young star.

"Systematize, Progress" Slogan

Jesse Goldberg of Frohman Corporation Says Production End of Business is far Behind the Times

COMMENTING on an editorial which recently appeared in THE NEWS, and delving into further detail anent the lack of business system in production of pictures, Jesse L. Goldberg, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, last week wrote the following article:

"The process of stablizing production and distribution is a matter of time and experience and all forms of extravagance and the bitter experiences which the pioneers and progressive spirits encountered are but the natural evolutions that attend progress in every new created industry.

"As much time and forethought is given by executives to the eradication of waste and the saving of lost motion as to the formulation of policy with respect to the character and creation of productions themselves. The editorial of Mr. William A. Johnston in the Motion Picture News of November 15th, entitled 'Percentage is Coming,' is merely an expression of a progressive spirit and while one may properly disagree with the conclusions voiced in the editorial it nevertheless proves that to-day the brains of industry are striving toward a business-like, logical and systematic demonstration of production and distribution.

"But while theatres are operating at a minimum of expense and a maximum of profit, and while the distributing branch of producing organizations are striving toward the same end nevertheless the production branch of the industry has woefully failed to keep march with the progress of the distributing and exploiting agency.

"By this I mean that while books evidencing the cost of production may be kept with scrupulous accuracy yet there is lacking a check upon cost and a systematization of production expenditure. Studios are not receiving the maximum of endeavor with a minimum of expense.

"Now this may be but a natural and perfectly human situation under the circumstances. The director will order what he wants, the carpenter and the studio staff generally likewise, but do not sit and think 'where can we save,' and 'where can we do one thing better than another without adding to the cost of production.' Yet there is a solution. Industrial Democracy, or the establishment of a community of interest in the production of motion pictures, to my mind is the solution for the present exorbitant cost of production, and with this solution the Producer, Exchange and Theatre would realize a profit far in excess of present returns.

"By industrial democracy or community of interest I mean this. If the executive with the aid of competent assistants were to approximate in advance the cost of production setting a maximum sum and then dividing 50 per cent of any amount less than that cost among the producing staff and cost in the proportion that their salary bears to such 50 per cent. of the amount so saved in addition to their regular compensation, I vouchsafe the statement that cost of production would be reduced anywhere from 15 per cent to 50 per cent on each production. It is easy to recognize that this dividend to employees would amount to an astounding figure which would be in turn duplicated as an added profit to the producer or in turn could permit his productions to be booked at a reduced figure and yet net him a larger percentage of profit than he now realizes. By industrial democracy in the production of motion pictures I mean further that the destinies of productions should not be left alone in the hands of a production manager and the director but that everyone who has a hand in the making of the picture, from the carpenters and scenic artist, including the cameraman, property man, technical director and director, up to the executive in charge of production, should confer to the end that the knowledge of each may be utilized for the benefit of the whole.

"It seems and sounds like a simple solution of the high cost of production, and Mr. Johnston was right when he said, 'What we need in this business to-day above any other factor is — Constructionists.'

"We have to have them.

"That is just what is meant when it is often said that we lack enough big men."

Comments on Leonard Contract

Frank C. Hall of Hallmark Voices Enthusiasm over Prospects of Champion's Screen Success

FRANK C. HALL, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporations, in commenting on the Leonard-Hall-Ascher Enterprises, Inc., contract, signed last week which calls for the services of Benny Leonard, champion lightweight boxer of the world, to star in a 15 episode serial, to be produced and distributed throughout the world by Mr. Hall, expressed himself, in part, as follows:

"The outline of the story which will serve as the vehicle for the champion in his debut on the screen, calls for "locations" in 15 different cities, each city serving the background for an episode of the serial which will be 15 episodes of two reels each. This novel manner of production will afford the lightweight champion a publicity and advertising backing never before accorded a serial star.

"When we signed Leonard to the serial contract we placed much confidence in his ability to act and since we have seen him in tests made and run in private projection, all concerned have come to the conclusion that Benny is an actor as well as a fighter.

"In signing Benny Leonard as a star in a serial production, I believe that I have satisfied an insistent demand from the public to see the world's champion lightweight boxer in the role of a motion picture actor."

The power of imagination is well illustrated in the National Film Corporation's "Smiling Bill" Parsons' two-reel comedy "His Own Medicine," released by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, November 2nd.

Metro Will Resume Production in East; Expands Foreign Control

A policy of expansion for Metro Pictures Corporation, embracing a resumption of production in the East on the same large scale as now conducted in the West and the extension of activities to the developing forcign field, was announced recently by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc.

Production in the East will be resumed early in the coming spring. Metro has renewed its lease on its West Sixty-first street studios, overlooking Columbus Circle. Metro's new program which will mean no vital change in policy except in the extension, according to Mr. Rowland, of facilities to improve the quality of "fewer and better" pictures.

He has worked tirelessly to make United the powerful factor in the industry that it is to-day, and it is only because he feels the time is now ripe for him to enter other fields of endeavor that we have accepted his resignation."

Films Inc. Signs Miss Calvert

New Concern For First Time Gives Inkling of Plans; Eastern Production Planned

MISS CATHERINE CALVERT has left the forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be one of the stars of Films, Incorporated, the newest motion-picture producing corporation. Miss Calvert will be featured in this company's first super-photoplay, the production of which is in fact now under way.

Although Films, Incorporated, was chartered under the New York State laws nine months ago and its officers have been working out its ambitious program to the point of actual operation, the work has been done so quietly that this is the first announcement of its plans, in fact the first public announcement of the corporation's existence. While the company will specialize for a time in the making of big features with famous stars, produced by notable directors, its program for the coming year covers most branches of picture making, including comedies of an entirely new character.

Catherine Calvert's first production for Films, Incorporated, is an intensely interesting present day adventure romance by Captain Sabine W. Wood.

The officials of Films, Incorporated, are specialists in their respective lines.

William W. Young, president and general manager, in addition to his notable career as journalist in Chicago and New York and as editor and publisher of national magazines, has for many years been identified with the motion-picture industry in both the artistic and business ends. Among pictures he has produced personally is "Alice in Wonderland," a six-reel photoplay which is rated as the standard of its type.

Edward Marshall, chairman of the committee on production, is an international figure in journalism and literature. He has spent a busy life finding out what the public wants for its information and entertainment and supplying it, which should make his judgment in the selection of screen subjects invaluable. Few men have a wider acquaintance with famous novelists, playrights and literary men of all kinds both here and abroad.

Among the members of the board of directors of Films, Incorporated, is J. J. Flannery, secretary of the National Security Company of New York. The vice-president is S. Kantrowich, who for five years has been general manager of the Eskay Harris Feature Film Co., and is one of the better known men in the marketing end of the film business. Joseph J. Macdonald, secretary and treasurer, formerly in the banking business in Canada, has organized several large and successful companies in this country and recently has made a close study of the motion-picture industry, especially in the matter of applying modern efficiency methods to the various departments.

Films, Incorporated, is already planning a complete studio plant in the East, but in the meantime is fortunate in having the largest outdoor studio grounds on Manhattan Island.

Heavy Bidding on "Confession"

Joe Brandt Reports Exhibitor Interest Livened Following Boston Presentation

FOLLOWING its successful opening at Boston, where it opposed three of the industry's greatest stars as a box office attraction, "The Confession," latest production of the National Film Corporation, has been an object of interest to distributors.

Joe Brandt, general representative of the National, has already sold some of the important Eastern territory, and has received many offers from other sections. He thinks so much of the picture, which stars Henry Walthall in one of his most impressive roles, that he has not let a great deal of the territory go as yet.

The Boston press waxed enthusiastic over the production, all of them agreeing upon its artistic merit, and its originality of plot — original without spoiling the impressiveness and power of its theme. Indeed, one critic declared that it warranted comparison with only two other productions ever presented the public, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms." From the way it went over from the box office standpoint in Boston, the New York trade is ready to believe it.

George H. Davis, who with Brandt, is in charge of the sales and exploitation of the feature, has returned to New York and is receiving callers at the office of the National Film Corporation at 1600 Broadway. Mr. Davis made an extended trip through the Western States, during which time, of course, the importance and value of "The Confession" was not left unmentioned.

As an artistic feature production, "The Confession" makes its bid not only from the excellence of its cast, but from the perfection of its direction, settings and photography. As the first big production of the National, it was not allowed to leave the studio until the last detail had been attended to, and the editors had viewed it many times. Also, as the first production of this rapidly developing company, it was not released until it represented the standard insisted upon by its executives.

"The Confession" will be released for its premier New York performance within a short time, according to Brandt.

Alice Lake Signs Contract with Metro of Five Year Tenure

The Metro Pictures Corporation announces that Maxwell Karger recently closed a contract with Alice Lake, whereby the young actress has agreed to appear in the Screen Classics, Inc., productions exclusively for the next five years.

European Film Buyers Need Aid

Otherwise David Howells says American Exhibitor Will Pay More by Loss of Foreign Rentals

AMERICAN exhibitors soon will be obliged to pay higher rentals to make up the loss of income from foreign sales unless American producers and distributors go to the aid of European buyers and renters and assist them in solving the very serious problems which determine the future of American productions abroad, according to David P. Howells, who has just returned from a six months' trip of investigation in England, France, Ireland, Scotland, Russia, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden and Spain.

Existing conditions, he declares, are compelling foreign producers to speed up their plans for competition with American manufacturers, and unless a certain remedy is found to relieve the present situation, the foreign markets will be closed to pictures made in this country.

"And this would mean," he continues, "that the American producers will look to the American exhibitors to make up the deficits by paying higher rentals."

Mr. Howells' trip was made in behalf of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for whose productions, with the exception of the Chaplin comedies, his export firm of David P. Howells, Inc., is the foreign agency.

"The situation abroad is a menace to the future of American productions in Europe," said Mr. Howells. "Consider for a moment the conditions that exist. Productions that were released in this country two years ago, and which were sold in Europe at that time for cash, are just now being released there. The buyers, or renters there, who paid their money for them two years ago, have had to wait until now before they could realize any return of what they invested, and it will be another year before the rentals reach the volume that will give them a profit.

"Could American producers and distributors afford to wait two years to get back the money they spend for each production, and then tide themselves over for another year for the profits? If they could, I doubt that they would?

"But that is the condition abroad which is of first importance to the United States. European exhibitors have their programs booked solidly for 18 months in advance. Productions that are being sold in Europe to-day with American trade-marks, and for which the manufacturers here are receiving cash, will not be released over there for two years.

"The war is largely responsible. For two years the foreign renters did not receive any new American films. The consequence is that they are just 24 months behind American production. It cannot continue. The buyers and renters are going to exhaust their cash resources.

"The prices asked by American representatives of certain film concerns here are from 50 to 300 per cent higher than they were a year ago, and this increase, with the low rate of exchange, brings the cost of productions, in terms of foreign currency, to such a high point that it is becoming prohibitive.

"In France and England big producing enterprises are being launched, with the chief arguments to prospective investors the facts about the rates of money exchange between European countries and America which enables the foreign manufacturers now to compete on an qual cash basis with our producrs here.

"The Hellion" Selling Fast

Reports From Exhibitors in Many Big Centers Show Wide-Spread Interest in the Production

"THE HELLION," the American Film Company's recently released drama in which hypnotic power plays so important a part, is said to be selling at a fast pace in all sections of the country. It is stated that exhibitors everywhere are finding this picture to be a marked success.

John Keane, manager of the Band Box Theatre in Chicago, who has booked "The Hellion" for a seven-day run, says:

"There are few fans who will not respond to the fascination of a play in which occult power is featured. I am confident of a record-breaking week."

William Notes, manager of the Criterion Theatre in Washington, D. C., writes:

"With the unusual plot, the superb emotional acting, and the interesting chance 'The Hellion' offers for the most sensational exploitation, I am confident that this picture is going to hang up some new records for our box-office. I'm on for a three-day run!"

"The Hellion" has been booked for the Princess in Springfield, Ill. Kunz Brothers, managers of the house, have in preparation several startling features in connection with the screening of this thriller. In Chicago "The Hellion" is in great demand, the Strand, Owl, Avon, Prairie, Victoria, Archer, Halfield, Boulevard, Triangle and Pickford, being among the most recent additions to the list.

A. C. Adams, manager of the Olympic Theatre in Sioux Falls, S. D., has contracted for a seven-day run, and The Strand in Aberdeen, S. D., is showing "The Hellion" at an early date. In Brooklyn the popular Normandy, Amphion and Park Theatres will present this unusual drama, and in New York proper the City Hall Theatre has contracted for the film. The Cohoes Amusement Company, Cohoes, N. J., have also engaged "The Hellion" for an early date.

Tyrad Plans to Aid Exhibitor

Tyrad Pictures, Inc., announces through Matthias Radin, its president, the formation of a system that will benefit exhibitors interested in the Tyrad productions. Branches have been located in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

Doris Kenyon is star in "The Bandbox" a W. W. Hodkinson release.

Belgian Royalty See Pictures In The Making on the Ince Lot

When King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium visited Southern California last week one of their principal desires was to see motion pictures made, and they spent a great portion of the time they were in Los Angeles at the Thomas H. Ince Studios at Culver City, where a special program had been arranged for the entertainment of the royalty, under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince, who was in charge of the royal party from the time they arrived at the studio until they left.

The King and Queen saw Charles Ray make a number of scenes, under the direction of Jerome Storm, in an old-fashioned country barn erected at the studio; and watched Hobart Bosworth, under the direction of Irvin Willat, do several dives for the second Ince special release "Below the Surface," in a big tank at the studio along the edge of which a partially wrecked submarine had been constructed. Douglas MacLean and Doris May had their first opportunity to play before royalty and the camera at the same time in scenes for "Mary's Ankle," under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

Rev. C. C. Marshall Will Edit Non-Theatrical Films For Churches

Rev. Dr. Chester C. Marshall, pastor of St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, director of the Division of Stereopticans, Motion Pictures and Lectures of the Methodist Contenary Conservation Committee and for years an exponent of motion pictures in religious work, will edit films of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for use in Protestant churches, according to the announcement made jointly by Dr. Marshall and Famous Players-Lasky November 13.

Suggestions will be made by Dr. Marshall as to available films for Sunday night services with outlines of proposed sermons. Inquiries addressed to Dr. Marshall in care of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 485 Fifth avenue, are being forwarded to him.

Hollander's Store and Rose Room of Plaza "Shot" in "Skin Deep"

Among the interiors that will be seen in Hobart Henley's production of "Skin Deep" is the Rose Room of the Plaza Hotel, where five hundred persons, including, it is said, artists, actors and critics of note, gathered one night last week to be present during the "shooting" of a dinner scene for the picture.

Later, when Emmy and Patty, the principal characters of "Skin Deep," went on a shopping tour, over seventy employees of Hollander's establishment on Fifth Avenue became temporary photoplayers in several scenes "shot" for that production. Much to the surprise of the participants, after working for a few hours, they were summoned to the lunch room on the top floor where they found generous lunch-boxes from Mendel's restaurant.

Demand For "The Blue Bonnet" Maintains a High Pace

"The Blue Bonnet" continues to be held in high esteem among the big exhibitors, according to an announcement received from the Hodkinson office. The organization points to the reported "steady stream of contract bookings received at the Hodkinson home office" and also to the "many re-arrangements of schedules made by scores of first-run houses to give the Billie Rhodes production early playing dates."

Hodkinson managers have reported another banner week of business on "The Blue Bonnet" and they claim there is every indication that it will soon attain the high mark set for it by the producers, the National Film Corporation of America, and the Hodkinson organization.

Ad Service to Assist Buyers of The Hall Room Boy Comedies

In order to accommodate the demand of various state right buyers who are securing first runs in the theatres of the country for the Hall Room Boy Comedy series, Jack and Harry Cohen will, beginning this week, issue a complete advertising service in connection with each release. This will be inaugurated with the Hall-Room-Boys two-part comedy, entitled "Nothing but Nerve." A complete press sheet, including stories for newspapers and programs, as well as photos mats and cuts will be issued with each release.

Plans are now being made to carry also a series of advertisements in the newspapers throughout the country which publish regularly the cartoons of the Hall Room Boys, drawn by H. A. McGill.

Keanan Buel Finishes Hallmark Picture, Starring Anna Lehr

Keanan Buel has finished his first production for Frank G. Hall Famous Directors' Pictures. It is a screen version of an original story by J. L. Burke adapted and scenarized by John Glavey, starring Anna Lehr, who is supported by Ralph Kellard, John Charles, Frank J. Murdock, William Carr and Dorothy Walters.

Mr. Hall announces that the production, as yet untitled, will be released on the Famous Directors' Series the latter part of November or the first of December.

Warner Bros. Have Selig Serial

"The Lost City" Long Heralded Said to be Exceptional Thriller; on State Right Basis

THE mystery of the distribution rights of Colonel Selig's Animal Serial, "The Lost City," has at last been solved. Numerous reports have been in circulation that Lou's B. Mayer purchased from Col. Selig the world rights, but now it is authentically announced that the Warner Bros., after having paid what is said to be a record price for serials, have secured the American and Canadian distribution rights, the foreign rights being controlled by the Export and Import Co.

The serial which has been under production at the Selig Studio in California, is claimed to be the greatest of its kind ever made. Juanita Hansen is being Starred while George Cheseboro, Hector Doin and Frank Clark are in the support. The serial is being directed by E. A. Martin under the personal supervision of Colonel Selig. "The Lost City," which was written by Frederic Chapin, is a screen story of the jungles of darkest Africa. It deals with American explorers who arrive in Africa via aeroplane on a hunting expedition. They engage a slave trader to make preparations for their hunt in the unexplored jungle. Some slaves are brought in from a neighboring tribe. Among them is a beautiful white girl. One of the American explorers bribes his way into the stockade and learns that the white girl is a princess, her father being a king of the Lost City, which is inhabited by white men, far to the south.

She tells of her capture while out horseback riding with her sister straying beyond forbidden boundaries, against their father's wishes. Her sister is sent back with the demand that her father surrender his kingdom while Zoolah, the princess, is kept a hostage. She is sold to the various tribes until captured by an English ivory hunter who learns that she is a princess and schemes to force her into marriage so that he may obtain the treasures of the lost city. The American explorer who is in love with the princess endeavors to help her make her escape from the treacherous hands of the English ivory hunter. Wild animals figure all through the production. Lions, tigers and leopards are slain before the camera eye.

A canibal village is destroyed by a mad elephant on its rampageous tour of destruction. Many other scenes in animal life will be shown that have never before been seen on the screen.

According to the enthusiastic reports of those who have seen the first three episodes, which have just arrived in New York, it is in a class by itself for daredeviltry and thrills.

Juanita Hansen has many escapes and while only eight of the fifteen episodes are finished, four performers have already received serious injuries, which will give an idea of the dangers in making a picture with wild animals.

A tremendous advertising campaign is being planned which will be announced later.

The serial will be sold on a state right basis

Terriss Has Enviable Record

Vitagraph Director Has Achieved Noteworthy Results on Screen; Has Had Adventurous Career

THE career of Tom Terriss, if chronicled, would, according to reports, sound much like some of the stories that he has successfully transferred to the screen. He was born in London, and in his earlier days he sailed before the mast, figuring at one time, it is said, in a mutiny on the high seas. During this period of his life he traveled around the earth twice, touching at all the important ports on the globe. At another time he is said to have crossed the Sahara Desert with two friends and later to have written an account of their experiences, which appeared in serial form in Lord Northcliffe's Daily Mail under the title of "Three Men on a Wheel through Algeria."

On his return to London, he accepted a proposition to produce some of Charles Dickens' works on the stage, and appeared, it is said, in the leading theatres of the United Kingdom at the head of his own company. At the inception of the World Film Corporation, Mr. Terriss and his company were engaged to produce "Scrooge," "The Old Curiosity Shop," and "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" for that organization. Vitagraph next acquired the services of Mr. Terriss, and since his appointment to the directorial staff of that company he has turned out such successes as: "The Third Degree," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Climbers," and "The Vengeance of Durand."

Alice Joyce is the Vitagraph star with whom Mr. Terriss has been associated most often in his capacity as director of Vitagraph features. At the present time, however, he is engaged in producing "The Fortune Hunter" in which Earle Williams is being starred.

Edwin Carewe Directs Dolores Cassinelli in Pathe Feature

Edwin Carewe, who recently organized his own producing unit, makes his debut as a Pathe director, with the release of "The Right to Lie," a seven-reel feature, on November 16th. Dolores Cassinelli leads in this Pathe feature.

Exceptional selling aids are supplied by Pathe in connection with "The Right to Lie." The play is one that readily adapts itself to an unusual type of exploitation, and Pathe looks for wide awake exhibitors to take the fullest advantage of this fact.

The cast supporting Miss Cassinelli in this picture includes: Frank Mills, Joseph King, Warren Cook, Grace Reals, George Deneubourg, Claire Granville and Violet Read.

Goldwyn Holiday Presentations

Appropriate Tenor of Season in "Jinx," "Silver Horde" and Other Films on List

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation, according to the latest information received from the home office of that company, has prepared a list of unusually strong releases for the Christmas and New Year's holiday season. A number of the productions now nearing completion at the Culver City Studios will be ready for distribution at that time, including the picturization of Rex Beach's tremendously popular novel, "The Silver Horde," and the adaptation of Rupert Hughes' famous work, "The Cup of Fury," an Eminent Authors production.

Following the fall series of pictures, which still will be new to many exhibitors, Goldwyn plans to give exhibitors more surefire box office attractions that will assure the success of full Goldwyn Weeks covering the holiday period. The salesmen in the twenty-two exchanges, who for the past two months have been making a drive for Goldwyn Weeks with remarkable results, are renewing their efforts for extended bookings on the strength of the pictures now in prospect.

It is recognized that children are a particularly important factor in Christmas holiday entertainment and that there is no time during the year when an exhibitor has a better opportunity to clean up on his matinee business, if he secures the right sort of a picture. With this fact in view, Goldwyn salesmen are making a special drive on "Jinx," the new Mabel Normand production, that has been called by experienced showmen, "the best matinee picture ever screened." Though not limited in its appeal to any particular type of audience, it is among the comparatively few photoplays that are bound to delight a gathering of youngsters as well as their elders. Exhibitors already are planning special Saturday morning presentations of "Jinx" for club and school audiences.

The phenomenal popularity of Rex Beach pictures, the latest one, "The Girl From Outside," having eclipsed at first run houses even the records made by earlier Beach releases, has caused exhibitors to await with considerable expectancy the coming of "The Silver Horde," judging from the number of letters of inquiry received at the Goldwyn office.

"Jubilo," a Will Rogers picture that bids fair to be even a greater hit than "Almost a Husband," is another Goldwyn production that will be in circulation in time for holiday booking. "Flame of the Desert," probably the most magnificent of all the Geraldine Farrar pictures, is an attraction that justifies extensive exploitation and an extended run, whereas Pauline Frederick in "The Loves of Letty," an adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play "Letty," is a sure box office asset.

In arranging the release of Goldwyn Pictures, particular care has been taken to provide variety in subject matter and appeal, so that an exhibitor looking for a full week's bookings may have no difficulty in providing sufficient contrast.

Paramount Releases for Nov. 16

DeMille's "Male and Female" and Ince's "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave" Ready

THE Paramount-Artcraft schedule for November 16th calls for the release on that date of Cecil B. DeMille's superspecial production, "Male and Female," and the first Thomas H. Ince production, in which Douglas MacLean and Doris May appear as co-stars, "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave."

The DeMille production enjoys unusual distinction for two reasons. It is the first of the plays of Sir J. M. Barrie to be presented as a screen feature—it is an adaptation of "The Admirable Crichton"—and it is declared to be the crowning achievement of Mr. DeMille's career; Jeanie Macpherson prepared the adaptation and Major Ian Hay Beith, lecturer and author, acted in an advisory capacity during the filming of the production.

Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson play the leading roles. Among the other members of the notable cast are: Lila Lee, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Robert Cain, Bebe Daniels, Mildred Reardon, Julia Faye, Maym Kelso, Edward Burns and Wesley Barry.

Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave," and it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, attracting so much attention that Mr. Ince seized upon it as a suitable story, it is said, in which to introduce his new stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May. Agnes Johnston wrote the scenario.

Mr. Ince provided his young stars with good support, the cast including Thomas Guise, Maxfield Stanley, Wade Botiler, Alfred Hollingsworth, N. Leinsky and Jack Nelson.

Rene Guissart of Tourneur Staff Wins Fame as a Camera Man

Associated with the Maurice Tourneur Productions in the capacity of cameraman is a young man who, it is reported, knows the business of motion-picture photography from tripod to film and everything between. He is Rene Guissart—a Frenchman by birth, an American by choice. For many years he was manager of the Reutlinger studios of Paris and later held the same position with the Felix Company. From there he went to the Eclair Company, and later came to America where he has risen to be one of the leading camera men of this country.

Before joining the Tourneur forces, Mr. Guissart, according to reports, was associated with D. W. Griffith and Allan Dwan. "Woman," "The Life Line," "The Broken Butterfly," "Victory," "The County Fair," and "Treasure Island" are some of the productions which he has photographed for Maurice Tourneur.

REALART CONTRACTS

Heavy Bookings Reported From Many Points

THE contract, announced last week by the Realart Pictures Corporation, which resulted in the extensive tie-up between the preceding organization and the Jensen-von-Herberg chain of picture-theatres in the Northwest, is now complete in all details, according to the report from the Realart offices.

Prominent among many other contracts announced by Realart this week are the well known Victoria Theatre at Rochester, N. Y., for which a contract was closed by H. E. Wilkinson, Realart manager at Buffalo, with Mr. Jack Farren, the proprietor. Among other contracts are: The Orpheum at Akron, Ohio, Bert Botzum, proprietor; the Dome Theatre at Youngstown, Ohio, Joseph Trunk, proprietor; and the Majestic Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, Max Stern, proprietor.

These Ohio contracts were closed by Realart's Cleveland manager, J. B. Reilly who announces that the recent visit of Constance Binney, one of the company's stars, in person with her stage company "39 East" has started a Realart boom in that part of the country.

Spanish Author Calls Pearl White Best Known Film Star in World

According to a Fox report at hand, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish novelist now visiting the United States, believes Pearl White is the most popular motion picture actress in the world. The writer paid this tribute to the star while on a visit to the Fort Lee Studios of Fox Film Corporation.

In the course of his tour of the studios, the author was asked for his opinion as to the leading actress of the screen. He is reported to have said: "I think Pearl White is far and away the most popular screen star in the world. In France and Spain—in fact, all over Europe and South America, Miss White is known by all persons who attend motion picture entertainments. The French and the Spanish consider her the ideal type of American girl; they are carried away with her dash and nerve; her spirited acting captivates them and her daring evokes their enthusiasm."

C. G. Sullivan, Ince Scenarioist, On World Tour for Material

According to an announcement just received from the Ince Studio in Culver City, C. Gardner Sullivan, the screen author, will leave New York about January 15 for a two years' tour of the world.

It is stated that Mr. Sullivan will not be limited to any particular itinerary, but will just "browse" around and drop in at whatever place he feels inclined. The purpose of his tour, it is announced, is that he may store up a supply of mental notes for future scenarios for Thomas H. Ince productions for Paramount-Artcraft. Mr. Sullivan will be accompanied on his tour by Mrs. Sullivan.

London Firm Buys Rights to the Clara Young Films for Abroad

Clozenberg Brothers of London purchased the rights to the Clara Kimball Young productions for Great Britain, this week, it is said. The transaction was consummated by one of the firm who made the trip here specially to buy these films. The Equity Company maintains that this deal knocks in the head the reports, said to be emanating from abroad, to the effect that there is in contemplation a boycott against American-made pictures.

Australia, Canada, South Africa and Egypt have also been sold to British buyers by the Equity Company for all the forthcoming Clara Kimball Young material.

A Contract Record that Counts

Robertson-Cole Releases Shown in Stretch of New York Houses; What Kirkpatrick Says

MOTION picture exhibitors throughout the world have their eyes focused on the pictures which are run in the Broadway motion picture houses. It is a well-known fact that if the people of the great city take kindly to a picture, then the smallest to the largest exhibitor in any part of the United States feels safe in booking the features which have made good from a box-office standpoint in New York City.

What is believed to be a record for any motion picture concern in New York City is heralded by Robertson-Cole in announcing that every motion picture house on Broadway from 59th street to 185th street, each and every week in the year play to capacity houses with at least one Robertson-Cole production.

Officials of the Robertson-Cole Company declare that this continued run in the best patronized temples of the silent drama is absolute proof that the Robertson-Cole pictures carry a 100 per cent attraction weight to every house that contracts for these features.

Those who have followed the best methods of playing to capacity houses are, it is pointed out, emphatic in their demand for stars in each and every production provided of course that the individual has proven box-office value. The men behind the Robertson-Cole releases believe that the record made by the Broadway houses and the continued box-office receipts of their productions is ample proof of their worth and that the Robertson-Cole stamp of approval has come to mean a great deal to these exhibitors.

"We are convinced that when a discriminating exhibitor takes the time to interest himself in Robertson-Cole productions we will get his business and encouragement," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, in discussing the unanimity of the Broadway exhibitors who are booking Robertson-Cole attractions. "We are endeavoring to make every production powerful enough in point of quality of production and story and star value to convince not alone the mass of exhibitors but even the most cautious and careful of them.

"It is a mighty hard task to please them all but we feel that if we do anything less than make the effort to please every exhibitor we will not be doing ourselves or the industry justice. I am sure that the productions for the coming year will come close to filling the bill. I believe we have an array of pictures which will be practically without exception, classed as A-1. The success of the productions with the exhibitors who are within a short distance of the home office convinces me that every showman in the country who looks into the schedule for the year will be with us. I say this because the exhibitor who succeeds on Broadway must be recognized as one of those of first importance in the business."

Celebration to Precede Film

Memorial Exercises in Capitol for Richard Harding Davis to Herald Picture "Soldiers of Fortune"

"THE biggest theatre in the world is going to have the biggest picture in the world," says Arthur S. Kane, President of Realart in announcing that "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, will be shown at the Capitol Theatre in New York, beginning November 23.

The Capitol publicity department, under the direction of Ben Atwell, is reported to be making elaborate plans for exploitation of "Soldiers of Fortune," including an affair which is asserted to be one of the biggest publicity stunts ever undertaken in connection with the presentation of a picture in New York. On the morning of Saturday, November 22, the Capitol Theatre will be thrown open to invited guests for Richard Harding Davis' Memorial exercises, according to the reports at hand.

It is planned to have five thousand Boy Scouts from the city stand at attention while Hope Harding Davis, daughter of the author, officially receives the dedication by Arthur Pryor and his band of the "Soldiers of Fortune March," composed especially by Mr. Pryor for Realart's photo-drama.

It is stated that the invitation list will include, besides the Boy Scouts, many freinds of the author of "Soldiers of Fortune." These comprise newspaper men, statesmen, business men, authors, dramatists and others prominent in the affairs of the world. Seats on the stage will be provided for a number of notables and for relatives of Mr. Davis, including his widow, Bessie McCoy Davis, and his five-year-old daughter, Hope.

"Soldiers of Fortune" has long been a literary classic in homes throughout the country. As a narrative of an American engineer whose adventures combine romance and danger, the novel makes a motion picture of universal appeal. In the opinion of many critics who have already seen a Washington presentation of this photoplay, Richard Harding Davis, were he alive to-day, would have only the highest praise for Allan Dwan's screen adaptation of "Soldiers of Fortune.

Earle Williams Finishes "When a Man Loves;" Now in East

Earle Williams' final picture of the year, and the last he completed at Vitagraph's West Coast studio, will be entitled "When a Man Loves," a picturesque story with some Japanese settings. Since finishing the picture Mr. Williams has come east to Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio where he is now busy on "The Fortune Hunter," a screen version of Winchell Smith's famous play. The latter will be ready for release early in the new year.

Courtlandt defeats the ex-prize-fighter and tells him to ask his daughter for an explanation. In putting away the gloves, Harrigan stumbles on Nora's marriage certificate and demands an explanation. Nora, meanwhile, learns the facts concerning the Italian singer. Nora, veiled, hides in the compartment in which Courtlandt is leaving and their reconciliation takes place on the train.

At Second Hand
By Hugh Kahler

Character of Story: Mystery melodrama.

Theme: Bank robberies.

Characters: Tom Kelsey, banker; Morley, a detective, Kelsey's body guard; Jerry Drayton, chief of detectives; Mildred Hayne, a woman of mystery; Johnson Addick, a banker; Gray, a butler.

The Plot: A shot is fired in the lobby of a theatre and Tom Kelsey, well known banker, declares that an attempt has been made to murder him. A powder-marked hole appears in his waistcoat and a bullet is found in his watch. The doors of the theatre are closed and a fruitless search is made for the assailant. A young woman congratulates Kelsey on his escape. She says she is Mildred Hayne, a stenographer in his bank. Kelsey attributes the attack to the Bank Gang. Several bank robberies have taken place and Kelsey has been active in offering rewards for the arrest of the thieves. This being the third attempt on his life, he has employed Morley as a personal body guard. Morley makes the acquaintance of Mildred Hayne and she eventually tells him that she is herself a detective. This relieves Morley's mind for Kelsey has said the shot was fired by a woman and Morley has become somewhat interested in the girl. Jerry Drayton, chief of the detectives, doubts that a bullet could be stopped by the watch. He goes to Kelsey and tells him that he has discovered the thief. Just then Morley arrives. As Kelsey offers Morley a cigar, there is a shot and Drayton drops dead. An open window in an alcove indicates that the assailant escaped through a building next door. Kelsey throws suspicion upon Johnson Addick, another banker, who collects odd weapons. The revolver used in the shooting at the theatre proves to be of an ancient pattern. Morley gets Addick to agree that if the thief is apprehended and the bankers are allowed to deal with him privately Addick will give Morely $50,000 to compensate him for losing the advertising such a capture would give him. Addick believes the thief to be someone in banking circles and consents to this. Morley sees Mildred Hayne going to Kelsey's house and is jealous and a little alarmed. He attempts to enter the house and is told Kelsey must not be disturbed. Morley enters by way of the building next door and hears Mildred Hayne dictate a confession which Kelsey signs, stating that he is the robber and that he fired a shot into his watch before going to the theatre and used a blank cartridge there; also he murdered Drayton by a mechanical contrivance operated by electricity. This because he knew Drayton had discovered his guilt. Miss Hayne agrees to let Kelsey go if he will turn over the loot to her. He agrees but manages to disarm her by throwing a pillow at her and then covers her with a gun. Morley comes in behind and covers Kelsey, disarms him and ties him up. The girl then goes to get the money from the safe. She returns, takes Morley unawares and ties him at the point of a gun. She, too, is a thief who robs robbers.

Locale: A New England city.

Picture High Lights: The element of surprise is well worked out in this story; a good effect can be obtained showing the banker's method of robbing his own banks under the eyes of his watchmen.

The Plot: Ben Carver and June, his wife, get home every morning just ahead of the milkman, and are seldom to be found there after the evening paper is delivered. Life is a round of restaurants. Pleasure being their business, they have many partners and see each other alone only when dressing to go out. Ben, while applying the hair dye to his raven locks on the eve of a party at The Blue Goose in the village, discovers that he is as tired as Rip Van Wynkle must have been when he lay down for his twenty-year nap. He wonders how long it will be before his youthful wife discovers that he is an 1875 model, badly in need of repair. As his wife comes in to be buttoned up the back, he hides the hair dye. His secret must be kept at all costs; June must not mate with December, or if she does, she must not discover it. So they are off to the party where June, as usual, is the life of the place, while Ben ignores his aching bones and decides that his idea of heaven is a place where a middle-aged man can sit in carpet slippers and drowse over his book. Ben notes with jealousy the youthful energy of Dode Blackman and his animated attentions to June. Going to get an ice for his wife, he surprises her looking at him with an expression of great disappointment. Then and there he resolves that she shall have her freedom and a chance to marry a younger man. Having told her good night on their arrival at home, he proceeds to pack his bag and write her a letter telling her that he has provided for her financially and that she can sue him for desertion — he cannot any longer keep the pace. On his way downstairs a board creaks. His wife calls to him and in his confusion he drops the bag which rolls to the foot of the stairs. He follows it. His wife assists him up the stairs and demands an explanation. He declares that he was going out for a walk. She rejects his story and takes him to her budoir, where he sees she has been working with some legal-looking documents. She accuses him of intending to desert her and says it will not be necessary since she has just signed a contract to return to the stage. Forgetting his own plan to catch the alimony special, he demands her reasons. She declares that she has been playing at youth as long as she can stand it — she is tired of jazz and longs to spend her evenings knitting socks, but since she is married to a man who cannot live without the bright lights, she will go back on the stage where the Actor's Equity Association will see that she gets eight hours' sleep if she has to quit her job to do it. She's getting old and she doesn't care who knows it. Explanations follow. Happy at last. Ben asks: "What is your real age, honey?" To which she replies indignantly: "None of your business!"

Picture High Lights: Good two reel comedy.

The Window at the White Cat
By Mary Roberts Rhinehart

Character of Story: Mystery story.

Theme: Politics.

Characters: Margery Fleming, the girl in the case; Allan Fleming, her father, a politican; Jack Knox, an attorney; Fred Knox, his brother; Edith Knox, Fred's wife; Letitia and Jane Maitland, Margery's aunts; Hunter, a detective; Harry Woldrop, Margery's fiance, secretary to Allan Fleming; Schwartz, political boss; Lightfoot, cashier; Ellen Butler.

The Plot: Jack Knox is visited at his offices by Margery Fleming who tells him that her father has mysteriously disappeared and has been missing for some days. He agrees to undertake the work of locating the missing man and employs a detective named Hunter on the case. He has hardly gone to work when he is summoned to the home of Margery's aunts, clients of his, and informed that part of a pearl necklace has been stolen. He is asked to stay at the house. During the night he hears someone endeavoring to enter and stealing downstairs into the vestibule is attacked. After a stiff fight he discovers that his assailant is Harry Woldrop, Fleming's secretary and Margery's fiance. Waldron declares he mistook Knox for a thief who had stolen his bag containing important papers; the bag having disappeared while he endeavored to open a window, having lost his key to the house. In the morning it is discovered that Aunt Jane has disappeared. She has apparently been abducted in the middle of the night. Suspicion points to Wardrop who is much agitated. A newspaper reporter leads Knox to The White Cat, a political club where the police never go, and Knox learns that Fleming has been in hiding here for some days. He goes upstairs to Fleming's room and sees Wardrop hasten out of the house. Fleming is found dead — shot through the forehead. Wardrop, returning, tells a confused tale and is put under guard but not under arrest. Margery goes to stay at the home of Jack's brother. Jack's sister-in-law, at the same time takes under her wing a widow, Ellen Butler, whose husband was ruined through the machinations of Fleming and Schwartz. It develops that Schwartz and Fleming have quarreled; that a large sum of money, a part of the state funds, could not be accounted for and that Fleming as treasurer had to make good. Wardrop now tells that he was sent to another city to raise money to cover the deficiency and that a part of the money was in the bag which he lost. In spite of every evidence that a murder has been done, the police endeavor to hush up the scandal and declare that Fleming committed suicide. Efforts to investigate the case are blocked by the police and the state authorities. Knox continues his investigations in spite of the opposition of the police. Watching The White Cat from a window in a warehouse across the street he sees Schwartz burning papers in the room where Fleming was killed. He sees a woman enter and endeavor to shoot Schwartz. The politician knocks aside her arm and the bullet is lodged in her body. This woman is Ellen Butler who admits that she killed Fleming in revenge for her husband's disgrace. Wardrop is cleared but has shown himself a coward and potential thief, so Margery turns from him to Knox

Locale: A middle Western city.

Picture High Lights: Good element of suspense; dramatic situations where disappearence of Aunt Jane is discovered and where body of Fleming is found; also encounter between Schwartz and Ellen Butler.

In and Out West Coast Studios

Famous Players—Lasky

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players-Lasky, is scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles, November 17th, for a stay of several weeks with Jesse L. Lasky at the producing studios of the company. Mr. Zukor has not been to the west coast for almost a year.

Plans provide that William D. Taylor, upon the completion of the Mary Miles Minter subject "Judy of Rogues Harbor," will spend two or three weeks editing "Huckleberry Finn" which was filmed several months ago. When this work is out of the way, Mr. Taylor will again direct Miss Minter in the Israel Zangwell play "Nurse Margery."

Charles Maigne is expected to arrive at the Lasky studio early in December to direct the filming of the Robert W. Chambers story "The Fighting Chance," which is to be a Paramount-Artcraft special.

C. B. de Mille, in addition to making the final scenes for "Why Change Your Wife" while in New York, will also make arrangements for his next picture, thus having a world of material to select from which is filed at the New York office. It is possible that some of the scenes for this forthcoming subject will be made in New York while the director general of Famous Players-Lasky is in the east.

Work of filming "The Bear Trap," sequel to "The Roaring Road," starring Wallace Reed, was started this week by Director Sam Wood. Theodore Roberts is the only important player so far cast for this production.

The recently published magazine story, "The Six Best Cellars," a modern comedy, is now being produced with Bryant Washburn as the star, and Wanda Hawley as the feminine lead. Donald Crisp is in charge of the direction.

Goldwyn Studio Notes

PLANS for the making of two reel pictures at the Goldwyn Studio were made known this week when it was announced that General Manager Abraham Lehr had engaged E. Mason Hopper to direct a series of two reel subjects adapted from the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" stories. Director Hopper is particularly well known and has a number of very excellent releases to his credit, his most recent being "When Bearcat Went Dry." He has been in vaudeville and directed pictures for the past five years.

The Goldwyn casting department has made a number of selections in the past week for important roles in forthcoming productions. Barbara Castelton, who has just completed an important role in "The Tower of Ivory," will take part in "Dangerous Days," appearing in the role of Audrey, and Frank Leigh will play the part of Rudolph, the German conspirator, in the same production. Doris Pawn is next to be seen as Florry in "The Strange Border" with Will Rogers. B. F. Blinn will be Applephwaite in "The Blooming Angel," being directed by Victor Schertzinger with Madge Kennedy as star, and Vera Lewis will play the part of Floss' aunt. Sidney Ainsworth has been selected for the role of Andy Lewis, Margaret Snow for Edna Crane and Emily Chichester will be seen as Harriet in "The Woman in Room 13," being directed by Frank Lloyd.

Special aviation picture has been made for Goldwyn in connection with the recent visit of the Federal Commission and the French Flying Mission, both of which are planning around-the-world derbies.

Universal Activities

TARKINGTON BAKER, general manager of the Universal film company, is again on the west coast, having returned to Universal City from New York, after spending less than a month in the eastern metropolis. The purpose of Mr. Baker's visit is not made known other than he went to get in very close touch with production activities. How long he will remain in the west is undetermined, he having stated that he may be here two days or two weeks or two months.

As to changes at Universal City as a result of his visit, there can be only conjectures, he having made no statement with respect to his intentions regarding production.

The recently inaugurated plan of all directors taking time off between productions in order to prepare themselves for the making of the next picture has been in effect a short time, and within the next two weeks new productions will be started by the directors who have been absent from their duties the allotted time. At the present time, production activities consist only of finishing the subjects which were started more than two months ago, with the exception of some of the shorter films.

Plans are now being considered respecting the making of the next Eddie Polo serial which is now in scenario form, and it may be that Universal officials will decide to send the Polo company to South America. Stories coming to Los Angeles are to the effect that Mr. Polo's trip to Europe for exterior scenes of a serial were highly successful for both himself and employers as the result of personal appearances at the larger theatres which netted a very large sum for the amount of time spent in the British Isles and on the continent.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH of the Vitagraph Company will arrive in Los Angeles, Monday, November 17th, to spend several weeks personally supervising the reconstruction, or enlargement of the Hollywood studios of his company. Plans have been made for additional stages and other necessary buildings. At the studio it is generally believed the producing activities will be doubled, and all of Vitagraph's activities in this respect will be centered at the studio.

William Duncan has but one or two weeks' work on the serial "Smashing Barriers," which he has directed and played the featured role of, and then he will begin the making of feature releases of five reels each, or more. At the present, Mr. Duncan is giving all his attention to finishing the serial, and has not permitted his curiosity to cause him to open the envelope which contains the script for his first feature. While no cast has been named to support the "out-of-door" star, it is expected that Edith Johnson, who has played with him in the past two serials, will continue as leading woman.

Along with the information concerning Duncan is the announcement that Joe Ryan, who has been the heavy in the serial now being finished by Duncan, and two others made by him, is now to be featured by Vitagraph in a serial. No other information concerning the new serial unit has been given out other than the story will be by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. This is being put in continuity form at this time.

The O. Henry tale, "The Call Loan," is being filmed by Director David Smith at the Vitagraph. This story, as the title indicates, is based upon banking methods and portrays the unfailing honesty of men in the cattle country. There will be no women in this picture, the honors being divided between five principals, with Jay Morley featured.

What Metro Is Doing

MITCHELL LEWIS is to be starred in Jack London stories by Metro, according to contracts made by President Richard Rowland and Maxwell Karger on Armistice Day. At least three of these films will be made, and the work of producing will be started not later than January first. The three books of the famous California author are, "A Daughter of the Snows," "Smoke Bellew" and "Burning Daylight." It is possible that a fourth subject, adapted from the novel "The Adventure" will also be filmed. Before beginning on the London pictures, Lewis will play in "King Spruce," by Holman Day, which is to be directed by Roy Clemens.

Mitchell Lewis has played out-of-door roles practically all of his screen career, and he is particularly talented for the characterization of Jack London's people.

Continuity for Nazimova's next film is almost ready for the director. It is being written by the Screen Classic star and her husband, Charles Bryant, and is an adaptation from the Frank Dandy novel, "The Heart of a Child."

Six pictures are nearing completion at the Metro plant. These include Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way" directed by Jack Dillon; Viola Dana in "The Willow Tree," directed by Henry Otto; May Allison in "The Walk-Offs," directed by Herbert Blache, and the two all-star cast melodramas, "Should a Woman Tell," directed by John Ince, and "The Best of Luck," directed by Ray Smallwood.

California weather played a joke on the nature fakers this week when Henry Otto was ready to direct a storm scene with wind fans, storm effects, etc., in readiness. It was just at this moment that a small hurricane came up and thereby made possible the saving of juice. The scene was for the Viola Dana subject, "The Willow Tree."

Thomas H. Ince Newsettes

IT is very evident that Thomas H. Ince has been looking into the future, for a number of young men players have been tried out at his studia in the past six months, or since it was publicly announced that Charles Ray would go to the First National early in 1920. It is believed it was Mr. Ince's intention to find someone who would be a worthy successor to Ray, who has been an Ince player for the past six years. Further indications of these plans on the part of Mr. Ince were made known this week in the announcement that Lloyd Hughes has been placed under a five-year contract and is to be starred. No date for the production of Hughes' first starring vehicle was given out. Hughes has played in a number of Ince subjects, and has been identified with Ince productions for the past six months.

C. Gardner Sullivan is to take a two-year vacation beginning January 15th and see the world. Thomas H. Ince believes that this will result in Mr. Sullivan, who has won the name of being the screen's most prolific and highest paid writer, writing a number of stories of unusual merit. He is to have the privilege of going any place his fancy dictates, and to write a story whenever he thinks he has a good one. The only plans that have been made to this time provide that Mr. Sullivan will go to New York in January, and from there will go to London. He will, no doubt, spend a few weeks in the British capital, but his plans beyond that are indefinite.

The Charles Ray Company now filming "Watch Out William," spent last week in Santa Barbara, and are now back at the studio making interior scenes. Winifred Westover is playing her first Ince lead opposite Mr. Ray.

Here and There

THE Bull's Eye Film Corporation has entered the serial department of the industry, and has begun the production of its first episode subject which has been given the title of "The Fatal Thirty." The story has been written in fifteen episodes by Grover Jones, and is said to depend upon suspense, dramatic action and humor, instead of stunt material. A cast which has John Heyes and Arbey Arley, has been selected, while others playing in the subject are Lillian West, Carl Stockdale, Marion Dunlop, Grace Gordon, Al Freemont, Will Rhino and Gus Leonard. Harry L. Haskins is director; Lee Lawson, technical director, and William C. Hyer, cameraman.

The first scenes for the serial are being made at a villge especially built at the head of Pacoima Canyon, about forty miles from Los Angeles, the settlement consisting largely of log cabins.

Henry B. Walthall has been re-engaged by the Mayflower Company to appear in another production under the direction of Allen Dwan, which will probably be "The Scoffer," recently purchased by the Mayflower Company through N. W. Aronson Exchange.

Maurice Tourneur has purchased the film rights of "The Glory of Love," a novel by Pan, through the N. W. Aronson Exhange.

Another story purchased by Tourneur is that titled, "The Great Redeemer," a western, which was written by H. H. Van Loan.

Jesse D. Hampton has selected "Simple Souls," for Blanche Sweet's next vehicle. This is spoken of as being an intensely interesting story by John Hasting Tourner, the picture rights of which were sought by several of the largest companies of the film industry. Work of filming this will be started as soon as the one on which the company is now at work, "The Deadlier Sex," by Bayard Veillers, is finished. It is expected the new Hampton studio at La Brea and Santa Monica boulevards, will be ready for use by the time the company is ready to begin filming.

The last scenes for "The House of a Thousand Candles" have been filmed and the Hampton scenario department will have the next H. B. Warner story ready for production within a few days. It is an adaptation from the William J. Locke novel, "The White Dove."

NOVEMBER 29, 1919 NEWS MORE NEWS

Weather Okay.

Looks like a convention soon.

Finis Fox has a new automobile.

Adolph Zukor is coming to town.

Albert E. Smith's coming to town.

Ben Patrick Schulbert is in town.

Walter E. Greene is coming to town.

Viola Dana has recovered from the measles.

May Allison has a pet monkey—just for scenes in "The Walk-Offs."

Roscoe Arbuckle and Lou Anger are going down to see the shows on Broadway.

Alice Lake did the job of assistant director this week—just to show her versatility.

June Mathis has become a porch climber. We can't tell the rest of it for fear the police would get after her.

A Kargerism: "She came in here with both fire and water in her eyes—and neither quenched nor dried the other."

H. H. Van Loan is longing for the day to come when he can go to New York and see how it looks with a dry atmosphere.

"The Tower of Ivory" Goldwyn Company which has been doing a lot of night work here of late has been dubbed 'the owl company.'

Enid Bennett has been having a vacation, and is trying to wear out the California pavement going about in her high-powered automobile.

Mary Pickford has concocted a mixture she has named the Pickford pudding, but inasmuch as it contains four eggs, Hokum staff is not interested in the recipe.

Now that Tom Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Mickey Neilan, Mack Sennett, Alan Dwan have said it's so, it looks like a new crop of exchange men will be needed next year.

Wallace Worsley has the "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" gang up on a sheep ranch near Victorville, and it may be said they are in search of the woolly atmosphere as well as the wild.

E. L. Smith has run a race with pretty near everbody around here in getting pinched. He first started to cut a notch on the steering wheel, and he's whittled the whole thing away.

Myrtle Stedman has been away from the film stages so long that her eyes are not accustomed to spot lights and artificial illumination of the present day as practiced by the nation's fourth industry.

Of course, Hokum cannot state definitely why Ben Schulberg and Walter Greene are snooping about our fair village; but there's no harm in guessing that they might hook up with the producing unit to be next September.

Bert Lytell has just been informed that a wee chicken was named after him by a little girl about a year ago in Ohio, and now the little chicken has grown up to be a great big chicken, and it lays eggs every day.

Harry Beaumont had a set built up in Victorville, and a desert rat came along and wanted to hire a room, and when he got on the other side of the door, he decided he's just as leave be on the outside of the door.

Jesse D. Hampton is looking for a green paint well in the oil field districts hereabouts, because he don't know where he could get enough green paint otherwise to cover that new enclosed studio built on the hip roof style of architecture.

Hal Cooley was given a present the other day of an eighty horsepower Peerless car, and the next day Lois Weber insisted that he cut off his mustache so that he could play the part of the heavy for her in her first Paramount-Artcraft release.

Reginald Barker is for realism first, last and all the time. Frank Leigh, who had wonderful silken tresses, was selected to play the part of a German agitator, and Director Barker made him have his hair cut pompadour, and Frank claims he's nearly ruined—just nearly.

Adam Hull Shirk is back from Broadway, and claims there are a million more people there now than there were a year ago, all of which is not to be construed to mean that this growth occurred because Adam came away. It's the liveliest place Adam ever saw, and he is having a hard time keeping the brakes on in Hollywood. One claim he does make is that he understands the green and black line system of the subway, for all of which he is entitled to much credit.

"The Best of Luck" Company has thirteen tied up with it all the way through. The names of several have thirteen letters in them—Ray C. Smallwood, director; Maxwell Karger, supervising director; A. Shelby LeVino, scenario writer; Edward Schulter, technical director; Fred Malatesta, heavy, and Henry Hamilton and Arthur Collins, collaborators with the author. Up to this time the only tough luck the company has had has been the fox running away in the fox chase, and the owner of the hounds dying the day before the chase was to be staged, to say nothing of a leased ship sinking the day before they were to use it. Everybody hopes they'll finish the picture.

Something New In Intermittents
Makes First Appearance In Print

Inventor Eliminates Pin and Cam and Substitutes Magnets

ON the same day that a letter is received from one of the readers of the department asking if there is any immediate chance of the usual form of intermittent being superseded; there appears in the weekly bulletin of the United States Patent Office an announcement of the awarding of a patent for a new style movement. Thinking that a description of the idea would be of interest to all projectionists and to some others in the industry it is published below together with copies of the official drawings.

The basic difference between this new device and the one commonly used lies in the fact that the movement is carried out electrically instead of mechanically. That is, instead of the pin and cam the inventor makes use of mechanically locked magnets.

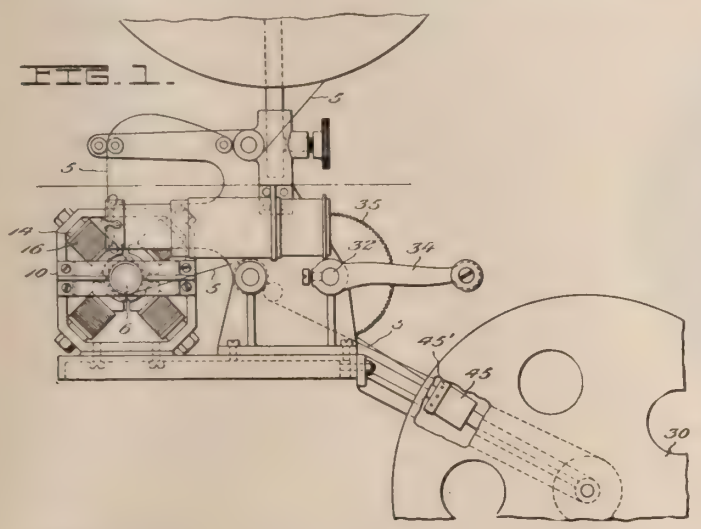

Figure 1 shows a view of the motor and locking mechanism taken from one side. Although certain improvements have also been made in other parts of the film feed mechanism as may be ascertained by sending for a copy of Patent 1,315,224, this article will deal mainly with the intermittent movement and the parts related to it.

Figure 1 shows a view of the motor and locking mechanism taken from the side. Commencing with the left-hand side, 54 and 54 are the rolling contacts; 38 is the rotating commutator with insulating and conducting segments; 10 is the motor yoke and 16 is the magnet coil. The two upright members marked 21 are bell-cranks which are operated by the auxiliary magnet coil, 27, which shows below the rotor of the motor. A spring, 28, holds these two bell-cranks in such a position that the pawls, 20, are forced into the notches, 19.

In operation the movement is extremely simple. The commutator is connected to the driving motor of the projector and is therefore constantly in motion. As the commutator turns so that the conducting segments are brought in conact with the rollers, 54, the circuit is completed from the outside source of supply and to the magnets. At the same time the auxiliary magnet at the bottom is energized in the same way. This actuates the bell-cranks, 21, which in turn withdraw the pawls from the notches and allows the armature to turn. When the main magnets are connected to the supply circuit they act on the armature, 6, like the field coils of a motor and tend to turn the armature. Since the pawls have been withdrawn from the notches the rotor is free to turn and does so. But shortly the rollers, 54, are met by an insulating segment on the commutator and the circuit is broken. The pawls are then free to drop into the notches on the armature as so on as they are reached by the revolving armature. Once the pawls and notches are together the movement is held absolutely rigid and cannot be moved.

Because of the fact that the field coils of the motor act instantly when the circuit is completed at the commutator some arrangement had to be made to reduce the sudden tension on the film perforations. By arranging these commutator segments so that the field coils would be energized and thereby exert their torque, before the pawls had been withdrawn from the notches, an exceedingly fast movement could be obtained but it is doubtful if the film would stand it. The inventor therefore, seeing this, has stated in his patent specifications that he is enabled to adapt the torque of the motor to the pull required upon the film without subjecting the latter to the sudden jerking action which is produced by the sudden release of a spring under tension.

He goes on to say, "In fact, if it is desired, under any conditions to cause a momentary initial acceleration of the moving parts other than that produced by the sudden movement of the armature from a period of rest I may predetermine the character of the initial torque and acccleration by proportioning the magnetic and electrical elements in a manner well understood by engineers."

Furthermore the inventor makes the statement that by timing the movement it is possible to do away with the shutter. As to this latter there is much to be said. Some intermittent movements have been made with as high a ratio as 12–1, but even then the experimenters found that a shutter of some kind was necessary. Perhaps the inventor of this magnetically controlled movement has accomplished what others have been unable to do. If such is the case it would be interesting to see in just what way he eliminates the possibility of travel ghost. While his mechanism might be so proportioned that its ratio of movement can be made greater than 12–1, it is doubtful if the film perforations would stand the enormous strain.

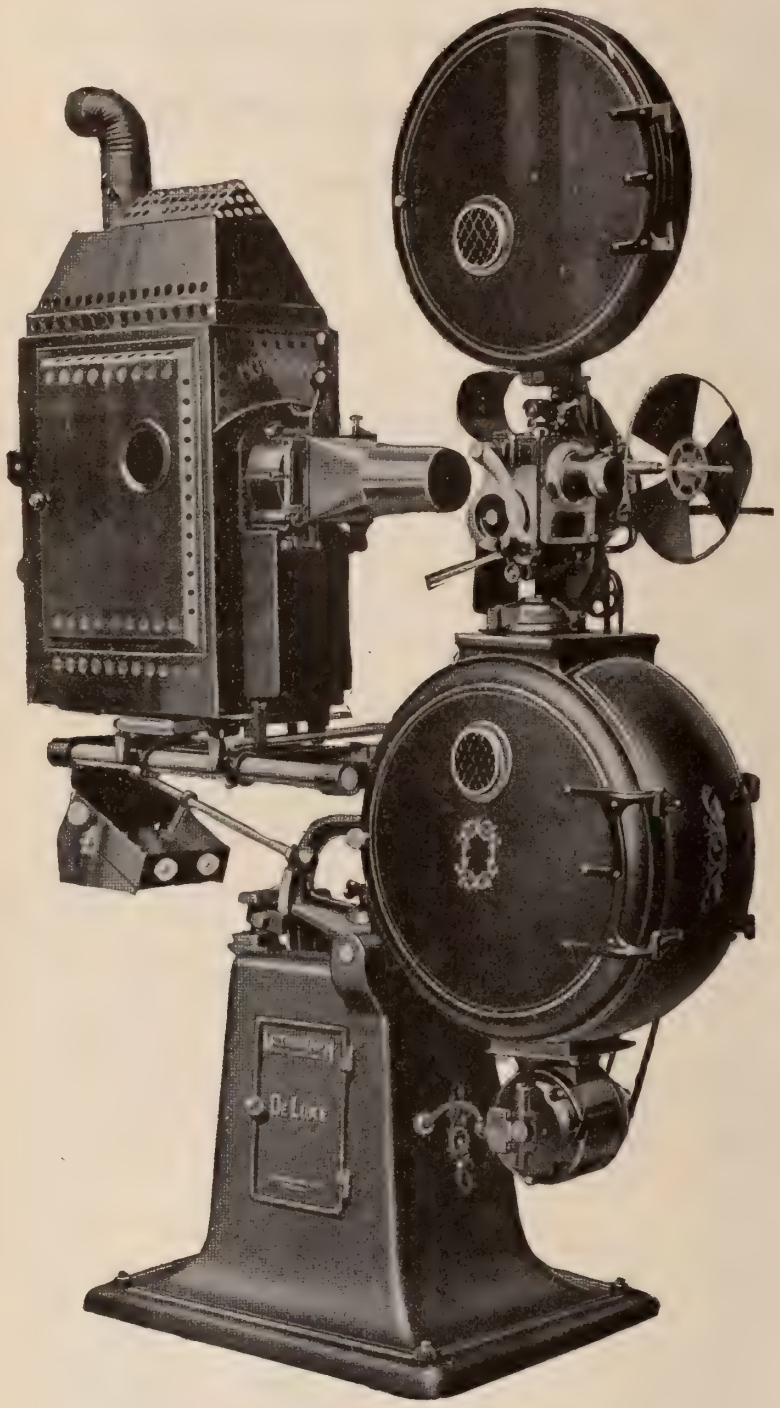
PERFECT PROJECTION + CONFIDENCE + RELIABILITY



Users of MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE receive something more than PERFECT PROJECTION—

They enjoy a feeling of security—can rely upon full service from their equipment.

The real difference in quality of projectors lies in the way they are made, not only in the care and inspection employed, but in the high grade materials and workmanship as used in the MOTIOGRAPH which gives operators CONFIDENCE

In the final analysis, a projector is measured by the spirit of its builders.

Put your confidence in a MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE PROJECTOR. For many years the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company has been known as the squarest concern in the world with whom to do business—

Right there is the last word on RELIABILITY

Let your next projector be a Motiograph De Luxe.

Although the whole question of whether or not the perforations will stand the strain rests on the acceleration of the sprockets at the start of the movement there must be a limit beyond which, due to the high average ratio of action, the film will not withstand the sudden jerk, no matter what the rate of acceleration may be at the start.

Any comments on this novel, intermittent movement will be gladly printed in this department. It is to be hoped that a number of projectionists will discuss its possibilities and its limitations as seen from their point of view.

How to Set Carbons

F. St. J.:

1. What is the correct angle at which carbons should be burnt?
2. Why do condensers in one machine break while in another they don't? That is our only trouble with two Power's machines.

ANSWER:

1. Although carbon manufacturers agree among themselves on the correct settings for both a.c. and d.c. there is considerable variance among users. Surely the manufacturers ought to know better than all others how to get best results from their products but many projectionists have "set-ups" which they have found satisfactory through months of use and will not change.

For d.c. there is the usual trim such as is shown in the drawing below. Both carbons are set on an angle of 25 degrees from the vertical with the lower electrode set forwards slightly

The greatest difference is found among users of a.c. Carbon manufacturers invariably recommend the modified jack-knife set shown in Fig. 2. Exhaustive test, we believe, have shown that this carbon set produces more light on the screen for a given amperage than any other a.c. arrangement. By setting the lower carbon straight up-and-down there is less shading of the upper crater and therefore a greater percentage of the illumination reaches the condensers. You will notice here that the upper carbon is set at 30 degrees away from the vertical and slightly back from the center line of the lower carbon. As it is desirable to use but one crater with a.c. the arrangement in Fig. 2 makes this possible, the crater that is used being formed on the forward side of the upper carbon.

Even though manufacturers are constantly emphasizing the added illumination gained by the use of the modified jack-knife, there really seems to be in practice a gradual movement toward the use of the d.c. trim for a.c. There is a definite reason for this. The arc drawn between two electrodes set as in Fig. 3 is much simpler to keep in adjustment than when set as shown in Fig. 2. At its best the a.c. arc stream distance is short enough so that the projectionist must continually keep his eyes open if he is to hold a steady arc. But with the jack-knife set it will be seen that at only one point, on the backside are the points the distance is constantly varying until at the front the distance before the crater is formed is nearly three times the usual distance.

All of which simmers down to the statement that if you are a careful painstaking projectionist who takes pride in getting every possible ray of light on to the screen, the modified jack-knife set

A Cry in the Dark—

Time: Evening.

Place: Any Movie Theatre (without the AISLELITE).

Cast: Mother and two Children, Exhibitor, and other persons.

Story: A mother and two children start down the dark aisle of Blank's Theatre. Mother loses one child in the dark, while the other stumbles and falls headlong down the balcony. Mr. Exhibitor rushes to assist, but it's too late.

Conclusion: Child's arm broken. Evening show demoralized. Disturbed audience decide to go in future to Mr. Up-to-Date's Theatre where they have the AISLELITE to light the pathway which leads them to their seat in safety and comfort and no disturbances.

THE AISLELITE

It throws the light directly into the aisle; directly on the floor; directly at the seat entrance — right where it's needed.

It gives sufficient light by deflection to illuminate the auditorium, permitting you to switch off all side lights and ceiling lights.

It makes your theatre more comfortable and convenient. Your patrons can find their seats without annoyance to others or to themselves.

It makes your theatre safer for everybody. No danger of a fall on balcony stairs. No likelihood of a mis-step or severe seat-jolt, with the "Aislelite" burning.

It draws patronage and profits because it pleases your patrons. Because it is a comfort and convenience to those whom you serve — to those whose patronage you want.

—All are reasons why YOU should install the "Aislelite" in YOUR theatre.

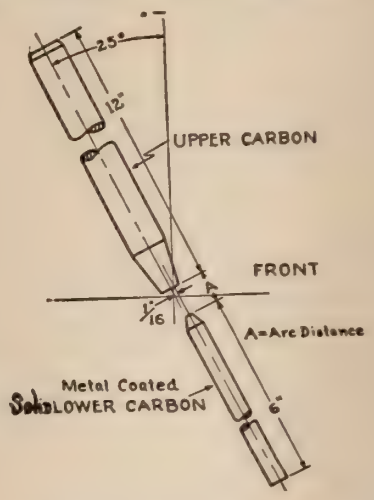
is the best. But if you are required to rewind, inspect film, watch for stage cues, etc., you will have more time to do so if you are using the d.c. trim on your a.c.

2. Condensers break for five reasons:
   a. Flaws in themselves.
   b. Too close to arc.
   c. Mounts need adjustment.
   d. Faulty ventilation.
   e. Sudden draughts through carelessness.



Therefore, if you are sure your arcs are the same distance from lenses on both machines, the trouble lies in one of the four other possibilities. Next to heat from the arc, probably the most usual cause of cracked lenses is the poor or improperly adjusted mount. You can prove this out by changing mounts from one machine to the other. If the breakage still persists in the same machine as formerly, your mounts are O. K., and your trouble is due to poor ventilation, caused by a clogged vent hole. Perhaps though you have had a fan blowing on the machine which gave you trouble, and the breeze, when you opened the lamp house door cooled and consequently cracked the back condenser lens.

Anyway, here are the possibilities. Follow each one to its lair and you'll soon find the cause.

Make the Most of Your "Windows"

By W. F. Libman

of Stanley Frame Co.

THE store of high quality can always be told by its show windows. Merchants who wish to gain the best trade realize the drawing power of a tastefully dressed window and act accordingly.

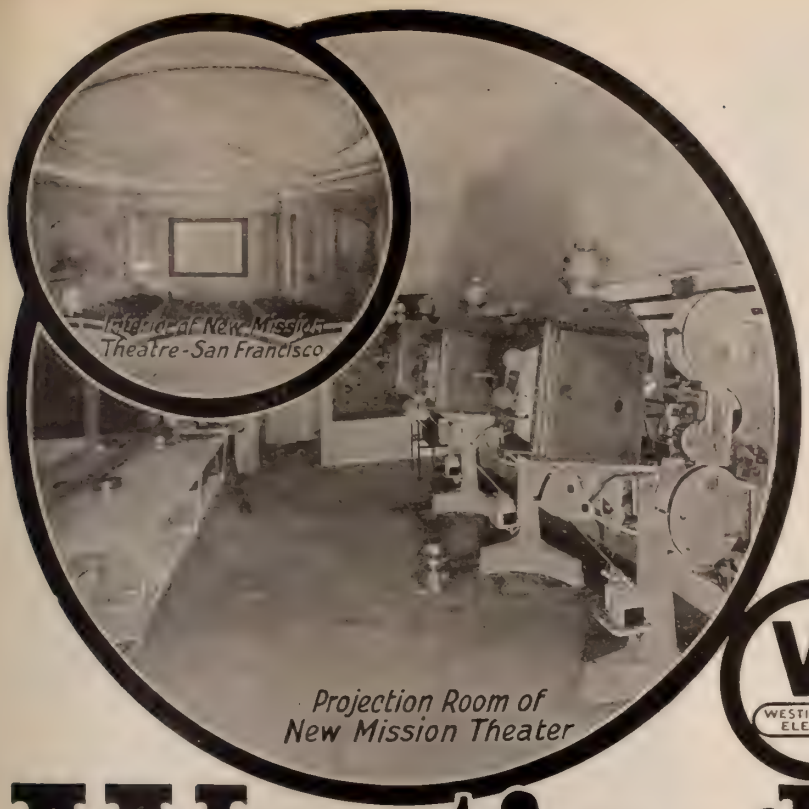
Why then, should the exhibitor do otherwise than follow in the footsteps of the successful store manager. The exhibitor is selling merchandise as surely as the store manager, and his windows — which are called the lobby — should maintain the same high standard.

Lobby display like any other art, or near-art, passes through successive cycles. At first the lobby was overdecorated by loud and glaring posters and fancy trimmings. Then as is usual in such cases the tendency swung the other way. Lobbies were then left plain, almost Puritan-like in their simplicity. This condition was as bad as the first. In between the two lay the "happy medium" which ultimately would be reached.

Those lobbies where heretofore a riot of color has greeted the prospective patrons should be torn down and built up again with the idea in view of arriving at a certain point in decoration, in keeping with the remainder of the theatre.

On the other hand, in the lobbies where simplicity is the keynote, it would enhance the value and drawing power if suitable wall cases were to be placed at proper intervals. If the cases are well designed and constructed they will surely add to the appearance to the lobby.

Besides the feature of its decorative values the wall case has another distinct advantage. As applied to lobbies where the material used is marble or terra cotta, wall cases may be used to reduce the area of visible wall space. In many instances the reduction in cost has more than paid for the wall cases.



Projection Room of New Mission Theater

Only the Best Will Do.

The public patronizes the theatres that are beautiful in design, large and comfortable. These theatres generally present the best programmes. BUT---

The critical public of today soon learns where they find the best projection. They are not interested in seeing even the best pictures poorly projected.

At the studios the greatest care is exercised to secure the best possible illumination for every production. Unless the theatres use only the best, these excellent results are lost.

The New Mission Theatre in San Francisco takes pride in its equipment and projection, as well as in its programmes. The public appreciates it. The projection room is considered par excellent. You will notice that they selected WESTINGHOUSE EQUIPMENT and their decision was based solely on the results produced.

I have had theatres brought to my attention where the architect had been allowed a free hand in the design of the lobby. Naturally, with his mind set on the architectural beauty which his plans would give to the place he forgot entirely the need for wall cases. The lobby is usually finished and perhaps the theatre has opened before the manager realizes that something is missing and upon examination discovers that no wall cases have been provided him. Sometimes the wall space has even been covered with expensive and expansive mirrors. But these must come out as well, when the exhibitor realizes the value of his "show windows." If the architect had only asked the lobby display expert for the latter's ideas before completing the structure a great many dollars would have been saved.

Many theatres of late have been erected and considered merely as real estate. Accordingly the space on either side of the main entrance is usually given up to stores. Altogether too often in doing this, the space between the lobby entrance and the stores is far too small for any display and the space is therefore lost. If a little more thought had been given to the "Front" this space might have been increased slightly and made almost invaluable as the theatre's "show window."

The exhibitor needs all the "show windows" he can get and it would pay him well to see that the correct use is made of every foot possible. This does not mean that he should plaster sheets here and there about his lobby. It does mean that he should get full value from these sheets by placing them in well designed wall cases whose finish and general construction harmonize with the remainder of the lobby. This may demand but one wall case or again it may require a dozen. If the exhibitor will submit his proposition to the manufacturer of these cases he will be given a carefully worked out scheme for greatly improving the "Front of his House."

SWAAB'S Monthly Messenger for October has made its appearance. It is fully up to the standard of past issues. The front page is given over to a talk on the Simplex projector. The inside pages are filled with items covering practically every piece of equipment used by the projectionist and theatre manager. Scattered here and there between the several ads are short quips and humorous clippings of one sort and another.

Optics; Amperage; Changeovers

C. A. C. No. 118:

1. How far from the aperture should the lamp house be placed?
2. How can you tell the amperage you are using at the arc?
3. How can I blend one picture in on another at the end of each reel? My way is unhandy.

REPLY:

1. The distance from the lamp-house to the aperture is determined by the position of the arc and the foci of the condensers. To gather as large a cone of light as is possible the arc should be placed as near the back condenser lens as the glass will allow without cracking.

The focal length of the back condenser lens is selected so as to make the beam of light slightly diverging as it leaves and strikes the front lens. The focal length of the front lens should take these diverging rays and converge them on the aperture plate.

With these facts in mind you can readily see the difficulty of laying down any set rules for distances. Under perfect conditions of handling and adjusting, it is possible to formulate certain rules for distance arrived at through careful experiments. But the best way and the way used by all the leading projectionists is to adjust the various elements with a great deal of care and watch results on the screen.

After placing arc as near to condenser as seems desirable move lamp house back and forth until the most perfect "spot" is secured on the aperture plate. That is the correct position for the lamp house.

2. By using an ammeter. There is no other safe way although if you have a rheostat that has been calibrated with exact instruments you can approximate the amperage you are using. But this method is not satisfactory because the supply voltage may vary over wide limits, resulting in an ever-changing voltage drop in the rheostat, and thereby affecting the flow of current.

As we have emphasized before, no projection room is too small to own an ammeter at least, and preferably both ammeter and voltmeter. Good instruments for this purpose can be purchased at any supply house for $12 to $15.

3. Probably the best scheme for changing over is the automatic douser. This device connects the two dousers so that when one opens the other closes and in that way makes a perfect fade out and fade in. About the time this reply appears in print there will also be shown a drawing of a change over system for three machines. This particular lay out can be modified to apply to the two-machine projection room and we advise you to try it out.

We might have helped you more had you told us more about your "unhandy method."

Film Projection Device

WILBUR BATES has had on exhibition in his office in the Times Building, during the past week the inventor's working model of the Goodwin Film Fire Prevention Device, invented by a western projectionist who was badly burned three years ago in a film fire which reached the magazine and set fire to the theatre, creating a panic.

This device, in the event that a film catches fire while being projected, is designed to cut the film where it emerges from the magazine and seal the magazine so that fire cannot reach the reel, cut the film where it enters the take-up box and seal the box so that fire cannot enter, turn off the current from the lamp-house and turn on the lights in the theatre. This is all done on one action — automatically, simultaneously, instantly.

The worst that can happen where a film catches fire in projection, where one of these devices is installed, it is claimed, in the loss of a few inches of film. It can be applied to any make of projection machine.

A "Jumpy" Picture

R. O. Batesville, Ark.:

What makes a picture jump on the screen? I think that there are several devils that could cause the picture to jump. We have two Powers 6-A machines.

REPLY:

As you say, there are several causes for a "jumpy" picture. There is the intermittent that is improperly adjusted, there are the tension springs, either wrongly set or dirty, there is the take-up which under some conditions might bring about the loss of the loop with bad results on the screen. Besides these your machine may be unsteady or your projection room floor may vibrate. Such are the underlying causes of a bad picture. More often than not, it is a question of running down each possibility until the real origin of the jump is located. In some cases, the jump may be due to a combination of causes and it is then that the true mechanical ability and knowledge of the man shows through.

The Complete Plan Book

"Hearst News No. 46"

(German Submarine Sinking Ships, etc.--One Reel Released November 11--Distributed by Universal)

ABSOLUTELY the greatest film scoop in history of motion pictures," is the declaration of International Film Service in describing this particular news reel.

And the reviewer agrees that this is the biggest news-reel sensation of the year. This particular portion of the reel only occupies about three hundred feet but it grips you tremendously.

For it is real and appallingly brutal but also imparts a glowing thrill when you see brave men go down to their death willingly rather than desert the ship.

One ruthless submarine commander in the late war evidently determined that he would show his Kaiser that he was producing gratifying results. He mounted a motion picture camera on the decks of his submersible and after shelling or torpedoing a ship he would photograph the sinking.

It is a terrible thing to witness and leaves an indelible impression upon the spectator. But every one who views it will want to see it again and unquestionably will urge all his friends and acquaintances to see this wonderful feat of the camera.

This could be played up as a regular feature and would give a gratifying account of itself at the box office window. But it is inserted as a part of one of the regular Hearst News reels. Exhibitors playing this service would do well to watch for Reel Number 46 and properly exploit it.

J. H. Mackzun, a Knights of Columbus secretary, brought the film to the United States. The first shows the sinking of a British tramp as the U-boat rises to the surface. The deck gun is used. A bomb explodes in the hold of a picturesque sailing ship and it gracefully buries itself in the sea leaving only a ripple behind.

A shot across the bow brings a British freighter to a halt and the captain and his mate standing on the stern deck refuse rescue and go down dramatically with their ship. A shot below the water line plunges another ship to destruction and the huge boat does an awe-inspiring sort of a tail spin and sinks majestically from sight beneath the waves.

You view the actual brutalities of war practically in the raw and it is something that none of your patrons will care to miss.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Salome vs. Shenandoah"

(Mack Sennett Comedy-Two Reels)

MACK SENNETT is still poking fun at the old time stage successes. Not that "Salome" has become moth-eaten on the shelf though it is not being done at the present time because no theatrical producer has the audacity to flout the conventions. Depicted on the screen — well that's another matter. Trust Mack Sennett's keen sense of satire for that. Trust him to make an audience chuckle by presenting Ben Turpin's head to Charles Murray, disguised as King Herod. The funny part of it is Ben acts as a bodyguard for his own head and confidentially tells us that "the King thinks he's got my head but he's wrong."

Where Mr. Sennett finds his real fun is in his methods of ridiculing the tricks of the stage. The King is attached to a wire after the flying ballet formula. When he would scan Phyllis Haver, who plays the title role, he is yanked into place by an invisable stage hand. He stretches a little too far in getting a close-up of her knees and the man with the wire is unable to lift him from the floor. And so the comicalities assemble. Finally Ben Turpin comes in and announces himself as "every inch a ruler" and demands the royal fourflusher to vacate. Then up in the flies a water tank is overturned. The stage hand yells — "My mistake." A typical Sennett title, pithy peppery and to the point. There is an audience within the picture that includes Ford Sterling and Louise Fazenda.

This is one of the funniest farces that Mack Sennett ever conceived. And "Shenandoah" runs it a close race. Again the producer uncovers the "props" of the stage and makes them appear ridiculous. Dummy soldiers, dummy horses are everywhere. And the curtain rises and falls on four acts. It is a toss-up which is the more productive of laughter — Ford Sterling and his audience "guying" the show or Ben Turpin and his fellow-players "kidding" the old war play. Ben leads the whole Northern army to slaughter and he is about to be executed when little Nell appears on horseback and tells them the war is over.

From our point of observation in two New York theatres we noticed the spectators enjoying themselves immensely. They responded as quickly to the titles as they did to the scenes. Whoever writes these captions is a humorist of the first order. A mere word and it speaks volumes. "Salome vs. Shenandoah" is genuine burlesque and funny all the way. It presents Mack Sennett at his best.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Glutton For Punishment"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon-Fox)

IF you follow the adventures of Mutt and Jeff it shouldn't be much trouble to tell which one is a glutton for punishment. Whenever there is any work to do you can make up your mind that Mutt is standing by, while his partner, being a pocket edition of a man, is compelled to carry the burden. This time the freaks have opened a restaurant directly opposite Benny's beanery. Naturally Jeff's place is in the kitchen while Mutt performs the easy task of waiting on table. It looks as if their business would fail but fortunately Benny, himself, comes in with a voracious appetite (a restaurateur never eats in his own place) and his bill is sufficient to put the proprietors on easy street.

The fun is derived in watching Jeff take care of the orders. He takes the side of a cow and chops it up with the aid of his ice skates and the portion is sent spinning through space to the waiting hands of Mutt. A nickel is given to a hen and promptly two fresh eggs are hatched. To make them hard boiled the little chef plays billiards with them. A milk shake has him puzzled until he starts shimmying. And how that boy can tease his torso! Benny cleans the freaks out entirely, and when he asks them where they are going, they reply — "We're stepping out to eat." This cartoon keeps to the average. It should rouse the risibilities of any audience.—LAURENCE REID.

"Bumping Into Broadway"

(First of the New Two-Reel Harold Lloyd Comedies Released by Pathe)

THE reviewer saw two of the two-reel Lloyd comedies before he viewed "Bumping Into Broadway," which happened to be the first scheduled for release. They both registered heavily and this one scores 100 per cent.

Mr. Lloyd has 'Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels with him in this one and it is elaborately mounted. He is a refreshingly original comedian who does not have to indulge in vulgarities or the slap stick to get his stuff over.

The star appears in "Bumping Into Broadway" as a would-be playwright and after being kicked out of the manager's office he meets the chorus girl behind the scenes.

Later he sees the girl getting into a limousine with a man and he rides with them by inserting himself on the extra tire at the rear of the car.

Their destination is a swell gambling house and the comedian somehow manages to get by the doorkeeper. While standing outside the circle of a group surrounding a roulette table, he finds a bill on the floor and after trying in vain to pry his way into the crowd to return the bill to its owner he tosses it over the heads of the people and it lands on number 13.

Yes, number 13 wins and then repeats itself enough so that the bank is "busted." As the bales of money are forced on the comedian the place is raided and from then on the fun is fast and furious.

This is certainly an irresistibly funny comedy offering that will score with the high brows as heavily as it will with the masses. Many new pieces of comedy "business" are injected by Mr. Lloyd which mark him as absolutely original.—TOM HAMLIN.

"VAGABOND LUCK"

(FOX)

Heart Interest and Atmosphere Here

"VAGABOND LUCK" conquers because of its simplicity and humanity. It is rich in heart interest and sympathetic appeal and it tells its story in a straightforward way. Particularly is sympathy expressed for the broken down horse, Vagabond, who is supposed to have outlived his usefulness on the track.

Fortunately it rains and he breezes home a winner because he is the best "mudder" on the track. Thus his owners are made happy because the winnings have saved the home. The heart interest is emphasized in the jocky who brings him under the tape — the same jockey who has been dismissed from a rich stable for being overweight. It is he who unearths the plot to ruin the girl's brother who in a moment of weakness had mortgaged his share of the property in order to realize on his bet.

The picture contains enough vitality to extend through five reels despite the simplicity of its theme. The atmosphere smacks of the track and the story is saturated with it to such an extent that you are thrilled. The romantic element balances the feature and gives it an expression which makes it a well-rounded entertainment. In our opinion it is quite the best offering that the Fox co-stars have had. Albert Ray enacts the part of the jockey with genuine naturalness, while Elinor Fair makes the heroine a sympathetic character indeed. The other players are splendid in the types they interpret. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William Fox's co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, will appear together in their newest attraction, "Vagabond Luck," at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. The picture treats of a race horse which is supposed to have outlived its usefulness, but which comes forward as very much in the running. Its name is Vagabond and it is owned by Joy Bell and her brother, Harry. In close proximity to their home is the stable of Jim Richardson, the owner of a string of fast horses. Jimmie Driscoll, who has been responsible for making him a winner, laments the fact that he is considerably over-weight. So much so that he is dismissed. He makes his way to the Bell stables where he becomes instrumental in saving the home. The racing event of the season is about to be run off, and Harry Bell has mortgaged his share of the property in order to back Vagabond to the limit. The horse hasn't a ghost of a show on a dry track, but can distance the field when it is muddy. The horse is marked up at a 10 to 1 shot on the short end. But when the rain comes the night before the bookmakers are fearful of losing their money. They succeed in frightening the Bell jockey into running a crooked race, but Jimmie learns of the plot and rides the horse himself. And he breezes home a winner, saves the family fortune and wins Joy for his wife. This is an interesting picture, filled with dramatic situations and climaxes and one that carries a strong human appeal and considerable local color. The stars give a good account of themselves and they are supported by a competent company. The picture was produced under the direction of Scott Dunlap from a story by Frank Tinney Jackson.

PROGRAM READER

A race-track story is "Vagabond Luck," and a good one. It comes to this theatre next ———— with the co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, in the principal roles. You all sympathize with man's best friend, the horse, but your sympathy is most acute if the noble steed happens to be "through" as a winner. Poor old Vagabond! No one thought he could possibly win. Why he would be a joke! But they miscalculated on the weather. They forgot that he was a good "mudder" and could go by the other horses on a wet track as if they were standing still. How he breezes home a winner and saves a family fortune and brings a romance to a certain girl is told in a series of interesting events. A picture full of action and atmosphere and one that is always human. It presents an array of interesting scenes. Don't miss it. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair have appeared often enough for you to judge upon their drawing power. Surely they are very sincere in their work and they have established a popularity. So it would be advisable to feature their names and photographs. But by all means bring out that this is a race-track story — a story of a broken down horse who, as luck would have it, breezes home a winner merely because he is a good "mudder." Use the angle that one can never be sure of a horse race and that it would be advisable not to bet until one has learned the condition of the track. It is an old axiom that a horse who is a sure winner on a dry track rarely comes in ahead when the track is muddy. Bring out the human note of the picture and tell that it offers a deal of dramatic action and suspense and atmosphere. Advertise the picture as presenting a thrilling horse race.

"THE COUNTERFEIT"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Picture Hardly Suffices for Star's Talent

THE public has grown so accustomed to seeing Elsie Ferguson in strong dramatic subjects that it is liable to be surprised in finding her in an offering which many of her less talented sisters of the screen could interpret as successfully. Which is, by way of saying, that "Counterfeit" hardly measures up to her emotional capabilities. True it offers a different kind of role — but a role which the most ingenue of ingenues could carry.

The picture is frankly a crook melodrama — but a polite one. The heroine, in order to recoup the family fortune, enters the Secret Service and obtains a handsome reward for capturing a band of counterfeiters who are playing in high society. The idea expends itself early — it being a frail thing at best. But the director has had the foresight to fortify it with romantic moments which are expressed against ideal backgrounds. The title is rather misleading since Miss Ferguson's following might be led to believe that she is involved in a marital tangle and herself the "counterfeiter." Certain skeptics may wonder how society accepts vultures disguised as gentlemen without looking them up in the bluest of blue books.

The picture entertains after a fashion; it couldn't do otherwise with Miss Ferguson as the star. While it affers no drama and very little characterization still the love interest and the charming settings together with the competent playing of David Powell and Charles Gerard will satisfy the average picturegoer. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

The latest Paramount-Artcraft picture starring Elsie Ferguson entitled "Counterfeit," will be the main attraction on the bill of the ———— theatre beginning ————. This is based upon an original story by Robert Baker and is said to be one of the most dramatic of the many pictures in which Miss Ferguson has appeared. It gives her the role of a Southern girl of a distinguished family, now in financial straits, who joins the Secret Service to try and win the reward offered for rounding up a band of counterfeiters. The clews lead her to the homes of the rich at Newport and she traces the forgers not to a sordid den in some secluded spot, but to a lavishly furnished yacht lying in the harbor.

Mrs. Palmer, a member of the colony, is desperately in need of funds and Virginia overhears a conversation between her and a society hanger-on named Cortez. The latter offers to supply her with money and Virginia suspects that he is an agent of the counterfeiters. Later she is surprised by Stuart Kent, who is in love with her, while she is taking the counterfeit bills from the Palmer safe. By a ruse she inveigles Cortez into supplying her with some of the bogus money. Summoning detectives she comes upon the counterfeiters and captures them. Thus she earns her reward and returns home. Kent follows her and their interrupted romance is resumed. The picture is of an unusually appealing character. Miss Ferguson appears to radiant advantage in the stellar role. The support is notable, the cast including such capable players as David Powell, Charles Gerrard, and others.

SUGGESTIONS

Your advertising on this picture should be based along its original angle. Tell that the star is seen in a new and dashing role — a role which brings out her versatility to splendid advantage. You should make the Elsie Ferguson pictures advertise themselves as soon as you flash her name on the screen. Your public ought to know what they contain. Emphasize the fact that the star is endowed with emotional capabilities and that her stories must measure up to her personality and talent. Treat the picture with plenty of mystery. Don't let your public know that the heroine is in the Government service and that she is employed to run a band of counterfeiters to earth. We would use the circular letter campaign on all of Miss Ferguson's pictures. She appeals to a better class of patrons. Try and reach them. Tell that it is a picture of romance and adventure.

CATCH LINES

She was caught robbing a safe by the very man she loved. She couldn't explain because she was a member of the Secret Service. What happened? See Elsie Ferguson in "Counterfeit."

A stirring romance of adventure and mystery, with the talented Elsie Ferguson in a new and dashing role. See "Counterfeit."

She passed herself as a society woman in order to catch a band of counterfeiters. Doesn't it sound interesting? See the emotional star, Elsie Ferguson, in "Counterfeit."

"THE COUNTRY COUSIN"
(SELZNICK-SELECT)

This May Satisfy the Majority

WHILE this picture did not throw a thrill or a glow over the reviewer it may completely satisfy the majority. There is one real big situation in the production and it arrives in the latter part of the last reel.

Everything else leads up to this intensely dramatic situation, but the incident was bound to happen and the waiting for its occurrence will not cause the average photoplay patron exquisite anticipation nor keen suspense.

A rather messy situation is revealed when the young girl leaves her mother so that she can visit her father in the big city and see life. Her father's second wife is the affinity, openly, of her husband's employer. There is no particular appeal in any of the roles. The play only serves to accentuate the old moss back belief that the city harbors all the villainy of mankind and the country folk are invariably the pure in heart.

The star does very nicely but it exercised the director's ingenuity to prevent the other principal female role, the country girl, from overshadowing it. There is a very good cast in this picture and fine photography.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audience are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, average puller and faintly pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, good puller and fairly pleasing. Length, 5 reels. Released November 2d.—TOM HAMLIN.

From the stage production by Booth Tarkington and Julian Street.
Directed by Alan Crosland.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Booth Tarkington and Julian Street's stage success, "The Country Cousin," is coming in screen form at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

Elaine Hammerstein is the star and it is a Selznick-Select production. The film version is said to carry even a heavier appeal than the stage play.

Her little cousin is living with her mother in the small country town and suddenly she comes into some money and wants to see life in the metropolis. Her mother tries to dissuade her, but all to no avail.

So her little cousin visits her father who is living in the big city with his second wife, a vulgarian. It is then that the country cousin determines to also visit the city and keep a watchful eye on the girl.

It did not take the country cousin long to find that the hostess was systematically robbing the young girl. And she took steps to prevent the mulcting as much as possible.

A Britisher was visiting there at the same time and after being rebuffed several times by the country cousin he finds himself more in love with her than ever. And before she knew it she was admiring him immensely and wishing he had adapted himself to something useful such as plowing, etc., instead of wasting his time in this society turmoil.

Then came the big denouement and a climax that upset the plans of a great many persons, but which brought happiness to those who deserved it most.

PROGRAM READER

The girl was certainly in danger in the big city and her country cousin determines that she would be near her to protect her.

But the younger girl had a mind of her own and wanted to see what life in the metropolis could be like.

Booth Tarkington and Julian Street made a great stage success from this same story. It was entitled "The Country Cousin."

The screen version of this famous stage offering is coming to this theatre next week and Elaine Hammerstein is the star.

"The Country Cousin" is a Selznick-Select picture and will afford excellent entertainment for you.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture you will do well to concentrate all your efforts on the popularity of the authors and the stage success. The screen version of Booth Tarkington's and Julian Street's great stage success, "The Country Cousin," placed in screen form by the Selznick-Select concern. And if Elaine Hammerstein is well known as a drawing card in your particular locality you should of course utilize the star angle also. The Remick dealers will gladly tie-in with you on their song "The Country Cousin," dedicated to Elaine Hammerstein. Mention that she is the grand-daughter of the late Oscar Hammerstein.

CATCH LINES

Have you a little country cousin to look after you so that you can keep going along the path called straight?

Where a country cousin arrives in the metropolis and outwits some haughty but naughty members of the smart set.

The new mown hay puts the city asphalt to flight when it comes to wholesome comparison.

"A REGULAR GIRL"
(SELZNICK-SELECT)

Suitable for the Janis Following

FROM a box office angle this looks like a winner, and even for entertainment purposes the picture may afford all that most people desire. But keen enjoyment was not registered upon the reviewer's face throughout the picture, although there are a few spots here and there that sort of hold the production together.

Elsie Janis is a charming girl and known as an accomplished actress, but she does not photograph well. And while there is a sweet thought in the picture the photoplay does not register as one of our leading productions.

The returned soldiers undoubtedly have a warm spot in their hearts for this star and thus should insure a good sized house in practically every municipality. And they will come prepared to like her in any sort of a picture and that is just what this is.

But outside its exploitation possibilities the production would barely stand upon its own five thousand feet as entertainment for the regular photoplay patronage. As a picture it may be termed just average and as a box office attraction it may register big.

Mac ..... Tammany Young
Shorty ..... Ernie Adams
Slim ..... Jerry Delaney
Red ..... Frank Murdock
Mrs. Murphy ..... Mrs. Jeffrey Lewis

Directed by James Young.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Elsie Janis is coming in a screen offering. It's a Selznick-Select picture entitled "A Regular Girl" and will appear at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

She appears as the daughter of a wealthy man and she has just returned from war work on the other side and wants to continue helping the returned soldiers over here.

Her father promises to give her $10,000 if she will earn the same amount, and she puts on a society circus with the aid of the soldier boys who are now returned and looking for employment.

It is here where she shines as a bare-back rider and does innumerable stunts. And as the circus clears more than $10,000 her father comes through with his part of the bargain. But not before he is shocked to see his daughter hopping around in a ballet skirt.

It seems that many of the returned fighters in boarding houses around New York were afraid of the efforts of the so-called society folks. So the only way she could win them was to pose as a slavey and work around Mrs. Murphy's boarding house. Her name was Elizabeth, but they were all calling her Lizzie in no time.

This is a wholesome photoplay to witness and particular interest is said to be evidenced because of the star's work overseas during the late war It is declared that she popularized herself with the soldiers to such an extent that her following assumed tremendous proportions.

PROGRAM READER

They all called her "Lizzie" and she liked it.

Her real name was Elizabeth in her wealthy environments, but when she accepted a position as a slavey in Mrs. Murphy's boarding house she was just plain Lizzie.

This was soon cut to "Liz" among the many returned soldiers who boarded at this particular place.

She wanted to do something for the fighters. She felt that they needed someone to sort of look after them and see that they secured employment before their money gave out.

Elsie Janis is the star of a "A Regular Girl," the Selznick-Select picture that comes to this theatre next week.

And there is comedy and pathos in the offering. And everybody knows of the great war work Miss Janis did on the other side.

Everybody knows also that she is a famous actress.

SUGGESTIONS

It is easy to exploit this picture after you have booked it. Elsie Janis will carry the box office end through alone almost, but there are many other possibilities that should not be overlooked nevertheless. For instance, it should be brought to their attention that Miss Janis sacrificed all theatrical offers and lent her valuable services whole-heartedly to serve the boys who were fighting on the other side. And your tie-in is with the returned soldiers through any local they may have formed, such as the American Legion or War Veterans of the World. Decorate your theatre with American flags and use your society list to send announcements as the better class appear to dote on Miss Janis. Get your list of State Militia men and send announcements to them also as they are mostly returned soldiers who know of her work over on the other side.

"YOU NEVER KNOW YOUR LUCK"

Entertaining Production Should Satisfy

WHILE not in the heavyweight class this production is a very entertaining picture with a good story, and should satisfy all classes of patrons.

It is well directed, suitably mounted, has the necessary suspensive quality, is possessed of the essential love element romantically developed, and is interpreted by a capable cast.

The young man was in the habit of making freak wagers and was apparently inoculated with the gambling instinct. When he lost ten thousand dollars on the English Derby he simply dropped from sight because he could not bear to face his young and wealthy bride again until he had made up the sum.

We find him five years later in a small Canadian town and still carrying, unopened, the letter received from his young wife on the eve of his departure. Another girl opens the letter and cables to her and the wife arrives in time to save a land option worth ten thousand dollars which her husband otherwise would have lost through the crooked manipulations of a crafty lawyer.

THE CAST

Kerry ..... House Peters

Others not announced.

Story by Sir Gilbert Parker.
Produced by Sunset Pictures.
Directed by Frank Powell.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"You Never Know Your Luck," the Sir Gilbert Parker story, has been placed in pictures by Frank Powell of Sunset Pictures and World Film Corporation has booked it into the ——— theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ———.

House Peters is the star and has the role of Kerry, a young Britisher who came to America to make good after losing ten thousand dollars on the English Derby.

He had just married a wealthy English girl and had promised her he would cease gambling. But it seemed that he was in the habit of making freak bets and was a believer in so-called hunches. He was undoubtedly inoculated with the gambling instinct but after he lost his all on the big Derby he determined to quit entirely and hide himself.

Kerry did not dare to face his wife and when a letter from her reached him on the eve of his departure he refrained from opening it feeling sure that it would contain well deserved words of censure.

He settled in a small western Canada town under an assumed name and for five years he struggled to earn the ten thousand dollars which he considered necessary in order to face his wife with a clean conscience.

When he was shot, a young girl opened the letter and cabled his wife. The wife arrived just in time to save an option on land which enabled Kerry to clear the required ten thousand dollars. His struggles with heartless bankers and an unscrupulous lawyer, and the thread of romance through the photoplay, are said to afford most excellent entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

If you do not attend this theatre next week we don't know what is likely to happen to you.

"You Never Know Your Luck."

Probably you don't believe in "hunches."

Now our friend Kerry, made famous by Sir Gilbert Parker, was in the habit of making freak bets.

The gambling germ possessed him from birth.

When he lost ten thousand dollars on the great English Derby he simply disappeared and five years later we find him in a small town of the Canadian Northwest.

His young and wealthy English bride had searched in vain for him and wondered why he did not reply to her nice letter.

But he kept the letter unopened in his pocket, thinking that it just contained the words of severe censure which he felt sure he merited.

Kerry wanted to raise the ten thousand dollars before he could ever muster the nerve to face her.

And then —

Well, you will see it all in the World Picture next week starring House Peters.

"You Never Know Your Luck."

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you can safely proceed at once to the leading book store and have him place on display many of the Sir Gilbert Parker books with your card, "You Never Know Your Luck" in the center of the display. This is an old stunt but sure fire when properly handled and the tie-in happens to reach a popular author. And then House Peters is well known as a stage star and has appeared in many good film features. Mention that the Board of Trade of San Antonio, Texas, prove by this picture that the climate of San Antonio is just as favorable for motion picture producing as the Los Angeles climate. And the elastic title should encourage you to use as many catch lines as possible. You could induce many of your merchants to place a sign over their goods displayed in the window as for instance; "You Never Know Your Luck," these kitchen chairs going at $2.00 each," etc., down the line in every field of endeavor, drug stores and all.

"HAWTHORNE OF THE U. S. A."
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Elaborately Presented; Affording Enjoyment

ALTHOUGH the stage play by James B. Fagan was more dramatic, and even melodramatic, the screen version starring Wallace Reid is made a rollicking love story with all the big situations breezily eased off into near travesty.

The heroics have all been accomplished in the lighter vien which brings out the pretty romance and at the same time affords great enjoyment. The young American breaks the bank at Monte Carlo and then saves a little toy kingdom from revolutionary plotters, after which the King declares for democracy, and, by abolishing Royalty, enables the hero to marry the Princess.

James Cruze directed this splendidly and it is elaborately mounted and has an active army of extras. And Lila Lee is Mr. Reid's leading woman. Just take a glance over the cast and you will be astonished at the array of well-known names.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and greatly pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, strong puller and very pleasing. Length, 5 reels. Released, November 30.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Hawthorne of the U. S. A." has been filmed, and with Wallace Reid as the star will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ———.

Famous Players-Lasky produced this Paramount-Artcraft picture from the successful stage play by James B. Fagan, and it was directed by James Cruze. In support of Wallace Reid are Lila Lee, Harrison Ford, Tully Marshall, Edwin Stevens and Theodore Roberts.

When the young American breaks the bank at Monte Carlo he continues his tour through Europe in a motor car until his cap containing the passports blows off and over a high stone wall.

It is when he leaps the wall that romance begins and the princess of this little toy kingdom is discovered in her garden. When the youth prepares to stay indefinitely in the town some plotters, encouraging a revolution, propose that he finance it. The American heard from them that the king was cruel and he did not for a moment suspect that the girl he met in the garden was the princess.

When all these facts become known to him he foils the plotters and the mob who came to burn the palace. It is then that the King declares that all titles shall be abolished and this permits the youth to wed the charming princess.

The film version has all the melodramatic situations made famous and thrilling by the play, but the photoplay makes it more of a rollicking romance and sort of a travesty on the tense incidents in this tabloid kingdom.

PROGRAM READER

When one young American broke the bank at Monte Carlo he made history.

He continued his tour through Europe by motoring across tabloid kingdoms until his cap blew off, and then he lost his head, as it were.

For when he vaulted a garden wall to retrieve the cap he met a Princess and lost his heart.

About this time some plotters stirred up a revolution against the King and the young American joined the revolutionists.

You see — he didn't know that the charming young girl he met over the garden wall was a Princess. But when he did find out he just naturally "busted" that revolution all to pieces.

And then the old King in gratitude declared for democracy and abolished the titles and such things. This made it possible for the hero and heroine to marry.

All this and more in Wallace Reid's Paramount-Artcraft picture coming to this theatre next week. It is entitled "Hawthorne of the U. S. A."

CATCH LINES

When he leaped over the garden wall he fell — in love.

It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good and it blew a youth's cap right into romance.

A toy king of a tabloid monarchy declares for democracy to permit his daughter to marry a red-blooded American.

One youth breaks the bank at Monte Carlo. In fact he was so lucky that he never lost anything but his head and his hand and his heart after that. And he called that luck also.

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES"

(REALART)

May Be Termed A Good Average Picture

THERE are some very good characterizations in this picture and it is this array of excellent types that registered best with the reviewer. The continuity, the mountings, and the photography are all up to present day standards but after an auspicious opening the director evidently believed he should inject the so-called "punch" in the action and possibly "forced" his performers to "act" and thus destroyed some of the naturalness of the later scenes.

To those who like the "Anne" series of stories by L. M. Montgomery, and their names must be legion as these stories enjoyed a wide vogue, this picture should suitably entertain. It is a simple theme and will undoubtedly afford the keenest enjoyment to those who like the sort of entertainment provided by Chautauquas and Lyceum courses.

For a blase and confirmed picture fan this picture will not register so heavily, although it should satisfy all classes. But its strongest appeal will be in the smaller towns and the neighborhood houses in a nice community. As a box office attraction it may draw heavily even in the big first run Metropolitan houses but it is not the calibre of picture that you would expect to hold up for a lengthy run in big company.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Mary Miles Minter in her first Realart picture will appear at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"Anne of Green Gables" is the title and it is one of the famous "Anne" series written by L. M. Montgomery and adapted to the screen by Frances Marion.

Anne is a pretty little orphan girl and is adopted by Matthew Cuthbert and his sister Marilla as they are becoming lonesome in the big country home, "Green Gables."

They expected a boy from the orphanage and were very disappointed at first that they received a little girl. But she soon won her way into their hearts. Mrs. Pie is a confirmed village gossip, and she disliked little orphan Anne from the start. And her daughter Josie also showed her dislike and tried to make things unbearable for Anne of Green Gables.

Anne's strong point was her vivid imagination, and she used it constantly. It was when the minister came to invite them to the forthcoming Sunday school picnic that Marilla began to sing praises of her little orphan and just how quiet and refined she was becoming.

Unfortunately, it was just at this moment that Anne was chasing a boy who had mischievously dropped an apple upon her head. And when she caught him she pummelled him much as a boy would. This quite shocked the minister and gave Mrs. Pie, the gossip, more scope for mean conversation.

It was when Anne attended the picnic by running away from the locked room and incidentally petted what she supposed was an inoffensive cat that furnished the odor that drove all the other picnickers away. And then she sold the neighbor's cow by mistake. And when later in life, when Anne became the village school teacher, she was accused of beating up Mrs. Pie's boy so hard that it broke his arm.

All those familiar with L. M. Montgomery's "Anne of Green Gables" will undoubtedly want to see the film version.

PROGRAM READER

Anne was not careful enough about choosing her company while on her way to the Sunday school picnic.

That's why she put all the assembled picnickers to flight.

How should she know that the supposed cat she paused to stroke during her walk in the woods wasn't that kind of an animal at all?

Any ordinary mutt of a dog could have followed Anne successfully that day. It did not require the keen sense of smell and intuition possessed by the high-bred hunting dog to keep tabs on Anne and even give her a good start.

That's just one of the horrible experiences of poor little "Anne of Green Gables." You all know the famous "Anne" series written by L. M. Montgomery.

Mary Miles Minter in her first Realart picture will come to this theatre next week. And out of all her chaotic life she finally found romance and a peaceful future assured.

"EASTWARD, HO!"

(FOX)

Plentiful Action in This Melodrama

WILLIAM RUSSELL possesses such a dynamic personality that it can only be expressed in plays of unbounded action. The star has shown his versatility in every form of dramatic entertainment, so Fox is not going wrong by mixing them up for him. In our opinion, however, it will be difficult to find such an all around entertainment as his recent release, "Sacred Silence." "Eastward Ho!" is melodramatic to the core and it presents Mr. Russell at his familiar task of cleaning up the East according to Western methods.

Before he can fulfil his mission he is subjected to several hectic adventures, the like of which are only found in frenzied fiction. Plots and counterplots intrigue the star and the spectator at the same time. And for a time it looks as if the Westerner would have to admit defeat. But there he is at the end smiling in a confident manner and with a trusting bride who is accompanying him Westward Ho! The story will not stand dissecting if you are looking for truth. But there is no denying its plethora of actionful scenes all of which are incorporated for their full suspensive values.

Roy Somerville, the scenarist, deserves praise for keeping his continuity progressive. Mr. Russell plays the hero with authority and a quiet humor. He knows the West and the spirit that is exemplified in the cowboy. John Hines, Charles Stevenson, Lucille Lee Stewart and Mary Hay lend good assistance. The latter is the newest ingenue to come to the screen from the "Follies." She brings youth and a charming personality with her. Emmett Flynn directed. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William Russell will appear at the ———— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his second Fox picture entitled "Eastward Ho!" This offering is from an original story by William McLeod Raine, the Scenario of which is written by Roy Somerville, and it awards the star the role of a young Westerner who journeys East to battle a syndicate that is threatening to tie up the ranchmen with options on their cattle. He little dreams however that his stay in the metropolis is to be occupied with a series of thrilling adventures and that one of them takes the form of love. A courageous chap and full of initiative, it doesn't take him long to make himself adaptable to his new environment.

There is a young girl who accompanies him East — a girl in search of a theatrical career, but who falls into the clutches of white slavers. And he comes to the rescue when she is in danger. Of course he is a marked man but his resourcefulness always saves him. The day approaches when he is to obtain the options and the ringleader of the syndicate attempts to have him framed — framed by the very men responsible for the girl's harrowing experience. But Buck Lindsay, as he is called, is able to take care of himself. And he sees to it that the guilty conspirators get their just deserts. His friend, Johnny Green, has come East too, and immediately falls in love with the would-be actress. When they return home they both realize that they have lost their hearts but succeeded in saving the property of their pals. This is a two-fisted picture, which presents a series of hair-raising complications, a wealth of humor and a shade of heart interest. It is refreshing and delightful and capably interpreted by Mr. Russell and a capable company.

CATCH LINES

They attempted to trifle with a Westerner, but found out to their sorrow that he meant business. He could handle a gun or fight with his fists. See William Russell in "Eastward Ho!"

See William Russell as a Westerner who comes to New York and finds adventure, excitement, and ———. See "Eastward Ho!" a smashing picture of stirring situations and climaxes.

They tried to mulct the Westerner out of his money but they miscalculated on the spirit of the West. See Bill Russell in the dramatic photoplay, "Eastward Ho!" Its great.

PROGRAM READER

Buck Lindsay had never been East before, so when he found himself in New York he felt exceeding awkward. But Buck knew how to take care of himself even though he did hail from the plains. When a girl he met on the journey begged him to come to her rescue he promptly did so. Buck was afraid of nothing. He came East to square the account against a certain crooked syndicate, but business had to wait when fair ladies were in distress. How he takes care of himself, how he conquers the syndicate with his truly Western methods, how he finds romance and helps his pal to find it too, are events which compose a very interesting photodrama — a photodrama which offers a rich variety of situations and climaxes. The action is red-blooded and it builds with ever increasing interest. The picture is "Eastward Ho!"— the star, William Russell.

"A VIRTUOUS VAMP"

Best Constance Talmadge Picture to Date

THE reviewer is firmly convinced that this is the best Constance Talmage picture to date. It is farce comedy that has a logical story whereas farce is never expected to be real farce if there is anything logical in it. But this photoplay disproves the established theory. And besides having a logical reason for the situations and action it gives Constance Talmage the best opportunity she ever had to demonstrate her talents as a comedienne.

It is just spicy enough to be quite audacious but has just the necessary delicacy to provide exquisite enjoyment for all classes.

The continuity is clear and direction is excellent, while the entire cast contributes a very capable performance. How the girl stenographer innocently vamps every department of the office into distraction is told in a highly amusing manner and laughable situations follow one another in rapid succession.

And there is a pretty romantic interest added when the charming little vamp tries her wiles, apparently in vain, on the only man she ever cared to win.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and exceptionally pleasing; Elite, strong puller and most highly pleasing; Family, big puller and greatly pleasing; Labor, strong puller and very pleasing. From Clyde Fitch's play, "The Bachelor."
Adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos.
Directed by David Kirkland.
Photographed by Oliver Marsh.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Constance Talmadge in "A Virtuous Vamp" is the First National Attraction to appear at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ———.

This is from Clyde Fitch's great laughing success, "The Bachelor," seen on many stages and was adapted for the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

When Gwendolyn Beofort Armitege was two years old her folks lost their all in the San Francisco disaster and as the photoplay opens the little two-year-old is "vamping" even at that early age when she bestows a kiss upon the fireman that carried her.

Twenty years later we find her in New York as Nellie Jones, looking for a position as stenographer. James Crowninshield engages her, and every department she is placed in is immediately thrown in chaos as she is so pleasantly vampish that all the employes merely gaze at her instead of working.

Finally the boss takes her as his private secretary, and as he is all business the youthful employer is apparently immune from ner blandishments. However, when a prominent shimmie dancer applies for $10,000 insurance for her shoulders the boss did not know what a risk his company might be taking until his stenographer showed him how the dance was performed by gracefully moving her shoulders.

This is described by the critics as one of the best farce comedies of the year and they are a unit in declaring that this is the best photoplay that Constance Talmadge has ever appeared in to date.

PROGRAM READER

She was a shimmie dancer and wanted to insure her shoulders for $10,000.

After the insurance man saw her performance he wanted to know why she just wanted her shoulders insured.

The pretty stenographer, employed by the insurance man, was the party responsible for the boss witnessing the dancer's performance.

For when the application came in he was amazed and asked her if she knew what a shimmie dancer was and why she wanted this insurance.

So the pretty stenographer told him that insuring these shoulders might be accepting quite a risk and suggested that he see the dancer himself. And he took his stenographer along with him to the cabaret.

But he was a hard-headed although youthful business man, and although his stenographer was a natural vamp she was a good girl.

So no real harm was done. But good was accomplished later in this screaming farce which comes to this theatre next week.

It was adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Clyde Fitch's great stage success, "The Bachelor," and winsome Constance Talmadge is the star in this First National Attraction.

CATCH LINES

A business office in which chaos is introduced because of the vamping proclivities of a pretty stenographer.

"LASCA"

Famous Poem Makes Fairly Pleasing Picture

FRANK DESPREZ' famous poem, "Lasca," has been visualized upon the screen with a fair amount of success. Although the story is colorful and dramatic enough to excite the imagination it hardly suffices for five reels of film entertainment inasmuch as the climax is a long time arriving. And this ingredient is the sustaining point of interest. The lapse of action may be due to the fact that it is familiar to most of us. Which of course robs it of any suspensive value. It is a faithful adaptation however, though here and there it has been elaborated to fit the camera. The characterization remains the same, the wild rose, Lasca, being wonderfully humanized by Edith Roberts.

To give it melodramatic shape certain characters are introduced that are not found in the original. This elaboration has not spoiled the poem a particle. Rather has it brought emphasis to the high lights. The sponsors have acted upon the hero's desire to make the girl jealous for something he did rather than for something he said. So they promptly introduce a former sweetheart, which was the logical thing to do under the circumstances. In the meantime you catch the poetry of the romance that has developed between the lovers. You catch the pathos — pathos which isn't spoiled by any truckling to a happy ending. Lasca dies with loving sacrifices. The tempestuous little heroine gives up her life to save her lover from the mad stampede.

THE CAST

Lasca.....Edith Roberts
The Mexican Boy.....Arthur Jasmine

John Davis.....Lloyd Whitlock

Directed by Norman Dawn.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Frank Mayo, Universal star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photodramatic production entitled "Lasca." This is an adaptation of Frank Duprez' famous poem of the same name, and it provides the star with a romantic role of which he takes the fullest advantage. Most every one is familiar with the Mexican girl, Lasca, who sacrificed her life through love for the cowboy. A little "spitfire" is Lasca, and so difficult to handle that she is promptly given a wide latitude by her own people.

Anthony Moreland is attracted to her through the sheer force of her personality. She will not brook any indifference on his part. A time comes when her jealous nature is provoked and quick as a flash she stabs him with a queer little dagger. She expects as much love as she gives, and she cannot understand why he neglects her for an American girl. Although her anger is quick her remorse keeps pace with it. And she binds the wound. So Anthony and Lasca ride the plains. "The green beneath, the blue above—dash and danger, life and love." So it is in Texas down by the Rio Grande.

A Texas "norther" comes up and "woe to the rider and woe to the steed who falls in the path of the wild stampede." To save him from the onrushing herd the girl sacrifices her life. So he buries her and his heart at the same time in Texas down by the Rio Grande.

A vivid picture does this poem make — a picture of romance and adventure. The story offers situations of heart interest and appeal. Mr. Mayo is assisted by Edith Roberts as Lasca, and she humanizes the character with keen sympathy and understanding. Norman Dawn produced the picture from a scenario by Clifford Howard.

CATCH LINES

Do you remember that stirring poem, "Lasca?" Do you remember how you thrilled to it as you followed her tragic career? Come and see her humanized upon the screen next ———.

"Once when I had made her jealous for fun — for something I had whispered or said or done — she drew from her breast a queer little dagger — Quick, sting of a wasp it made me stagger. But scratches don't count in Texas, down by the Rio Grande."

She loved him with a jealous passion. A brave little girl was Lasca and she sacrificed her life for love. See a photoplay from the celebrated poem, "Lasca," next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

A good angle in advertising this feature would be to print the poem if you can get hold of a copy and distribute it in the form of a circular letter. This will arouse the interest of those who have read it in the original, and it is vital enough to attract those who are unfamiliar with it. Use excerpts from it for your teaser announcements and catch lines. Bring out that it is an adaptation of the poem of the same name — a poem which is constantly used by actors for recitations. Mention that it is seen here with all its color and vitality. Feature its source in all your advertising. Tell that it features Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts. Emphasize the fact that it is a picture of undying love and devotion. Inasmuch as most people are familiar with it, you might get someone to recite it.

"THE UNDERCURRENT"

(SELECT)

Patriotic Note May Carry This Picture By

GUY EMPEY has taken advantage of the social unrest which has been dominant since the war ended by turning out a propaganda picture based upon this vexing problem. He has striven in all sincerity to point a lesson in patriotism for the guidance of the working man, but in doing so he has overlooked to incorporate an underlying theme which would give his drama a sustaining note. Mr. Empey doesn't solve anything. He merely draws a vivid picture of an isolated case and attempts to reveal what would take place if Red agitation so intrigued the minds of the working people that they forgot the meaning of the American flag.

A group of dark visaged plotters scheme to incite the working people and the soldiers recently returned from France through their undercurrent of intrigue. By working on one of the boys who has a gift for oratory they feel certain that he can enlist the others by pointing out that there has been no reward in their fighting. When success is about to crown their efforts our hero has a vision of the flag and what it stands for and he routs them with patriotic fervor. Aided, of course, by the soldiers.

The picture as presented, reveals a melodrama of the most lurid type. And to attract the enthusiasm of the audience the author-actor resorts to the tried and true and much overworked formula of waving the flag. One thing is certain if the Reds act as stupidly as they do here, the country is not in danger. Mr. Empey has a competent company of players, the work of Frederick Buckley standing out conspicuously. PRESS NOTICE-STORY

A stirring, thrilling story of the life of the average working man and his family will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ————. The name of the picture is "The Undercurrent" and it presents Guy Empey as the star. The theme of the subject is based upon the Red menace which is constantly striving to gain a foothold in America. Jack Duncan has returned from France with an ambition to better his position at the Loring Steel Mills, where he was formerly employed. But his old job was taken which of course forced him in the machine shop. For a time he was happy.

But the Reds had their eyes on him knowing that if they could enlist his services in their cause they would be able to control the soldiers. He listened to the swish of their undercurrent and found himself out of work. And when a man is no longer able to provide for himself and his family he will listen to any Utopian scheme to better his fortune. He realized that life had not given him a square deal. Then suddenly his eyes were opened to the truth and he realized that the United States Government was in danger of being overthrown. So Jack Duncan, the agitator, became Jack Duncan, the fighter. And the undercurrent was washed away. And happiness reigned again. Mr. Empey is supported by a competent cast. The story was written by the star and it offers a timely and vital melodrama.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this feature we would advise you to play up Guy Empey since he is a national figure not only as a fighter but as the author of "Over the Top," the first of the war books. Impress upon your patrons that Mr. Empey wrote "The Undercurrent" but that it isn't a war story. Tell them that it is a timely and vital subject which has to deal with one of the causes of social unrest in America. Tell them it deals with the life of the average working man. Obtain the co-operation of the local bookshops and endeavor to get them to run a window display of Empey's books. Also have them announce that the author will be seen in his latest picture at the ———— next ————. Use catch lines in emphasizing the import of the theme. Co-operate with the schools and offer prizes to the student who writes the best essay on "The Undercurrent." Mention the players.

CATCH LINES

The undercurrent of Red agitation had him in its grip. Then something happened. He remembered that he had pledged himself to uphold the Government. See "The Undercurrent."

The story of a man who found a harder battle to contend with "over here" than he had found "over there." See Guy Empey, the author of "Over the Top" in "The Undercurrent."

A story of the average working man and his family—that is "The Undercurrent" which will come to the ———— next ————. A timely, vital picture of social unrest. Don't miss it!

"THE RIGHT TO LIE"

(PATHE)

A Conventional Sob Sister Story

"THE Right to Lie," Dolores Cassinelli's newest picture under the Capellani banner, is cut from a familiar cloth, its theme having time and again been presented on the speaking stage and several occasions on the screen. It is the old tale of the young and trusting wife who commits perjury in order to save her husband from paying the penalty for murder. A jury permits him to go free on the unwritten law, holding that the crime was justifiable. Before this climax is reached the heorine is pictured as a "more sinned against than sinning" woman.

Because she repulses a certain social parasite he obtains evidence against her in the shape of a "flashlight" photograph, taken before she was married, and when she is in the arms of her own father, though the moral leper does not know of the relationship. She is dismissed from his home by her stepmother who has been kept in ignorance that her husband was married before. This woman presents herself as a very unnatural character, and the father does not merit much sympathy because of his failure to show some authority in his home. When the daughter marries, the parasite comes into her life again and it is her moments with him that give rise to her husband's suspicions. She is endeavoring only to obtain the fatal photograph.

And so to the crime and the trial. Naturally, the wife is a sympathetic figure and one responds to her sacrifice of her good name and honor and admitting guilt when there isn't any. Mr. Carewe's direction is capable enough and the acting is of a first rate order. Miss Cassinelli plays the heroine with plenty of charm and color. Length, 7 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Right to Lie," Dolores Cassinelli's new picture, which comes to the ———— theatre beginning ————, is a story of a young woman who sacrifices her good name to save her husband from the electric chair. It is more than that; it is also a tale of man's condemnation of woman. And so it offers a highly dramatic entertainment—one which unfolds a wealth of pathos and sentiment. Its chief character is Carlotta who is brought from Italy by her father, J. Winthrop Drake, and taken into his home. He poses as her guardian because he doesn't want his wife to know that he was once married to an Italian woman.

Carlotta eventually meets Curtis Austin, a patron of the arts, and marries him. But the girl is apparently not safe from evil gossip anywhere. A social parasite puts a wrong conception on her character and constantly threatens to expose her. It is her object to obtain certain incriminating evidence which he possesses. The husband, however, feels that his wife is untrue and kills the moral leper. He refuses to see his wife and accepts the inevitable. But Carlotta, with supreme sacrifice, tells on the witness stand that she has been dishonorable. It is her right to lie to save her husband. And the jury acquits him on the ground that the crime was justifiable. Miss Cassinelli makes Carlotta a study in feminine love and devotion, and she is ably assisted by players of proven ability. Edwin Carewe directed the picture from a story by Jane Murfin, who is one of the leading playwrights of the day.

CATCH LINES

If your husband had falsely accused you of being dishonorable and had committed murder, would you go on the witness stand and save him by defaming your character? See how Dolores Cassinelli answers it in "The Right to Lie."

No evidence in the world could save her husband except that she take the witness stand and bring dishonor on her good name. Although he had wrongly accused her, she committed a supreme sacrifice.

See "The Right to Lie," Dolores Cassinelli's new picture of a woman's sacrifice to save her husband. A picture of tremendous sympathy and sentiment and pathos.

PROGRAM READER

No matter where she turned evil gossip pursued her. Even when she married she couldn't escape the social parasite. Provoked because she repulsed him, he attacked her in the most cowardly way. A flashlight photograph taken when she was in the arms of another man was the evidence. This she sought to obtain. The husband put a wrong conception on the scene and promptly killed the coward. He believed his wife guilty, but it was plain to be seen that no power could save him from the electric chair. Then what do you suppose took place? With supreme courage and sacrifice his wife buried his scathing denunciation of her character and came to the rescue. She would tell a lie. She would make herself out dishonorable in order to establish a motive for the crime. This is the brief outline of Dolores Cassinelli's new picture, "The Right to Lie," which comes to this theatre very shortly. Don't miss it; it presents a powerful picture of love and devotion. It is dramatic to the core.

ONE SWALLOW DOES NOT MAKE A SUMMER---

Neither does any one feature make a projector—

Nor does the word of any one man create its popularity—

Neither can one installation establish its reputation—

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL PROJECTOR

is the one

That contains the majority of exclusive and practical features—

That is chosen by the greatest number of representative men of the industry—

That delivers high quality projection entailing a minimum of upkeep costs—

That renders faithful service years after the original purchase price is forgotten—

That once used is never changed.

We are confident that the Simplex comes nearer to meeting the foregoing requirements than any other projector and we are also confident that our records will thoroughly back up this belief.

Mr. Watterson Rothacker,
Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.,
1339 Diversey Parkway, Chicago, Ill.

I take this means of extending to you and your associates heartiest congratulations and thanks for the beautiful work given us on the print "Eyes of Youth". It is without a question of a doubt as fine an example of laboratory work as I have ever had the pleasure of seeing. Sincere good wishes for your continued success. Kindest regards.

HERBERT K. SOMBORN, President
Equity Pictures Corporation, New York.

If you knew the cost of Equity's magnificent opening production—CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG—in—"EYES OF YOUTH" you would understand why Equity wired us to "spare no expense" but make the most elaborate prints that brains and money can turn out. How well we have executed the order can be best judged by the headline of this ad. When it came to the selection of the laboratory to make the finest that human skill can produce Equity remembered the trade slogan—

"Just leave it to Rothacker"

made good. We knew what time, patience and vast expenditures of money it required to produce "EYES OF YOUTH." Naturally we knew the prints just had to be the best in the land. We'd like to have your opinion on the beauty of these prints. Ask any Equity franchise holder. There's one in your territory.

"By Their Goods Shall Ye Know Them"

We are speaking of retailers now.

The quality clothier sells high-class clothing.

The quality jeweler sells high-class jewelry.

The quality exhibitor sells high-class pictures.

This is an era of QUALITY: an era in which the cheap and shoddy is invariably rejected for something BETTER and higher priced.

More and more the great buying public is becoming sold on the idea that cheap goods are expensive.

And quality goods can only be secured by the retailer through the payment of an equitable quality price.

Cheapness in price inevitably spells a parallel cheapness in product.

And this applies to amusement purchases equally with all other necessities.

Discerning exhibitors have seen the handwriting on the wall:

THE DAY OF THE CHEAP PICTURE IS PAST!

The public has been educated to the quality production and it will have no other.

And that is ALL we have to offer you. QUALITY PRODUCTIONS. No other kind may have our sanction and approval.

If you are presenting Paramount-Artcraft Pictures in your theatre you are recognized as a QUALITY retailer.

LEAH BAIRD in The Capitol

From the notable stage success by

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

Directed by George Irving

5,000 Exhibitors Will Play This!

More than 3,000 theatres already presented "As A Man Thinks" to their patrons—and never a one has failed to report: "This is a great emotional drama with a punch of the sort that people like to get from a screenplay."

"The Capitol" is bigger yet and of the same honest melodramatic make.

It is the biggest and best made of the Leah Baird -Augustus Thomas dramas. It has finer production qualities and a story tenser, tighter and universal in its appeal to all the elements that pay past the front doors of motion picture theatres.

Prints of "The Capitol" are now being shipped to all offices for your inspection.

The Lord Loves the Irish

By MONTE M. KATTERJOHN

Directed by ERNEST C. WARDE

The rogue in his eye made quick work for Cupid. The might in his arms took him from a Glengarry farm to the top in hard-fighting New York.

The story with the wonderful title and the romance of the shamrocks; with an Irish-named star and a Scotch-Irish producer. Everybody put their hearts in the making of this story.

What the popular exhibitor demand will be for this production is evidenced by two score of big first run bookings for pre-release before a print had been shipped.

Here is a tempestuous, brilliant romantic melodrama—what one onlooker calls "a devil-may-care drama from bare feet to soup and fish" in five wonderful, rollicking reels of excitement.

I'D RATHER OWN A TENT SHOW—AND BE FREE

than have the most beautiful picture theatre in the country and not be able to run it MY WAY.

If I lived in a town that had the most beautiful picture theatre that you can imagine, and I knew that the owner of that theatre was so tied up that he couldn't buy and run the best films made —

I'd get a big tent, if I couldn't get anything else,

And I'd book those big films Mr. Theatreman couldn't run, and I'd play to capacity while he played to empty seats.

If you let any Distributor-Interests frighten you into long-term contracts or scare you into selling out the controlling power of your house, look out for the tent-show man!

Remember, people want to see the best pictures that are made, and they will see them, whether in a picture palace, a tent or a barn. But you can't keep quality films away from them.

And remember, no one company has a monopoly on quality production, and the increasing number of independent producers of the best type is a guarantee that no one will ever have such a monopoly.

Distributor-Interests that want you to sign your life away are trying to tie up the film market. They can't do it, because this company, and every other independent producer is going to keep the market open. We are not afraid of the open market, because we have good pictures to sell. And if you want to stay in business you have got to show good pictures, and you won't be able to show them if you sign long term contracts or sell the control of your house.

For this reason United Artists Corporation is selling by the single picture only, and is dealing with individual theatres. I go on record now with the promise that any time an attempt is made to force this company to book through any channel that seeks to tie up conditions anywhere, we'll book our pictures with the independents that stand for an open market, or we'll show our pictures in a school-house, a church or a tent, if need be.

Any attempt to tie up the market, in any way, by any one, is not for your benefit, nor for the benefit of the industry. Such a monopoly seeks its own selfish ends, and will ruin the entire motion picture business.

Keep yourself free, don't sign long-term contracts, don't sell out, and you'll have the pick of the best pictures in the field. The other course is business suicide, and if you're in this business to make money, keep away from anything that doesn't guarantee you your full control of the pictures that are to go onto your screen.

Three Never-to-be-forgotten Portrayals

As the months go by and the millions see more and more will it be demonstrated that this master-artist of films has created the one great, enduring screen classic.

And as people discuss "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" and call to mind its exquisite, haunting charm, "The Girl," and "The Chinaman" and "'Battling' Burrows" will live again in their minds. These three character portrayals reach a height of dramatic art, never surpassed on the stage or screen.

People are talking of "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" the country over, and they will continue to talk of it. When they do, is your theatre recalled as the house that made possible its presentation?

If you are building for the future, if you are trying to establish a personality for your house, you cannot afford to miss the help that "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" will give you. Just as surely as your patrons will remember "BROKEN BLOSSOMS," just so surely will they think back with gratitude to the theatre that brought this masterpiece to them.

If you haven't already booked "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" cut out the coupon on this page, fill in your complete address, and mail today to your nearest United Artists Corporation Branch Office—see list below—for full information on D. W. GRIFFITH'S greatest creation.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS'

new picture to be released December 29th

"WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"

is a distinct novelty. You think you know Fairbanks, and what he can do for your theatre; "WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY" is the biggest Fairbanks surprise that you've so far been able to offer your patrons.

More fun than he's ever been able to put into a picture, more thrills, more stunts, a story that gives him a one hundred per cent opportunity to work for your box-office. And you know what that means.

For example, the scene shown above required the flooding of an entire village, but Douglas Fairbanks did it without regard to cost—to give you the most crowd-compelling picture of his career.

Producing independently and releasing direct to the theatres of the country, he is at last in a position to make the kind of pictures you want him in.

PRINCE LAUGHS AT FILM FUN.

The Prince of Wales had his first opportunity yesterday since he came to New York to be "a regular boy," and he took full advantage of it. He went to the movies as guest of William Fox at the Academy of Music in Fourteenth

The New York Times in telling of the visit of H·R·H· The Prince of Wales to the William Fox Academy of Music gave the facts concerning his appreciation of Mutt and Jeff, Fox Sunshine Comedies and Fox News.

The show started with an exhibition of Mutt and Jeff in some amusing antics. The crowd watched intently to see if he was going to like it. He did. And every time he broke into a laugh the whole place laughed good-naturedly with him.

The second picture concerned itself with some fantastic adventures of a not very successful troupe of dog catchers. Edward Albert followed their mishaps with a broad grin, and when a bumptious goat came into the reel to enliven the proceedings, he laughed so heartily he imperilled his balance on the little chair.

The entertainment concluded with movies of the Prince's arrival the day before. They afforded him an opportunity to view his entry from an opposite point of view to that of Tuesday—the picture had an unwonted touch of realism for every time the screen showed a cheering throng those inside supplied an appropriate volume of welcoming demonstration.

Goldwyn Build Their Stories to the Stars!

YOU can crowd a picture with stars, glorify it with fine settings, entrust it to the mercies of a directive genius, and add the glamor of a great author's name, but it has got to have the saving grace of a human story to bring the people in.

The point is, the Goldwyn organization does more than retain great stars. It furnishes stories that give an opportunity to show how great their talents are.

SUPERIOR BRAINS

You have been taught to believe that the captains of Finance, Commerce, and Industry have attained the heights of power by virtue of "Superior Brains." Did you ever stop to consider that the railroads continued to run after the deaths of Harriman and Hill? That the banks continued to function after the elder Morgan departed this life? That the steel industry did not fall into chaos with the demise of Frick and Carnegie; and that if as a result of some terrible calamity every capitalist in the country suddenly died, industry would not cease operations for one day? The reason the great industrial and financial Magnates of the past were powerful, and the present crop of money Wizards are now at the helms, is because they learned one great lesson:—the way to acquire wealth is to

MAKE MONEY WORK

We are operating a Bankers' Corporation, a Banking and Financial venture that is based on government statistics covering business history and the basis of our concern is the idea now agitating the minds of millions, (co-operation, instead of a few men running the whole show), we are inviting the average man into the venture.

INVESTIGATE

We do not ask you to do anything but investigate. We do not expect to convince you now, nor do we attempt to convince you by this advertisement. What we do expect to do, however, is to interest the man who is alive to real business facts, send for particulars —it means money to you.

Gentlemen:

Please don't forget that we want all the hand colored scenics you can give us. The one we are using this week is not only surpassingly beautiful and interesting, but causes as much laughter as a first class comedy.

You do not have to look any further than the Capitol for your other pictures of this kind.

Since 1914, "Educational" short subjects have predominated on Times Square programs.

Eighty of the Robert C. Bruce Scenics have been "first-run" at the Rialto or Rivoli.

For fifty-three consecutive weeks, the Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature" played "pre-release" at the Strand.

Mr. Bowes, of the Capitol, is just beginning to use his share of the "Educational" productions—and his enthusiam is appreciated.

To leading theatres in every part of the world, "Educational" products sell — as they have sold for years—ON MERIT.

Live Exhibitors have found that the "Educational" exchange is a convenient "short subject headquarters".

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 20, No. 24 December 6, 1919

Percentage Means Equity

A. H. BLANK, of Omaha, replies to our recent editorial: "Percentage is Coming." As a distributor and an exhibitor with fourteen houses Mr. Blank speaks from both angles on this very important subject and with much practical knowledge and experience. His letter follows:

* * * *

November 20, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

This is probably the first letter I have ever written to any trade publication, for like most exhibitors, I am too busy looking after my own immediate needs to write articles for publication.

However, I can not resist the opportunity of answering your editorial of November 15th under the caption "Percentage is Coming."

The writer, as you know, is not only an exhibitor, but a distributor in a small way, and with a chain of fourteen theatres has an opportunity of judging conditions from almost every angle.

Your statement that the producers get but 10 per cent. of the gross amount taken in by the exhibitors will, I believe, have a tendency to create a great more discontent than formerly existed among the producers and exhibitors.

In the first place, I believe that you have been greatly misinformed as to $750,000,000 being the gross income of motion picture theatres (If I remember correctly the committee that appeared before the Ways and Means Committee at Washington in regard to 10 per cent. tax on theatre admissions figured that the government got approximately $70,000,000 a year — this included vaudeville and legitimate productions, while the tax, of course, is even more than 10 per cent. when the admission charged is odd, such as 15 cents, 25 cents, etc.), while I think your figure of $75,000,000 is too low for amount of film rental received by film producers.

In the second place, I do not think it is fair to compare a show or clothing manufacturer's dealings with a retailer on the same basis as you would a producer and exhibitor, for it costs the exhibitor more to sell his goods to the public than it does a merchant.

Recently I paid $1,500 for a big production in Omaha, while I spent this amount of money exploiting this very same picture in the newspapers, to say nothing of other exploitation expense, such as billboards, heralds, paper, costumes for ushers, etc. Even then I paid 24 per cent. of my gross to the producer.

Taking the large and small houses altogether, and arriving at a general average, I believe the exhibitors are paying about 30 per cent. of the gross intake for their feature pictures.

Of course, we have the exceptional exhibitor who takes advantage of his closed town conditions and is very unreasonable and unfair in his dealings with the distributor, but it is only a question of time until that class of exhibitor will see the light or have to get out of the business.

My object in writing this letter is not to hold any brief for the exhibitor, but to ask you to correct the erroneous statement that only 10 per cent. is being paid to the producer by the exhibitor, for this statement of yours will have a tendency to create more dissention than anything that has been said or done along these lines. On one hand it will make the distributor feel that he has been dealt with unfairly by the exhibitor. On the other hand, the large number of exhibitors who are paying from 25 to 40 per cent. for their service will feel that they have been taken advantage of and will insist upon paying less for their service in the future.

Personally I do not think it will ever be possible to regulate the value of films to exhibitors, for the value depends to a very large extent upon the showmanship of the exhibitor, the class of theatre the feature is presented in, the advertising campaign used and other exploitation methods.

Cordially yours,
A. H. BLANK.

* * * *

OUR figures — $750,000,000 gross annual intake by the theatres in this country and the return to the producer-distributor of $75,000,000 — we believe to be correct.

These figures were only given out after considerable investigation.

The total of $75,000,000 to the producer-distributor tallies with the estimates of the sales offices here in New York. The gross income figures are difficult to fix. However those given check with our own investigation of the theatres and their seating capacities in eighty cities and towns in this country; they also check with a turnstile record made recently in Chicago. They represent a daily attendance of ten and a half per cent. of the population paying an average admission of eighteen cents a day.

At any rate, exclusive of the war tax, the theatres are taking in at the rate of at least $600,000,000 a year, which, as we said, would make a return to the producer-distributor of 12½ per cent. in film rentals.

The average film rental appears to be about 10 per cent. for the big houses and 25 per cent. for the small theatres. Some big houses, as Mr. Blank points out, pay more, often considerably more than 10 per cent. but this rental varies with the picture and what is more to the point, many big houses pay less than 10 per cent. average. And we know of small houses which pay 40 per cent. and others which pay under 20 per cent.

There is much inequality all along the line. This situation, as we pointed out, is simply this: where the exhibitor — the one-man-town exhibitor or circuit owner — has the upper hand he gets a low rental; and where competition exists the distributor makes the exhibitor pay well.

In other words the exhibitor who gets the best of it is helping to make some other exhibitor get the worst of it.

THE closed town or closed territory exhibitor who forces rental prices down below the producers' legitimate profit, who discourages the making of better pictures, or indeed any at all, is about the biggest menace this industry faces. He is much worse than the distributor who with mediocre pictures and flashy sales and advertising gets the exhibitor to pay too much. The latter will go down in his own ruin: but the former will take the whole industry with him.

The chain theatre owner is like a man with a loaded shot gun in his hands. He is mighty dangerous to all around him if he shoots.

Today we have one circuit of theatres in this country, growing with tremendous leaps. Here's a constructive, profitable business, if it's run upon a broad, farseeing, live-and-let-live basis. It enjoys a great buying power. But if that power isn't righteously used it will kill the very thing that made this big theatre business so wonderful an enterprise — namely the motion picture. And in so doing it will kill itself.

At any rate, there is much inequality all along the line. That we all know. There is no basis of value for pictures. The transaction between exhibitors and the distributor salesman is simply a poker game — bluff, counter-bluff and show-down, threats, tricks and bombast. And not merely that but the actual invasion of each field by the other.

This is dangerous, unsatisfactory and it would seem, unnecessary.

* * * *

AS Mr. Blank says: "You can not regulate the value of film to exhibitors for the value depends, to a very large extent upon the showmanship of the exhibitor, the class of theatre the feature is presented in, the advertising campaign and other exploitation methods."

Very true. And that's just the trouble with the present method. It proves nothing except the bargaining ability of either side, or the leverage one has over the other.

Under percentage the picture would stand before the public on its own merit: the exhibitor, the theatre, the advertiser, the producer, the distributor, would each earn on his own merit.

The only thing, as Mr. Brunet pointed out in last week's issue of the NEWS, in his very fair and able statement, is to arrive first at the proper basis to fix percentage.

Let us hear from others along these lines. Who has a suggestion?

The subject is of the utmost importance. It not merely affects the immediate pocketbook of every one concerned but it is causing the biggest economic disturbances the whole industry is now facing.

Wm. A. Johnston.

Dealing In Personalities

WELL, boys, it looks as though you will soon see that large-page Motion-Picture News again. We still have our fingers crossed and are knocking wood with religious regularity. Besides, those of you who run those pretty inserts must have plenty of time to change your plans — so the official notice is in abeyance.

But if all the good omens in the heavens hold true we should be able to give you that big-page News again for about the December 27th issue. That edition is also the annual special Holiday Number. There's a combination, eh?

The big special Holiday Number that always creates such unusual interest — plus — the return to the popular large size! The more we think of that combination the more we look forward to a record-breaking issue. Don't you see it that way? Give it a thought in your advertising plans.

WHILE our mind is still on that Holiday Number we are moved to remark that if the news keeps breaking with the regularity it has evidenced for the last few weeks, and if all the rumblings in the film world mature about that time - as every indication points — it ought to be a great issue from a news viewpoint, too.

We have Exhibitor Defence Committees girding up their loins, circuits and associations of all sorts and conditions, rumblings of more and more producers buying theatres, hints that present big circuits are considering the production of pictures. Gosh, one of these days there will be a blast of news breaking that will turn any blue pencil pale.

THE event in this week's news in which "Personalities" feels keenest interest is the resignation of Arthur Kane as president of Realart. Perhaps that is because this happening contains the most "human" interest.

Arthur Kane has just completed one of the achievements of the business in the establishing of Realart on a firm foundation in such rapid-fire order. The man who takes even a sure-fire proposition in this game and puts it over deserves credit. The man who takes a tough proposition and wins after a long uphill struggle earns every bit of the praise he gets. But the man who takes a proposition that aroused only moderate advance anticipation and plants it firmly on its feet as one of the big bets of the business even before the echo of the doubters' words has died — well, this typewriter of ours has its limitations and we can't say enough.

And Arthur Kane is the man who has just performed the miracle.

So surprising to us is the news of his resignation that we have a half-way feeling that even before this page reaches your hands the Board of Directors may have induced him to reconsider. You know that feeling that "it can't possibly happen."

Maybe we'll have to "reconsider" our news announcement next week.

"CALLING around" has its pleasures when you get the chance to chat with some of the men we met during the past week. We started off well, bright and early Monday morning by calling in to say "Howdy" to Alex Beyfuss, of the Robertson-Cole organization.

We found him effervescing on the subject of "The Beloved Cheater," the Lew Cody special. And when Beyfuss enthuses he is a whole bundle of contagious enthusiasm. He sold us on the Cody picture—right up to the hilt. Enough to slip you the tip that the Robertson-Cole trade-mark will be seen on a lot of first-run screens before "The Beloved Cheater" is through.

Incidentally we also heard something regarding the early bookings on the new Johnson series that would cheer up anyone interested in the future of "class" short subjects. When such theatres as the Kansas City Newman go after a series as a top-line attraction you can write the rest of the story without our aid.

Tuesday brought us a meeting with Joe Lee—much to our advantage. For the genial Joe never thinks in the same rut as "the next fellow" and hearing his slant on conditions is like a tonic. Joe impressed us as though he was just about to break loose with an announcement, but he refuses to be pinned down to a statement and still declares he is foot-loose. "I am taking a vacation—I am enjoying it—and what's more I find that I needed it," declares Joe.

Another day saw a visit from John E. Hennegan, of "Hennegan Print, Cincinnati." How many years have we seen that label on show printing? We'll have to confess that it wasn't until our talk with young Hennegan and a view of his portfolio's contents that we knew of the quantity of work the Hennegan organization is turning out for the motion-picture field.

AS we meander merrily toward the presses that are waiting for this palpitating page the mail brings in a few bits of news that we will have to treat in greater detail next week. First there is a telegram stating that "Mr. Bernard Levey formerly of the Gotham Film Corporation, is in Wilmington, Delaware," and that his odd bits of conversation have started a rumor concerning a "ten million dollar corporation to be known as DuPont Pictures." Mr. Levey confesses that he has found an ideal studio site in Wilmington, but declares that any definite news will have to wait on a meeting of the Board of Directors in New York early next week.

"Gotham Pictures Corporation!" How our mind travels back over these fillum years.

We refuse to get excited and turn to the next bit of last-minute mail.

J. D. Williams contributes a corking article on what the independent producer, backed by exhibitor cooperation, has meant to the picture field in the past few years. We'll give you the whole article next week but now we can let you have the bit of news that Mr. Williams lets slip in the course of it—the fact that Harry Crandall, Moe Mark and Charles E. Whitehurst are three of the prominent exhibitors who have already become allied with the Exhibitors' Defense Committee.

Then there are some pages regarding Ricord Gradwell's new plans as president of the Producer's Security Corporation. The details will be given next week. The outline is "primarily a service organization. It is not a producing concern, nor does it distribute pictures. It aims to act as an intermediary between the producer and the distributor, and to safeguard the interests of both."

KANE RESIGNS FROM REALART

IT became known on Tuesday, November 25th, that the resignation of Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart, had been placed in the hands of the Board of Directors.

When interviewed regarding his action Mr. Kane added little to a confirmation, further than the statement that his resignation was due to "a divergence of opinion on matters of fundamental policy." While admitting that he has received many interesting propositions, Mr. Kane said that a definite announcement of his future plans would not be forthcoming for several weeks.

The news of the resignation came with particular surprise because of the remarkable success Arthur S. Kane has just achieved in the manner of organizing and putting over Realart. This feat has been the cause of considerable praise from all sections of the industry.

Coast Film Men Air Grievances

Chamber of Commerce Hears Story of Overcharging on all Sides and Poor Bank Facilities

GRIEVANCES of film producers in Los Angeles were told to representative business men of that city, at a meeting of committee chairmen of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the producers. The meeting was called by the officers of the Chamber of Commerce in the hope of learning the difficulty the producers encounter with the view of aiding the producers in bettering the conditions.

When inquiry was made at this meeting as to what unsatisfactory conditions existed, the producers took advantage of the opportunity to tell of their grievances. Primarily, the film men claim, there is unjust discrimination against motion picture people by citizens, retail merchants, lumber dealers and bankers. Rentals are higher for the people of the motion picture industry than to others, and in many instances landlords have refused to rent properties to film companies for location use, or have made an exorbitant charge for the rental. Rentals of furniture and other properties they claim are exorbitant, and in some instances amount to one-fifth of the intrinsic value of the article rented.

The banking facilities of Los Angeles are most unsatisfactory, the banks refusing to accommodate film companies when drafts are delayed, or wires are down. Instances were cited where payrolls were held up several days because of wrecks or washouts, the banks refusing to advance money to the film companies when negative valued at many times the amount of the loan asked was tendered as security.

Another local condition is that created by newspapers whose editors have unintentionally given the people of the film industry, a black eye by referring to many people not identified with the industry as "film stars," when they stepped into the limelight because of some sensational event.

The eight hour law of California works a very unjust hardship on film companies, because in many instances the state authorities have insisted that the eight hour day shall start with the time the player reaches the studio, and not from the time they reach location. When it takes two or three hours to go to a location, and the same amount to return to the studio, with an hour out for luncheon, there are but three or four hours left for the filming of scenes.

The outcome of the first meeting of business and film men is that the different grievances will be classified, and taken up by the different committees of the Chamber of Commerce, and at a meeting to be held in the very near future, to which all parties interested will be invited, a plan will be worked out whereby the undesirable conditions may be overcome.

Zittel's Resignation Confirmed

The Huge Scope of His Activities in International Film Prompted Resignation is the Report

CONFIRMING the announcement which appeared in last week's issue of the "News," it is now officially reported that C. F. Zittel, internationally famous as "Zit" of the New York Evening Journal and director-in-chief of innumerable companies within the Hearst organization, has resigned as vice-president and general manager of the International Film Service—his resignation to take effect December 1st.

As head of the International, Zit has had under his direct personal supervision the three Hearst news reels, the Animated Cartoon Department, the Cosmopolitan Productions, the publicity, advertising and serial business of the International and the construction of the new International studios at Second Avenue and E. 126th Street, New York City. He has also had complete charge of the Dramatic, Vaudeville and Motion-Picture Department of the New York Journal and the supervision of the Dramatic Department of the New York American. In addition to his other capacities, Zit has been serving as general manager of the International Still Photograph Department, president of the Marion Davies Co., vice-president of the Graphic Film Corporation, vice-president of the Campbell Studios and vice-president of the Mocar Film Co.

In fact, for the past two years, Zit has found himself in the position of a modern Atlas endeavoring to hold the amusement world—or a large part of it—on his shoulders. Working 24 hours a day, Zit discovered he wasn't sleeping. A discovery with Zit means immediate action, and in this case it resulted in his resignation from the International.

Speaking of his future plans, Zit said: "Now I will devote my entire attention to the Dramatic and Motion Picture Departments of the New York Journal and New York American and look after the affairs of the Campbell Studio. Of course any time my advice or assistance is required in matters pertaining to the International Film Service, Mr. Hearst knows my services are always at his command."

"Personal Supervision" Usually Bunk Declares Marshall Neilan

Marshall Neilan, who has commanded notice as a director not afraid to be outspoken when he felt he was exposing an evil in or out of the industry, and who most recently was lauded because of his expose of the profiteering methods employed by West Coast merchants in their dealings with film companies, has taken pen in hand in behalf of the director whose work, he claims is credited to "personal supervision" of someone who in reality has nothing to do with the production of the picture. Mr. Neilan's letter follows:

"The long-suffering director has been subject to a certain type of abuse at the hands of various producers without being able to publicly defend himself and I think the time has arrived when someone should speak out.

"For some time it has been the practice of the motion picture producer to take practically all the credit for the work of the director. Films are proclaimed to the world as having been 'created under the personal supervision' of a person who has had nothing to do with the actual production of the film. There are some exceptions, as in the case of Thomas H. Ince, where the man credited in such a manner deserves every bit of it. However, the abuse of various persons in this connection at the expense of the director is rapidly reaching a stage where some action is necessary to curb the personal ambitions of men who are endeavoring to satisfy their own vanity and at the same time establish their own name as a business asset at the expense of the director.

"As a specific example permit me to call your attention to the page advertisement which appears in the Nov. 22d issue of your publication concerning 'In Old Kentucky.' In this advertisement it is prominently announced that the film was 'created under the personal supervision of the owner of the picture.' As a matter of fact 'In Old Kentucky' was supervised and directed in its entirety by the undersigned with the same producing staff as that which assisted him in the production of 'Daddy-Long-Legs' 'The Unpardonable Sin' and other films.

"It is not my desire to seek personal publicity in connection with 'In Old Kentucky.' The picture has not as yet been released and its success is still a matter of the future and not of fact. Nor is this letter the result of a temperamental outburst.

"The instance of 'In Old Kentucky' merely accents in my mind the unfairness of this practice and I think something should be done to compel those guilty to realize the fact that they cannot continue the abuse."

Ochs Goes West to Further Plans for Exhibitor Circuit

To further the elaborate plans of the Second National Exhibitor's Circuit, Lee A. Ochs leaves this week for the Coast.

Mr. Ochs, however, will not go direct to Los Angeles but will make many stopovers enroute. It will be his purpose to visit many of the exchange centres between the Atlantic and Pacific to discuss various details with exhibitors who have applied for franchises on the newly formed exhibitor-owned circuit and who are anxious to get firsthand information from the president of the organization as to the plans and ideas of the company.

Just how long Mr. Ochs will be away from New York he himself does not know as he intends to give plenty of time to the lining up of theatre owners and when he reaches the Coast has a vast amount of work to be done as regards production activities of the circuit.

Republic's December Releases Named

Busch Announces Policy of New Concern Will be to Distribute Subjects of Wide Appeal; Announcement of Affiliation of Producing Companies Expected

MARIE DORO, Ruth Clifford and Edith Hallor are the stars. The Republic Distributing Corporation, Briton N. Busch, President and Lewis J. Selznick, Advisory Director, recently formed to distribute pictures has begun active operations. This newcomer in the industry has taken over all the Branch exchanges of the World, its Branch managers, salesmen and office force.

Mr. Busch, President and General Manager of the Republic, has had five years of splendid experience with the World, serving as Secretary, Treasurer and General Manager. He makes the following announcement:

December Releases Scheduled

"The Republic has all the advantages of a going organization with five years of experience and connections, and a record for square dealing which the exhibitors of the United States recognize and appreciate, plus the Selznick record for having given to exhibitors a class of pictures that have enabled them to play to crowded and highly satisfied audiences which has resulted in the exhibitor materially increasing his banking account. The home office will be at 130 West 46th Street, New York.

"The policy of the Republic will be to secure for distribution high class pictures that have the elements of wide appeal made by producers who have been successful in giving exhibitors money making features. Not alone will the Republic handle well-known star productions but will also secure subjects obtained in the open market that lend themselves to the greatest scope of publicity, have the highest degree of drawing power produced by the most eminent directors in a first class manner, with well balanced casts of recognized screen players of unquestioned ability.

"The aim of the Republic will be to give exhibitors such pictures on a basis that will enable the exhibitor to make big money.

"Back of every release will be an exploitation campaign that will put the picture over wherever it is shown.

"Beginning in December," continued Mr. Busch, "the Republic will release as specials three features that should by reason of their box office value, indicate to exhibitors the sort of pictures that they can expect from the Republic Distributing Corporation.

"One of these bears the title of '12:10' and has for its star Marie Doro, celebrated both as a star on the legitimate stage as well as on the screen. Her reputation is not confined alone to the United States, she having appeared in London as a star in the spoken drama under the management of Charles Frohman and has also appeared under his management in America in 'The Morals of Marcus' and other successes.

"Of no lesser importance to the value of '12:10' to exhibitors and the public at large, is the fact that this picture was directed by Herbert Brenon of whom it can be said that there are few, if any better directors connected with the motion picture industry. Mr. Brenon first came into international prominence through his production of 'Neptune's Daughter' in which Annette Kellerman was the star.

"'12:10' is an unusual film story. It has that suspense that makes it impossible for the audience after seeing the first reel to guess the final outcome of the story. The scenes are laid in London and Paris and show those important highlights of local interest which every tourist seeks out on the moment of their arrival in these cities. '12:10' should be a most welcome addition to any program in any theatre devoted to picture presentation.

"Another special production for this month will be 'The Amazing Woman.' It was produced by Lloyd Carleton from a story by Rupert Julian, author of the big box office winner, 'The Beast of Berlin.' It has for its star Ruth Clifford, known to picture patrons from one end of the world to the other. Mr. Carleton as a director also occupies a prominent position in that part of the Hall of Fame devoted to the screen.

"'The Amazing Woman' is a story that has the feminine appeal; is full of heart interest and has the grip that only a high class melodrama obtains.

"Another release for December made by the Republic includes the first of a series of Broadway stage successes made into pictures by the Lawrence Weber Company. Its bears the title of 'The Blue Pearl.' This play had a run at the Lonacre Theatre, New York, and Mr. Weber in selecting this vehicle for the first of his series, chose it from a score that were at his disposal as he deemed it the strongest and best picture possibility on which to establish a following for his productions. Mr. Weber is no new-comer in the industry. It was he who launched Petrova as a screen star and made the most successful of her features which brought crowded houses to every exhibitor who was fortunate enough in securing these releases. Mr. Weber was also identified with dozens of the biggest stage successes seen in New York in the last 10 years.

"The cast of 'The Blue Pearl' includes Edith Haller who starred in pictures under the management of William Fox and has appeared on the spoken stage in the title role of 'Leave it to Jane' and other well known hits. Lumsden Hare plays the leading role and has been prominent on the stage in Klaw & Erlanger, Frohman and Belasco productions. Florence Billings is also in the cast. Miss Billings has appeared in a number of big productions and is now being starred in 'The Heart of a Gypsy.' George Irving directed this production. Mr. Irving was the general producing director for the All Star Corporation and did 'The Witching Hour.' He also is responsible for 'The Daughter of Destiny' with Petrova; 'Raffles,' 'The Amateur Cracksman,' 'To Hell with the Kaiser,' 'Hidden Fires,' 'Back to the Woods' and 'The Silver King.'

"In addition to these three, new Prizma subjects will be released during the month and distributed through the Republic. This company holds the distributing rights to all Prizma subjects.

"The Republic feels proud to be the distributing agent for Kinograms, the de luxe news weekly that has made a name for itself, second to none in the industry, although it is less than a year old.

"The Republic will distribute World Pictures which include over 300 subjects. It is also booking Romany 'Where Love Runs Wild' as a special."

Mr. Busch concludes by stating that within the next few days an important announcement will be made of its association with a number of independent producers of first rank. The Republic will be a distributing organization pure and simple, concentrating its energies on this end of the industry and leaving the production end to specialists in that line.

MORE DENIAL

Turner and Dahnken Not Selling to Loew

TURNER AND DAHNKEN, owners of the First National franchise in San Francisco, have telegraphed to New York a strong denial of a report published last week in a vaudeville paper that they had sold any or all of their theatres to Marcus Loew.

"This is more of that strenuous attempt at subtle propaganda," states the telegram of denial. "Evidently, it is the intention of someone within or without the Loew organization to magnify about a hundred times the actual extent of Marcus Loew's theatre operations.

"We have never had any negotiations with Mr. Loew or any one of his representatives."

"Capitol" Exceeds Booking Quota

Bookings for the first two weeks on "The Capitol," Leah Baird's third in her series of Augustus Thomas dramas for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, have passed the mark for that period set by "As a Man Thinks," when the emotional star's initial Augustus Thomas picture was first introduced to the larger exhibitors the country over.

Universal and the News Reel

IT would seem to be that Universal Film Manufacturing Company's ordained mission is to wage war for the general good of the industry. Back in the Patent days it was Universal that bore the brunt of the struggle, and to-day it is Universal that has fought and won for the news reel the freedom given the press.

By decision of the Appellate Division last week in the case of Mrs. Grace Humiston, the news reel weeklies are granted full privileges of the press in photographing current news events. The decision is far reaching in effect and will open up to all news reels many things they have heretofore hesitated about taking. The gratitude of news reel producers and of the entire industry is therefore due in large measure to Universal for its courage in carrying the case through to this successful conclusion.

New United Plans are Approved

President Berst Receives Number of Congratulatory Telegrams; Meetings and Elections

ENTHUSIASTIC reports are coming in to the home office of the United Picture Theatres of America as regards the first meetings held for the election of local Boards of Trade and a director to represent each territory on the National Board of Directors of United.

President J. A. Berst has been flooded with telegrams all of which speak in glowing terms of the manner in which his plan has been started and the whole hearted way that exhibitors are backing it up and working to make United bigger and stronger than ever.

Up to the time of going to press, meetings had been held in Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Cincinnati and Cleveland. In the Philadelphia territory, Mr. Frank Hill of Reading was elected permanent chairman with L. J. Chamberlain of Shamokin and Harry Savage of Atlantic City as members of the Local Board. Pittsburg elected Mr. Charles Feinler of Wheeling, W. Va., Mr. George Panagatocos of Johnstown, Mr. C. M. McClosky of Uniontown and Mr. Michael Rosenbloom of Charleroi.

At the Boston meeting, Mr. W. G. Hartford of Pawtucket, R. I., owner of the Imperial Theatre and one of New England's best known film men, was elected chairman with Mr. F. A. Smith of Lynn and Mr. Victor Morris of Boston. Mr. Smith is one of the officials of the Waldorf Company, having large theatre, restaurant and realty holdings, while Mr. Morris is General Manager of Loew's Orpheum and has supervision over other theatres.

Fred Schaeffer of the Chrystal Theatre, Chicago, was elected at the meeting held at Morrison Hotel, Chicago, with George Hines, Auditorium Theatre of South Bend, Ind., and Fred Seegert of the Regent Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. Cincinnati, Ohio, will have as their leader Mr. J. W Weining, of the Western Plaza Theatre, while Cleveland franchise holders elected George J. Schade of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio.

In the New York territory, the following well-known exhibitors were elected: Gustav Koenigswald of Brooklyn, Louis Rosenthal who operates theatres in Newark and Passaic, H. Gainsboro, owner of two theatres in Flushing, L. I., Harry Hall of Troy, N. Y., and Leo Brecher of New York City.

The reception that Mr. Berst's plan met with can readily be seen from the whole heartedness of the exhibitor cooperation. Every meeting so far held has voted to give United and its officials their earnest support at all times and to work hand in hand with them in furthering United's success.

Plans of Larger Select Branch

Sam Morris Describes Plans For Enlarged New York Office; Modern in All Ways

IN a very few weeks the Select Organization will be greatly enlarged and organized on a more extensive plan, according to General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select Pictures Corporation.

Many changes are under way, the most important being the removal of the New York exchange, of which Henry Siegel is the manager, from its present location at 729 Seventh Avenue to 130 W. 46th Street, the former home of the World Film Corporation.

"We must have more room in which to operate at once," said Mr. Morris in announcing the plans. "Keeping our office space ahead of our growth is our problem just now. The New York Exchange has completely outgrown its present quarters, and needs at least four times as much room as it now occupies. It is hoped that the new location will be adequate, as it takes in the entire ground floor and basement of the building. It is being remodelled in a thoroughly efficient and modern way, with regard to office arrangements, lighting, projection rooms and vaults.

"The decorations and furnishings will be new and luxurious. When completed, the New York Exchange will be one of the most completely and handsomely equipped branches in the country."

A staff of painters and decorators are now at work on the 14th floor of the Home Office headquarters and after the necessary alterations, Mr. Morris stated, the former quarters of the New York Exchange will be occupied by the Purchasing Department of the Select organization, which is now housed on the sixth floor of 729 Seventh Avenue.

In the meantime, Mr. Morris stated, the films will be released from the home address of the Exchange pending the completion of the vaults in the W. 46th Street office.

Industrial Leaders of the Wor Guests at Capitol Theatre

New York's great Capitol Theatre N vember 22d provided entertainment for 2 of the most notable men ever gathered t gether under one roof. The occasion wa the visit of the delegates to the Interna tional Trade Conference, now being hel in this country, and the members of th New York General Reception Committee among whom were the business men o New York.

The largest employers of labor in the world, the principal financiers, the chief manufacturers, the great merchants—all were there to get a close-up view of the highest development of the production and exhibition of the newest thing in art and industry—the motion picture.

The distinguished foreign visitors and the members of the General Reception Committee, made up of 175 of the city's most notable citizens, were received by Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, and Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Through the courtesy and effort of Mr. Levey a picture was shown as the climax of the evening entitled, "Industrial Democracy in America—Partners in Prosperity and Dividends of Contentment," which conveyed to the distinguished visitors an idea of what is being done toward bringing the employer and the employee closer together and thereby increasing the quantity and quality of production to the advantage of all concerned.

Columbia Films Acquire New England Universal Exchange

The New England Universal Film Exchange, with headquarters in Boston, it is announced, has been acquired by the Columbia Films Company of Boston, representatives and exclusive distributors of nine different productions in New England, with J. M. Mullen, formerly manager of the Universal Exchange in New England, as president of the new corporation.

Plans have been arranged by the newly-elected president for the enlargement of the present headquarters of the corporation at 6 Church street, Boston, which when completed, will house what is considered the best and largest organization of its kind in New England. Another building at No. 10 Winchester street, Boston, has been secured for temporary offices of the Film Exchange and will be used with the present headquarters until the starting of the operations of remodeling early in January of the coming year.

The Columbia Films have entered into a contract with the American Feature Film Company of Boston to distribute the Universal output in New England.

First National's "Defense" Expansion

Official Announcement on Two Incorporations With Over $16,000,000 Capital; Crandall and Whitehurst Join With Tom Moore; 5,000 Theatres to be Affected

OFFICIAL confirmation in the form of a statement issued from the offices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, verify the rumors around the street which prevailed at the time the NEWS went to press last week, and which found foundation in the announcement carried of the charters granted two new incorporations in Delaware with names similar to that of the Circuit, and having an aggregate capital of $16,400,000. It is stated the incorporation of these concerns are but a part of First National's new plan of expansion. The official statement embodies also the following announcements:

Affecting 5,000 Theatres

Harry Crandall, owning and operating eight theatres in Washington, D. C., and with several other large houses under construction, and Charles E. Whitehurst, who owns six large theatres in Baltimore, have joined Tom Moore of Washington in the ownership of the First National franchise for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

The Mark Strand Company of New York, owning and operating a chain of 27 theatres in New York State, has signed an agreement which makes the New York Strand and the new Mark Strand in Brooklyn a part of what First National describes as its "Exhibitors' Defense Committee plan for 1920 and thereafter."

Exhibitors who have been members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit have signed contracts which make their respective theatre properties, totalling more than eight hundred theatres which are credited to them as outright ownerships or through part financial interest, a part of the "Exhibitors' Defense Committee plan for 1920 and thereafter."

The ultimate scope of the new plan will, it is said, include at least five thousand theatres in the United States and Canada.

There is a curious significance in the comparative figures for the two new corporations and the amount which Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst give as the total of capital represented in the value of their combined theatre interests, added to the estimated worth of the New York Strand and the Mark Strand of Brooklyn.

Associated First National Theatres, Inc., was formed with an authorized capital stock of $10,400,000, and the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has an authorized capital stock of $6,000,000. This gives a combined amount of $16,400,000, while Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst estimate the value of their theatres at $10,000,000. This sum does not include any figure for the valuation of the theatres owned by Tom Moore, who was the original First National franchise owner, nor does it take into consideration the worth of the franchise itself.

The agreements for the joint ownership of the franchise between Mr. Moore, Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst were signed in the Home Offices of First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

To the present theatre strength behind the First National franchise for Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, in the houses owned by Mr. Moore, is added, as Mr. Crandall"s properties in Washington, the Metropolitan, with three thousand seats, the Knickerbocker, seating seventeen hundred and fifty, the Savoy, seating fifteen hundred, the Apollo, seating seven hundred and fifty, the Avenue Grand, seating one thousand, the York, seating one thousand, Crandall's, seating five hundred, and the Meader's, seating five hundred.

The theatres owned in Baltimore by Mr. Whitehurst, and which now have an active interest in the First National franchise for the territory, include the New Theatre, with two thousand seats, the Garden, seating twenty-five hundred, the Century, now being built and which will have a capacity for four thousand, the Parkway, with eleven hundred seats, the McHenry with a thousand seats, and the Peabody, seating five hundred.

The Century Theatre, it is said, will cost $2,000,000 when it is completed.

In addition to these theatres Mr. Crandall has included in his properties, the new Cumberland, now being constructed, and which will be one of the largest and most costly theatres in the South.

Both Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst were in New York last week with Mr. Moore for the purpose of discussing the final details of the arrangement which, under the new First National plan, now gives the franchise in the Capitol territory a theatre representation as strong as that which any other First National franchise has had in the past.

Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst have been among the foremost of Southern theatre operators, controlling chains of houses, who heretofore have been independent of affiliation with any exhibitor cooperative concern.

Announcement that the Mark Strand Company of New York has allied itself with First National's plan for expansion indicates that within a short time all of the theatres controlled by that concern will be included. The New York Strand has been known as a First National franchise house since the Circuit was organized two years ago. The Mark Strand of Brooklyn, opened a few weeks ago, has been showing First National releases without a direct affiliation by franchise.

These two theatres give the Circuit adequate first run representation in the Broadway, New York, and downtown Brooklyn theatrical districts.

The new plan of operation for First National, it was said, will include practically every one of the original exhibitor-owners of franchises on a basis which will give them an even greater measure of independence than they have enjoyed in the past.

It is admitted by members of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of First National that more than a score of large and important theatre circuits not heretofore associated with it have declared their intention of signing for participation in the new plan, and that negotiations are now under way in practically very territory.

"It must be remembered," reads a statement credited to a member of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, "that the final details of the new plan were completed only a week ago. In fact, the 'Warning' advertisement we published in the trade journals two weeks ago was composed while members of the committee were still actively at work completing the arrangements for putting the plan into effect.

"For this reason it is pertinent to the rapidity with which the proposition is being taken up that Mr. Crandall and Mr. Whitehurst and the Mark Strand Company should so quickly give us permission to make public their action in endorsing the plan by joining in it.

"With very few exceptions the Exhibitors' Defense Committee has received inquiries from every important theatre owner in the country. It is a curious result of our advertisement that several hundred exhibitors in small, 'one-man' communities have written requests for detailed information."

P. A. Chase Made Comptroller For Hallmark Pictures Corporation

P. A. Chase, one of the best known financial experts and comptrollers in the film business has succeeded William Eisenhardt, as comptroller for Hallmark Pictures Corporation, assuming his new duties this week. Mr. Eisenhardt resigned to enter the production field of the picture business.

Mr. Chase is said to have been identified with the financial and accounting departments of some of the industry's biggest concerns, having been active in capacity of comptroller and expert on accounting since the inception of the Warners Features, Inc., some years ago. Mr. Eisenhardt will announce the details of his production plans in the near future, according to the Hallmark report.

Community Film Gift to Prince

The Community Motion Picture Bureau is to be represented this winter in the royal castle in England. Almost the last present the Prince of Wales received before sailing was a reel of film presented to him showing the making of the medal commemorating his visit to America. The making of the medal occupied three months. The entire process was filmed and the reel given by Warren Dunham Foster. The film will be used in this country for distribution outside of the theatres.

Fox to Build Big Bronx Theatre

According to Plans will be Largest in That Section and Embody all Up to the Minute Ideas

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, announces that he has purchased from the estate of Charles W. Tarbox the plot of ground on the south side of Tremont avenue between Washington and Park avenues, The Bronx, New York, and will build on it the largest theatre in that borough of Greater New York — which means also the largest theatre in Bronx county.

The transaction represents an expenditure of almost $1,000,000. Work on the new playhouse will be started at once. Details were worked out by A. S. Kempner, real estate representative of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises.

This new addition to the Fox theatres, which now form a chain throughout the country, is to be one of the most elaborate structures in which motion pictures are shown. Every known convenience for the comfort of the public is to be installed. The seating capacity will be 3,500. There will be lounging rooms, smoking rooms, special comfort rooms for women patrons, rooms in which persons having appointments to meet and attend performances may wait for one another, and a creche, where babies will be cared for by licensed nurses while their parents are enjoying the show.

The creche suggested itself to Mr. Fox from the fact that The Bronx now boasts ot having more babies than any other borough of New York, not even excepting Brooklyn.

The new $1,000,000 theatre will be Grecian in its architectural design, and will contain one balony. The plans call for a sufficient number of exits, to make it possible to empty the structure within three minutes, if necessary. Carlson & Wiseman are the architects.

Directly across the street from the site of the new playhouse is the Crotona Theatre, at Tremont and Park avenues, which is owned and operated by the Fox Theatrical Enterprises.

"No name has yet been decided upon for the new Bronx theatre," said Mr. Kempner in discussing the plans. "The probabilities are that there will be a public contest for a suitable name. But what appeals to me about the structure is that it will be up-to-date in every respect. This playhouse shows how the motion-picture industry is developing. It will contain more comforts for the public than any theatre on Broadway.

"One point insisted upon by Mr. Fox was that our architects draw the plans so that every seat would be on a par with every other seat — that is, that the view of the stage would be as clear from the front, sides and rear as from the centre. The architects have carried out this idea admirably. The new Fox theatre will be an American palace of absolute comfort and sanitary perfection, as well as of entertainment."

Proof of Value of Trade Papers

J. D. Williams Refutes Statements That They are Really Read by Few and Gives Figures

A reply to contentions he has heard that exhibitors do not read trade journals is made this week by J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, who cites the number of responses from exhibitors that have resulted from the publication of a two-page advertisement two weeks ago, signed by the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of the Circuit.

"There are several important executives in the film business," declares Mr. Williams, "who have repeatedly declared that trade journal advertising was, to a great extent, negligible in value because only a few exhibitors, comparatively, took the time or trouble to read it.

"Within eight days after the trade papers containing the advertisement of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee had been mailed to subscribers we had received more than a thousand letters from exhibitors, requesting details. The rate of replies in the last four days has been about two hundred a day. No circular letters, no reproductions of the ad, and no direct communications of any character bearing on the ad, were sent to exhibitors other than the members of the Circuit. This precludes any possibility that exhibitors could have seen the announcement anywhere excepting in the trade journals.

"And a significant feature of the replies is that of the total number received wherein exhibitors specifically mention the trade organs in which they read the 'Warning' announcement, there is an average of twelve references to one or more of the five trade papers that are published exclusively in the interests of the film industry to one credit to publications that have only limited motion picture departments.

"This is another evidence that the year-old beliefs of the exhibitor members of First National to the effect that advertisers can reach their market through the five recognized trade journals without necessity of space in other mediums, is absolutely correct.

"In making this statement I realize that the very nature of the 'Warning' advertisement commanded attention because of the curiosity and interest it was certain to arouse. But the fact is that if the hundreds of exhibitors who have replied to this ad had not been reading the advertising sections of the trade papers they would not have seen that particular two-page announcement."

Backed by Eastern and local capital Milburn Moranti, popular character comedian, who for the past three years acted as Gale Henry's leading man, has organized his own producing company and this week started work on his first two-reeler of fun at the Bulls Eye studio in Hollywood.

A picturized review of the famed Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto, Ontario, was the feature which was screened privately at Ottawa, Ontario, recently by the Exhibits and Moving Picture Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. This picture was taken under official auspices for use in many foreign countries as an indication of Canadian progress but the feature gets away from a stereotyped succession of general views of mere buildings. The picture includes, instead, many intimate views of every-day incidents during the annual fair.

The only way in which motion pictures can be shown or any other performance given in Baltimore on Sunday is when the proceeds are for some charitable purpose. Last Sunday afternoon and evening through the courtesy of Joseph Brodie a motion picture show was given at the Brodie Theatre, in that city, for the benefit of the new Union Memorial Hospital which will be built at Calvert and Thirty-third Streets. Nurses and soldiers acted as ushers at the performance. The money raised will be used to build a sun-parlor at the hospital in memory of the boys from the section of the city in which the Brodie is located, who gave their lives in the war.

Frederick Miller, who recently disposed of a greater part of his interests in the California Theatre to Samuel Goldwyn, has repurchased his former theatre, "The Garden," formerly known as Miller's Theatre, and after making extensive alterations and improvements, will reopen the house. The Miller Theatre is located less than a block from the California Theatre on South Main Street. Mr. Miller is to continue as General Manager of the California Theatre.

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

Since all theatres at Harrisburg, Illinois, amalgamated, film exchanges have been able to place only their cheapest service in the town. It is understood that to remedy this condition, the Fox Film Company employees of the St. Louis office are selling stock for the erection of a new theatre in Harrisburg and other exchanges are joining the move to float a new house in that Illinois city.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis were the recipients of many congratulations from friends in the moving picture business.

Bidwell is president, has closed contracts with the Cropper Distributing Corporation for all of the Billy West comedies for the states of Iowa and Nebraska and reports that their advanced bookings indicate that Mr. West's popularity in both states will close bookings for them with all exhibitors of that territory.

George West, the well-known, rapid fire salesman, has left Chicago in the interest of the Cropper Distributing Corporation and will cover all exchanges to the Pacific Coast, including Kansas City, Dallas, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

The Beehive Exchange of Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee, will open a new office in St. Louis about January the first to handle that section of the country for their rapidly growing business.

Pressing Fight on Industrials

Exhibitors Organized Declare Against Running Any "Free Advertising" Films on Their Screens

MOTION picture exhibitors of America in the organization of an association for the protection of their screens from advertising and so-called "industrial" motion pictures, have set in motion the first great move on the part of exhibitors to prevent motion picture companies from using their screens for gain.

Under the leadership of Sydney Cohen of New York, who is chairman and Sam Bullock of Cleveland, the secretary of a temporary committee representing various exhibitors' organizations throughout the country, the exhibitors of more than a dozen states have signified their intention of withholding their screens from producing companies who have for several months been obtaining contracts for the projection of pictures which are nothing more nor less than direct advertising for various national advertisers.

"It is not that the exhibitors feel hostile toward the advertisers," Mr. Cohen declared. "It is because certain producers of industrial motion pictures have collected all sorts of fees from national advertisers for the use of exhibitors' screens. These same producers would not dare to 'snipe' the sidewalls of our theatres with an advertisement, but they do not hesitate to 'snipe' our screens with paid advertising.

"Under the plan of organization now under way, and which has been completed in the states where there are the most exhibitors, it has been arranged for the advertiser to use the screen and for the exhibitor to receive the benefit therefrom. Advertisers are welcome to use the screens as long as productions are of a standard which will provide entertainment and interest."

The Committee now handling the affairs of this new move is composed of Sydney S. Cohen, chairman, New York, Sam I. Berman, New York, Charles O'Reilly, New York, Fred J. Herrington, Pennsylvania, Sam Bullock, Cleveland, W. J. Slimm, Cleveland, H. H. Lustig, Cleveland, King Perry, Michigan, Peter J. Jeup, Michigan.

United Artists Official Spoken of For Secretary of Treasury Office

Oscar A. Price, president of United Artists Corporation, known in the motion picture industry as the "Big Four," was the recipient of a much envied honor during the past week, when he was notified at his New York office that he had been suggested, and hundreds of his friends were working in his behalf, for the position of Secretary of the United States Treasury, which position was made vacant by the resignation of Carter Glass, who accepted the appointment of Governor Davis, of Virginia, making him Senator to succeed the late Senator Thomas Staples Martin.

At his office Mr. Price had nothing to say regarding the matter, save that he was deeply appreciative of the honor of having his many friends suggest and work for him for such a position.

Edward Godal, Prominent English Film Man, Here on Visit

Mr. Edward Godal, Managing Director (President) of the British and Colonial Kinematograph Co., Ltd., of London, the oldest firm of film producers in England is now in New York, partly on business and partly to satisfy himself as to American conditions as regard production and exploitation.

Mr. Godal has no prejudices and in order to meet American tastes and conditions he decided, last year, to engage an American producer and staff and American stars and entered into a contract with Herbert Brenon to produce in England with Marie Doro, as star. Accordingly Herbert Brenon gathered a considerable staff which he took to the B and C Studios. Unfortunately after producing the first film it appeared that Herbert Brenon had entered into a previous contract and he was enjoined against continuing with Mr. Godal's firm. Mr. Godal, however, retained the rest of his American staff among whom are George Edwards Hall, James McKay, Al H. Moses, George Fitch, Charles Ritchie and others, and he is looking out for likely talent, for Directors Staff and artistes to take back to England where he is preparing to extend his already considerable productions, some of the latest of which he has brought with him for the purpose of disposing of the American and Canadian rights and business has already resulted with the World Film Corp., who have acquired "Twelve-Ten" starring Marie Doro, directed by Herbert Brenon.

Kunsky Denies Intent to Join Interests With Loew

Emphatic denial is made by John H. Kunsky, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the Detroit territory, of a statement published last week in a vaudeville paper to the effect that he had affiliated with Marcus Loew in the latter's plans to build a chain of theatres in Detroit.

"The statement is an absolute falsehood," declares Mr. Kunsky. "It hasn't an atom of truth in it. I have never discussed such a proposition with Mr. Loew or any of his representatives, and I know nothing about his plans or intentions in Detroit or elsewhere. The coupling of my name with this project undoubtedly would have a benefit to stock sales among any prospective local investors who might be approached because of my success as an exhibitor in Detroit, but the bald statement that I am in any way interested is wholly untrue."

An official statement is made this week by First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the effect that there is what is described as a concerted effort in several quarters to create doubt and uncertainty in the minds of small independent exhibitors in every territory by inspired rumors that members of the Circuit are affiliated with, or about to become affiliated with, other chain-theatre organizations or producing-distributing concerns that are slowly acquiring houses.

South in a Turmoil of Activity

Mergers of Interests Presage Bigger Things in Eleven of the Southern States

IN connection with the recent mergers and general activity of exhibitors in the South, the following article by Roy Booker, NEWS correspondent, which he prefaces with the statement that a gigantic plan for broadening and developing the picture field in 11 Southern States is on foot, is of especial interest. Mr. Booker writes:

"The recent deal by which the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., secured ownership of all the theatrical interests of Jake Wells in Atlanta, Savannah, Augusta and Knoxville, which was one of the largest of its kind in the history of Dixie, and the announcement just made of the merger of the Lynch moving-picture houses in this city with the Howard Theatre, the property of Troup Howard, is only a part of the big plan, it is stated officially.

"Joint owners of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., which has a capital stock of $5,000,000 are the S. A. Lynch Enterprises and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New York, thus forming one of the first amusement corporations in the field of large financial interests.

"New developments have just seen the merger of the motion-picture theatres recently purchased by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., in Atlanta from Jake Wells—The Rialto, Forsyth, Strand and Vaudette—with the new Howard Theatre, which is now in course of construction on Peachtree street, next to the Aragon hotel.

"This arrangement will take effect upon the completion of the handsome new house, which will have a seating capacity of 3,000.

"With the idea of developing the South in an amusement way and securing superior attractions in the legitimate vaudeville and in pictures, the Southern Enterprises, Inc., which has for its object the improvement and the erection of large houses in 11 Southern States, has recently started a buying and building campaign, which has already brought forth wonderful results.

"Some idea of the magnitude of the enterprises may be gained from the fact that the interests of Jake Wells were only a part of the general scheme. For instance, the Hulsey and Levy interests in Texas were acquired a few weeks ago before Mr. Wells sold out in Georgia and Tennessee.

"Houses are at present in course of construction, or plans have been drawn for them, in San Antonio, Dallas, Dennison, Wichita Falls and Houston, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Griffin, Ga.; and Gadssen, Ala."

Anniversary of Allen Theatre

Calgary House Holds Gala Performance on Sixth Birthday; Allens to Erect House in Boston

THE Allen Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, celebrated its sixth anniversary in November with a special birthday week for which there were a number of extra features. One of the stunts arranged by Manager Joe Price was the presentation of a Western picture which had been produced in 1910. This was immediately followed by an up-to-date two-reel Western drama. The chief film attraction was Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside." In honor of the occasion, a special souvenir program was issued while every lady attending a matinee performance during the week was presented with a rose or chrysanthemum. The orchestra also gave a special musical program.

The Allen Theater, Calgary, was one of the first theatres of Jule and J. J. Allen in the Canadian West and its size was the subject for considerable criticism when it was first opened. The Allens now have upwards of fifty-five theatres from coast to coast and many of them are larger than the Calgary house. The Allens made their headquarters at Calgary until they invaded the East several years ago to open extensive operations in Ontario and Quebec. Their head office is now at Toronto where they have half a dozen fine new houses.

The Calgary house has produced at least two notable exhibitors. One is Ben Cronk who is now general manager of all Allen Theatres in the Dominion and the other is Oral D. Cloakey who has just been appointed manager of the great new Allen Theatre at Winnipeg, Manitoba, which is scheduled to open in December. Cloakey was supervisor of the Allen, Monarch and Imperial Theatres at Edmonton, Alberta, during the past eight months and just before his recent departure for Winnipeg he was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain by the employes of the three Edmonton houses as a token of appreciation.

The Allen Theatre, Toronto, which is the chief theatre of the Allen chain, also recently observed its second anniversary with several special formalities. Announcement has been made that the Allens have secured a downtown site in Boston, Mass., for another theatre in the United States and it is also stated that they will shortly build a moving picture palace on Broadway, New York. Their theatres in Detroit and Cleveland are already under way.

Report Is That Hyman Will Again Join Mark Realty

Edward L. Hyman is going to return to the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation fold. According to an announcement by Walter Hayes, a member of the company, Mr. Hyman, who is now managing the Rivoli and Isis theatres in Denver for the Fox Film Company, will go to Brooklyn at once and manage the new Mark-Strand Theatre there until the completion of the new Mark-Strand house in Albany, when he will become managing director of that theatre.

Decries Producer Attempting to Dictate Exhibitors' Policies

On looking over the Trade Journals, reading the comments from the Exhibitors throughout the United States, on the new policies of the different film companies, I find that the industry to my notion is not reaching toward the Exhibitor. It seems as though the film companies declare policies for the Exhibitor regardless of his local conditions whether he can meet them or not. For instance, they declare longer runs, higher prices, and fewer pictures.

I have opened my books to different companies showing them the worth of their pictures on longer runs even from the phenominal successes of last season, to a picture that I personally thought would stand a longer run, but still their demands are all for the film companies.

Recently a salesman was in my office and he quoted me prices on this season's output of his company, who demanded more money for this season's output, even though their stars were unknown quantities on the market. On top of this he demanded a cancellation clause on the contract that meant 50 per cent of their output of this seasons product, and he could not tell me the name of the second picture they were going to make of the different stars that he was selling.

We say that an Exhibitor would sign this contract in good faith on the strength of the fair dealings of this company of last season, and the production does not hold up and he loses money on this contract. He has to go through with the contract, because the film companies are organized in such a way that if he does not go through with his contract, which calls for him to use 50 per cent of their output according to their cancellation clause, they will close him up.

Getting down to the idea of the men in New York sitting behind the gun, who no doubt have had big experience, and are putting up the money to finance their companies, they sit back and declare policies, and then quote the Exhibitor this policy in such a way that they are the ones who are going to run his theatre instead of the Exhibitor himself. They do not give the Exhibitor a chance to state his local conditions, and they do not give the Exhibitor credit for knowing anything about his box office returns, or the possibility of them.

The talk has been going on of the industry coming to a financial basis when the Exhibitor would get a rating. We will take, for instance, any company who has three or more stars on their program. They come in and ask for a deposit on each star, and if he sells you a special production, you must also pay a deposit on that.

Can you imagine a man going to a hardware store to order different articles and laying down a deposit on every article he orders, although doing business with the same store?

It is about time that things were changing, and that the Exhibitors get together an organization that will censor some of the contracts that the film companies are trying to force on the Exhibitor.

Can you imagine a man getting his mail with a bill of twenty-three hundred dollars or more for merchandise that is already put in, and at the same time receive a bill from the film company for thirty-five cents for some paper, he would not get the paper unless they received a check for thirty-five cents.

I think the Exhibitor who does not sit back this season and declare his policy, which I think he has a right to do, the same as the film companies have done, is making a big mistake. I, for one, have declared my policy and either some of the film companies whose policies do not coincide with my local conditions, will not get any contracts, or I will have to run pictures that are being made by companies whose policies meet my local conditions.

I note your argument in your paper about percentage, and all I have to say is, that percentage is a very good proposition for the man who owns the picture. For instance, a certain picture in a certain State costs so much money, they will sit back declaring to all Exhibitors in the State that they should receive 60 or 70 per cent of the receipts.

These days when big orchestras are required in the theatres, and first class projection, you will find nine times out of ten the Exibitors' expense is three times more than the picture expense, granting the fact that the picture will do an enormous business, because if he should make a few dollars on this percentage picture, he will lose it on the fact a big special with a packed house in a small town, naturally he will be the loser a few days afterwards, because his business drops.

You can use this letter in your Trade Journal and although I will admit I am not very competent in arranging this letter, you can pick out the theme to suit yourself and publish it.

I want to compliment you on your journal, Motion Picture News, I think it one of the fairest journals of its kind on the market for the moving picture industry.

I have always found you to be fair and equitable with the Exhibitor as well as the Exchange.

Accuses Exhibitors of Sub-Renting Films

For the benefit of the Film Exchanges, will you kindly publish this news?

There is a clique of exhibitors in Scranton, Pa., one of them Lincoln Theatre, the other one, Younis Theatre, these exhibitors book features for one day and hold them for over a week.

No matter how much you wire them, sometimes they will answer, but in each case they will answer that they forgot to place enough postage on the cases.

Surely the post office will not accept parcels unless there is enough postage to cover the cases.

These exhibitors will write you that the cases have been three or more days in the post office before they discover that there is not enough postage on the cases.

The truth of the matter is that these low class exhibitors sub-rent the shows to small town exhibitors.

"The Warrior" that we loaned to the Lincoln Theatre to be used free on October 3d, we only received back to-day, October 9th, after losing some bookings and spending many dollars wiring for it.

We sent the Lincoln Theatre (which is affiliated with the Younis Theatre) a show for October 4th and this is still being held by them.

Figure this out, "The Warrior" held out eight days, and the other show they now have, God only knows when they will return it.

We have advised them again to-day, unless they return the shows at once, we will issue a warrant of arrest, and this goes.

These men book shows and rent them out, this has been their game, but they have bucked against the wrong ones this time.

Please publish this, as it is the truth, and you will save the film companies time, money and worriment.

New Universal Branch Manager Accomplishing Big Things

G. L. Levine, one of the youngest managers of a big film exchange in the country, believes in getting out and doing things, no watchful waiting for him. Four weeks ago he succeeded J. D. Roderick, promoted to district manager, as manager of the Milwaukee office of the Universal Film Corporation, and is elated over the month's business, which he reports is the biggest in the history of the Milwaukee office. The sales force has been increased by two men, making six men now working his territory. "The Right to Happiness" recently played two weeks at the Strand in Milwaukee, breaking all records, and another important booking made through the Milwaukee office was "Blind Husbands," which will run at Tom Saxe's Alhambra for a week, starting November 16th. Mr. Levine is planning a big holiday drive for Universal feature from November 15th to December 31st, inclusive.

Chain Acquires Another House

The Ottawa Valley Amusement Company, of which M. J. O'Brien, a wealthy citizen of Renfrew, Ontario, is president, has purchased the Grand Theatre at Pembroke, Ontario, from Mr. J. H. Bruck. The company had already purchased a central site in Pembroke for a new theatre but decided to buy the Grand instead. The company may now erect a hotel on the acquired property. The Ottawa Valley Amusement Company controls a rather large chain of moving picture theatres in Eastern Ontario, having secured a number of theatres during the past few months.

Baltimore Operators Hold Ball

The eighth annual ball of the Moving Pictures Operators' Union, Baltimore Local No. 181, took place on November 24 at Hazazer's Hall in that city. Besides the regular dances a cabaret was conducted in the basement of the hall, where plenty to eat and drink was served. Moving pictures were shown and many elaborate entertainment features were worked out. Basil Morgan was chairman of the committee of arrangements.

NINE MILLION

Motion Picture News and Motion Picture Studio Directory are at this moment working for you in the offices of newspapers with a circulation totaling close to nine million. Here is double-barreled service. A service of particular interest and value to advertisers, but of practical value to both advertisers and exhibitors. Not alone does Motion Picture News reach all exhibitors—but it goes further and carries the industry's message clear through to the public.

* * * *

The exact figures, compiled after comparison of our subscription books with Ayer's American Newspaper Annual, show that these newspapers have a total circulation of 8,843,560. One hundred and twenty-nine cities are represented. Three hundred and fifteen newspapers are reached. This trade paper service to newspapers is not the result of accident. It is the reward of a definite campaign, in which we have aimed to serve the industry by serving the newspapers.

We created The Complete Plan Book to serve exhibitors and engaged definitely in a campaign to place it in the hands of newspaper men so that they could better serve their local exhibitors. We have spent many hours and many dollars by individual correspondence and service to increase the cooperation of newspapers in some sections, to institute cooperation in others, and to improve its efficiency all along the line. The figures given above are the result. And yet those figures are but the beginning. But without these figures we would not attempt to tell you that "The News Covers the Field." Without that evidence of our desire and our success in giving complete service we would not attempt to tell you that—

Two Interesting Exhibitor Articles

IT is a far cry from Salt Lake, Utah, to Nijmegen, Holland, from which the two following exhibitor written letters on admissions have originated. It will be unnecessary to introduce one of the authors, George C. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre of Salt Lake City, a member of our Advisory Board, a valued contributor in the past to the Exhibitors Service Bureau and one of the best known showmen in the United States; but the other writer, P. Mounier, will be a stranger to our readers since Holland is a long way from American soil and the Chicago and Olympia theatres of Nijmegen, over whose destinies Mr. Mounier presides, are necessarily mere names.

However, we believe that our readers will find the Holland letter will be quite as interesting as that written by Mr. Carpenter. Both state facts about exhibiting conditions in their respective cities and facts are what count in this series of articles which we are publishing each week on this page. Read what these two showmen say and profit thereby.

What Salt Lake City Thinks

IN reply to yours of the 13th inst., I am really so rushed that I have no time to write an article along the lines you so kindly request; however, if I take your questions in order, possibly your re-write man may be able to make something out of it.

A. Effective September first our admissions were raised, to up to 5:30 P. M., 15, 25, 35 cts., evenings 20, 30, 40 cts., including war tax.

Three years ago when the writer took hold of this theatre our prices were 10-15 cts. We raised them shortly afterwards.

We certainly think it is advisable to increase admissions at this time, at least as far as this town is concerned. Increased overhead effective September first included such items as film about 40%, newspapers 25%, the one with the leading circulation advanced 50%, union musicians $5.00 a week and so on down the line.

In the face of such advances the only logical solution was to raise the prices.

B. It certainly seems as though we will have to pay more for films than in the past, as every manufacturer seems to forecast.

C. We always have been strongly in favor of a set policy, and as far as lies within our power, will continue to keep the admission prices standard rather than on a scale commensurate with what we have to pay for a film. The one exception, and this is going to be an experiment, will be in the case of "The Miracle Man," when we propose to charge 25-50-75¢.

Our experience has been since we raised prices, the public has been coming stronger than ever; naturally there are a number of kicks, but we have always tried as far as possible to interview the kickers and explain to them that we are not profiteering, in fact our net is less than it was prior to the raise.

This week marks the passing of the 5¢ show as far as Salt Lake is concerned. The three 5¢ houses following the pace set by the two leading houses are advancing their prices to 10¢.

I do not know how it is in the East, but out West money is plentiful and people seem to expect to pay more for luxuries.

In order to give the public something for their additional nickel, we increased the size of our orchestra, but this is just a detail.

If we are to have good pictures, we certainly ought to stand behind the manufacturers to the extent of paying good prices for the same and the only way to do this is to make the public appreciate them by paying more.

Yours truly,
PARAMOUNT-EMPRESS THEATRE,
GEO. E. CARPENTER,
Manager.

Views of Another Contributor

MR. FRANKLIN'S discussion of increased admission prices interested me, especially where he tells us showmen not to be too greedy.

May I just tell you what happened to us. We run several theatres in Holland, but I feel those things are about the same in my country as in the States.

Back in 1913, one of our theatres did a wonderful business, and we thought it necessary to have it modernized. At that time our admission prices were 10-20-30 cents.

There was quite a stage built, we installed a first-class ten-piece orchestra, gave the very best offerings on the stage, and spent quite a nice sum in stage settings. To cover the cost of running this much improved show, the high rentals of first week films, we had to double the admission price.

At Easter we opened, but we soon found out that the public objected to the higher admission. There was quite a lot of favorable comment about the new show, the practically new building, and so on, but financially we got behind every week.

Every showman knows what it means to play for only half occupied houses; we dreaded the summer that was coming, and we knew, too, that even with every day the S. R. O. sign up with old prices we could not make both ends meet. But something had to be done; we had to go back to our ten, twenty, thirty cents admission, and, when May came, we did it,—called it our summer season prices. At the same time instead of a two-hour show we had been giving, we made it a 1½ hour show. It saved us some film rental, but what was more to us, it meant a 25% increase in seating capacity, or if you want to put it otherwise a 25% increase in price. This turned the tide for us. People did not object being out of the house 30 minutes earlier, making room for the others that were waiting. That summer we didn't make much money, but we did not loose, and in September we made a small raise. People were in the habit of going, we never had had as many customers in a single season as that summer, and when we put the price to 15-25-40 people did not object. This taught us the lesson never to raise too much at the same time, and when the war came with its higher prices all over we found it possible to raise by and by our prices till now in our better class houses we have prices of 35-65-95-125 cent, a scale of prices we never dreamed of 5 years ago. One thing, however, we always explained to the people why we made a raise, and we never raised the price more than a few cents at a time. If you can use some of my experience, go ahead and use it.

Yours truly,
P. MOUNIER,
Manager — Chicago and Olympia Theatres,
Nijmegen, Holland.

Aviators Aid in Exploitation

THE first stunt in the exploitation of the Geraldine Farrar picture, "The World and Its Woman" at the Casino Theatre, Salt Lake City, was the distribution of heralds announcing the play date of the production by an aviator flying at an altitude of 2,000 feet. As this stunt was new in the territory, it was featured by the newspapers as a news story. Both the pilot and the owner of the plane donated their services for the publicity they would receive through the newspapers.

Four music stores gave liberal window displays, including a card announcing the showing of "The World and Its Woman" at the Casino. Some other good locations were secured for the placing of 22 x 28 photos of Farrar. Three hundred window cards were placed in the very best locations.

Your Idea and Ours

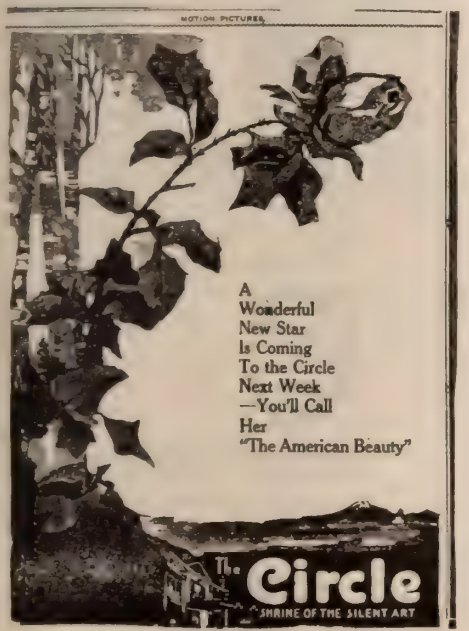
A chap from the Chester, Pa., Times was interested enough to come up to the office and show us this two-page tie-up accomplished by the Grand Theatre with local merchants, to advertise "Mickey." We told him that we would use it, and here it is in spite of the fact that showing advertising on "Mickey" is getting a bit passe, since the film has played about every theatre that has a motion picture machine, and therefore as a model it won't be of great value.

We can, however, offer it as an evidence of what can be accomplished in co-operative advertising. This is a good big spread and our Chester man said he stood 'em in line for the picture showing as they had never been "stood" before. The main thing about a tie-up of this sort, unless worked too often is the fact that all parties get the value of big space advertising for small space prices. No one will ever be able to frame anything artistic on a deal of this kind but you do get attention and attention is the first thing to consider when you begin to frame a display.

Some of the footprints on the sands of time are pointed the wrong way.

THIS is the first instance we have noticed where McCormick used the teaser variety of advertising in his newspaper displays. In so doing in this case he has chosen a very appropriate attraction, since this display you will assume is an advance ad on Katherine McDonald in "The Thunderbolt."

Miss McDonald is being billed as "The American Beauty." The use of a drawing of the American beauty rose is particularly good stuff. It does occur to us that in the perspective scene shown that something less suggestive of a distant mountain with a rough country leading up to it might not have been more fitting. The American beauty rose does not grow in such a locale. However such criticism as this is hyper-critical. This is about the higest type of teaser ad we have ever seen. As a rule we aren't so strong for them. Exciting curiosity may be all right but we would rather in most instances spend our money on a display which tells something rather than one which asks something.



Life does not consist in holding a good hand but in playing a bad hand well.

THE New Isis of Topeka, Kansas, has framed an ad in this three column by ten inch display on "The Last of the Duanes," which up to a year or so ago was considered the proper thing. The copy was first class, a fair scene cut was secured from the producer and then the whole thing was placed up to the printer, who set it up according to the tried and true formula of his many years of doing the same thing over and over again.

In Zane Grey's Triumphant Novel

"The Last of the Duanes"

A Red Blooded Story of Tense American Life.

In his portrayal of Buck Duane, the hero of this stirring Texas border life tale, Mr Farnum is seen at his very best.

This time the star portrays a man who through no fault of his own is forced to kill and flee, to herd with outlaws amid stirring situations until the falseness of his position is impressed on the Governor by the girl he loves—who finally wins him a pardon and happiness.

Farnum, in flight, rides down a steep mountainside amid an avalanche of bounding rocks.

Now Topeka is a pretty fair-sized town and should be able to come through with better mechanical work than this providing the theatre manager insists on getting something better. We don't mean to say that this can be called a bad display. It isn't. The only thing which is wrong with it is that it is too orthodox. It is just another ad telling about another picture. It no doubt sold Farnum in "The Last of the Duanes," but the picture could have been put over better with better advertising.

WE have seen more good advertising on "Broken Blossoms" than any picture now being given showings, unless it be "The Miracle Man," but this one by the Liberty Theatre, Fresno, Cal., to our minds tops every specimen we have inspected.

There isn't much use of wasting time trying to tell you why we think this is so good. It is reproduced for your own inspection. Somebody did a lot of work on it and the result is a display which we label 100 per cent without question. Our only regret is that every exhibitor who plays "Broken Blossoms" won't be able to copy it for his display. In size this was five columns by fifteen inches.

THE Strand of Cincinnati is responsible for this display on "The Country Cousin" which was three columns by six inches. It is certainly very classy, a mighty fine example of the intelligent use of the pen for display work.

pains to herald Miss Hammerstein as a new star, since the movie crowd doesn't take any too kindly to new comers, having learned that many a touted headliner wasn't so much and preferring to see the tried and true. Also if this is Miss Hammerstein's first appearance in Cincinnati we would have endeavored to grab some small film which would serve to bolster up the box-office end of the bill. The Strand is also using Franklin's orchestra pit idea.

Every black sheep was somebody's pet lamb once.

THIS was a pretty nice little display, three columns by eight inches, which the Walnut of Cincinnati used to advertise "A Woman of Pleasure" and "The Hayseed," billing them as a double attraction.

We notice that quite a lot of exhibitors are giving Arbuckle's comedies the headlines, especially when the feature booked is not so strong as a box-office bet. In fact we believe this is a nice way to get a weak picture by and not have business slump. We do not mean to infer that Blanche Sweet is to be classed as a poor box-office star, since we know that she has a big following.

Relative to the display itself, we would suggest that if you are going to use this for a model that you buy about an inch more space. This looks a bit crowded. Aside from that we call it a very effective display.

Don't get discouraged. It is often the last key in the bunch that opens the lock.

THIS wasn't the largest display in the copy of the Baltimore Sun, from which it was taken, but it seemed to stick out on the page as no other ad did, so we selected it for these pages, and since have been looking it over carefully to see just what made it so prominent. Our conclusion is the usual design with its bold black border.

At any rate it advertised "The Vengeance of Durand" right well, especially as a "first glance" display. We do not know what the quoted sentence beginning with "Dear mistress——" refers to, but it serves to arouse curiosity about the story of the feature. We are inclined to think that if we were going to advertise this feature we would bill this from the Rex Beach angle rather than the star side. From the number of good pictures that have been made from the Beach novels, the author's name now means a great deal to movie fans. At a casual glance the fact that this is a Beach story might be overlooked in the way the Picture-Garden has mentioned this important item. In size this display was two columns by six inches.

THERE is a certain distinctiveness about the Imperial's (San Francisco, Cal.) advertising which places it in a class by itself. A certain style of type is always used and the general layout is always the same. For the "Eyes of Youth" engagement a little larger space than usual has been purchased and rather more care has been taken in the framing of the display. This hand-drawing of Miss Young is especially good. The Imperial artist has outdone himself in this connection. As for the type matter, that is also to be commended. Having a subject on which superlatives are not wasted this strong personal recommendation for "Eyes of Youth" is probably the correct angle on which to work. A little idea of the story of the picture is given which is also correct, since the title itself is not very illuminating. This ad certainly looks clean and classy. It was four columns wide by ten inches deep.

What some men are wont to call a clean profit is often the result of a dirty transaction.

WE have elsewhere in this section given an Imperial, San Francisco, Cal., display most favorable comment, but can't be so charitable with this one on "Male and Female." The most favorable thing we see in the whole layout is the fact that it is quite a ways out of the ordinary, too far out according to our idea. In criticism, we would start first with calling attention to the fact that the title of the film is not given the headlines and certainly this is the best bet for billing. Next is the use of the cuts and their quality. They tell no story nor yet would the reader be able to recognize the persons they are intended to represent.

The producers of this feature have without doubt paid a wad of money to get the picture rights to J. M. Barrie's dramatic success, "The Admirable Crichton," from which this feature was made. They chose to call it "Male and Female" but that doesn't mean that the exhibitor should overlook the box-office angle of Barrie's name and of the reputation which this particular play has. Next to be considered is the fact that in the Babylonian episode are some most gorgeous scenes which brand the picture as a spectacle. The feature is in nine reels and is a real super-production, yet the Imperial billing would not carry the idea that it was anything out of the ordinary.

If we were going to frame a display for this feature we would bill, first the title, second the author and the play from which it was adapted and next Cecil B. De Mille, and then the other things which present opportunities for selling talk.

We want to compliment the Imperial ad man on one thing, however, and that is the catch line at the top. He started off like a house afire to frame something mighty good but didn't get farther than the first line. That is, this is the way it looks to us. In size the display was three columns by ten inches.

Reading often makes a man full of words he cannot pronounce.

S. BARRETT McCORMICK has used a still of the most melodramatic scene in "The Girl From Outside" and one of the girl herself and tied a bit of the frozen north on to the bottom of his display and evolved the best ad we have seen on this Rex Beach picture.

The dramatic action depicted commands attention, the selling talk explains it and then comes the announcement of the title and author. You will notice that the Circle didn't bother to mention actors in this display which we believe is the correct thing with a Rex Beach story. Title and author would overshadow even a very well known star. In size this ad was four columns by ten inches. Again McCormick gives his smaller numbers mention.

If ignorance were bliss there would be more happiness on earth.

HERE is an ad which would make two pretty good displays. Beginning with a producers cut the Sun Theatre of Omaha had a conventional display for "Fair and Warmer" to which it only needed to add the theatre and date line. Then it began again on its own hook and evolved a good fair type display, in fact the best of the "two" ads. The cut mentioned is one of the sort which are hard to make additions to and still have a display look well, since it is complete in itself. Even a name and date line added to it doesn't fit.

In the "Joy Forecast" paragraph the Sun has conceived something rather original. However if we had been going to use the cut and this selling talk we would have placed it directly under the cut, set it up in smaller type, perhaps italics, taken a knife and cut the lower line of the rule in the box off and then used rule to inclose all added material in a box.

This in size was two columns wide by sixteen inches in depth. We would say that nearly half of the display is wasted space except in so far as the value of a big space goes.

HERE is a four column, fifteen inch display on "Sundown Trail" by the Strand, Tacoma, Wash., that has pretty nearly the 100 per cent label and we don't know but quite. This is mighty good advertising on a mighty good feature. It is worth clipping for a model along which to frame other displays even if you arent's going to play "Sundown Trail."

The only thing which can cheat some people out of the last word is an echo.

Comment and Criticism

WE wouldn't call this page display a tie-up with Dayton, Ohio, merchants good advertising, for "A White Man's Chance," but we would consider it pretty fair publicity for Sieferts Rialto Theatre, which perhaps is the same thing.

The reason we differentiate is because by grabbing the top of the page for the theatre name cut, Mr. Seifert has sold the Rialto Theatre by his big head line.

When it comes to selling the Kerrigan film he hasn't done so well. The eight-point in the centre is too long and too commonplace to bid for any great amount of reading. When this display is reduced to our columns this portion just mentioned will be too fine to be readable, but as stated, it isn't worth copying.

In the lower half of the display Mr. Seifert has used three cuts. One is of Kerrigan, the two others are local artists who appear on the Rialto bill.

At first glance you would think that they were in support of Kerrigan. Reference to "Dangerous Nan McGrew" is rather disjointed. It begins one place and ends somewhere else and repeats itself. Looking at this display for first impressions one gets this. The Rialto and Kerrigan's name and a cut of him. That is not enough for a full-page display.

If we had been going to tie-in for this page we would have kept on going and secured a couple of more local ads to fill out the page in depth and confined our talk about the films and musical program to the center columns, the way the Rialto started to do. We are using this display because it is a pretty good example for what not to do when you try co-operative advertising. Of course you can't get away from the fact that in this big space everybody came in for some good publicity at a small price.

"A toast—Friendship—may differences of opinion only cement it."

WE don't know whether to call this display on "Loot" good or bad. It is certainly novel and different but someway it doesn't seem to balance nor does the best exploitation bet the feature has the title stand out so it will be noticed at first glance. We are of the opinion that if the Tudor (Atlanta, Ga.) had placed his case of jewels on a table, thereby giving him an opportunity to get a black background he would have accomplished more than he has here. He could then have shaded his arm and hand which is reaching for the jewels. As an idea this was first class but we sort of think that the Tudor fell down in developing it. Here is another chap who has thought Franklin's "orchestra pit" idea was good enough for borrowing. In size this display was three columns wide and twelve inches deep.

"Go often to the house of thy friend for weeds choke up the unused path."

THE Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Cal., didn't have much to do with the display we are showing you here on "The Life Line," since most of it is producer's cut, but they did grab an advertising angle which is worth remembering by any manager who has a house within reading distance of a big city.

You will notice the paragraph at the right-hand corner of the Plaza display, which states that "The Life Line" broke all records at Grauman's.

Now Grauman's has a great reputation all over California and there can be no doubt that advertising the feature this way was a most convincing way of making San Diego people think that it was something out of the ordinary, as it would naturally follow that a feature which breaks house records must be a good one. Therefore Plaza fans when they read about the Grauman engagement stopped saying to themselves, "Who is the star," etc., and began making plans to see it. In other words, Grauman's prestige gave the feature a prestige it did not have of itself, since that aside from Tourndur's name there wasn't so much to recommend it to the average picture patron. The feature did a great business at the Plaza and the management believes that it was the Grauman mention which did a lot toward getting it started.

Entertains Trade Journal Scribes

TOM MOORE the Washington exhibitor entertained New York trade journal scribes with a dinner at the National Press Club, the Capitol city's "holy of holies" Saturday evening, Nov. 1st. A trio journeyed to Washington for the event. They were J. H. Allicotte from Wid's Daily, Charles E. Goodman and the Daily News Have a Party

THERE is one sort of a production where Young America is to be considered first, last and all the time, and that is the serial. If you figure that you don't want children in your house don't book serials, and if you overlook them when advertising a serial production, you may blame yourself if the picture doesn't make money for you. Children seem to inherit a love for the melodramatic which is usually to be found in the continued subjects. The same sort of appeal which has made the five-cent library of "Diamond Dick" novels such a success, is to be found in the serial picture. Without arguing whether or not this is a good thing for a child, we jump to the fact that serials are made and children like them, which brings the paramount question up to the wise showman, as how to get the youngsters interested in the first chapter.

In this department the experience of Barney Goodman, manager of the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, will be found interesting. At least he has given a lesson to the M. P. industry and showmen by getting a flying start on "The Midnight Man," which stars James J. Corbett. Goodman wanted the men of to-morrow to see this serial, because they could tell Dad and some day tell their children of having seen a real champion on the screen.

So he obtained the co-operation of "San Francisco Daily News" and together a "kid" party was given. A week prior to the running of the first episode, the one with which Goodman expected to make the winning one, newspaper stories of Jim Corbett and his picture were run and coupons were printed. Saturday morning was the day set for the party. Every boy and girl who had clipped the coupon and presented it with a penny for war-tax was admitted, and the photographs accompanying this article testify as to whether anyone came to Goodman's party.

Here they are, all ready to attend the Daily News (San Francisco) party at the Frolic theatre

Suburbans Come In For Special Stunt To Boost "Miracle Man"

THE twenty or more suburban theatres in Greater Cincinnati which booked "The Miracle Man" to follow shortly after the first-run downtown showings (which, by the way, extended over three weeks) came in for some special exploitation help that did much to make their engagements big successes.

Incidentally, this is one of the few times where the smaller houses were given the direct benefit of a special stunt to help them along. The Publicity Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Cincinnati exchange, secured the cooperation of the Cincinnati Post in putting over a novel stunt that gave the small theatres publicity for a number of days, with every one of the theatres and dates of "The Miracle Man" showing being mentioned daily.

The plan is this: The Post offered a free ticket to see "The Miracle Man" at the nearest theatre to any person returning a lost article advertised in the Post classified "Lost and Found" columns. It also offered a ticket to those who placed a "Found" ad in the Post which restored a lost article to the owner. The fact that The Miracle Man believes in everybody's honesty make the link-up logical and the Miracle Man's search for honest people in Cincinnati caused much comment. Each day, with the announcement of the Post's offer, the list of suburban theatres booking "The Miracle Man" was run with the dates of the showings. Mr. Calhoun, classified ad. manager of the Post, gave hearty cooperation in making the stunt a big success.

Each day, when honest persons reported their finds interesting human interest stories were run in the Post, each of course being an endorsement of the value of the Post's classified ad page, but at the same time calling attention to "The Miracle Man" and that so-and-so was given a ticket to the "Blank" theatre, which is near her home. The stunt extended to every suburb of Cincinnati, to Newport, Covington, Bellevue, Latonia, and Dayton, Ky. and to Norwood, Lockland, Glendale, Ohio — all surrounding towns adjacent to Cincinnati.

McCormick Stages a Prologue With Two Objectives

S. BARRETT McCORMICK'S greatest exhibiting reputation lies in his ability to frame advertising displays that make the ordinary stuff look like circus posters but it is not to be inferred that the Circle showman doesn't specialize in other branches of exploitation as well.

The managing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., took a different course than those which he has been travelling in the interest of the exploitation of various features he has been presenting at the Circle when he recently designed an Anniversary Program that would carry a thought about the picture he was presenting.

"I had intended all along to use an unusually mythical idea for the prologue on Anniversary Week," said Mr. McCormick. "However when the opportunity of doing something in the interest of the picture I was showing presented itself, I quickly seized upon it as an added feature and a money-making advantage for the house.

"To those who know the story of Mary Pickford's 'The Hoodlum,' it will be readily seen that the thought of the story pertains to a rich girl who suddenly eschews her wealth and lives with her father in the tenement district."

McCormick's idea to use this analogy at first resolved itself into the thought that he could make the Goddess who was inhabiting the pedestal of Prid-, step down from her perch and reside among those of the lower classes. However, he saw a better chance for carrying out the theme of "The Hoodlum," by an interpretative dance performed by a local favorite of Indianapolis.

The girl at first danced the steps of the haughty and going through the series of terpischorean evolutions became the loveable girl, just as Amy Burke, at first the rich grand-daughter of a millionaire, later became the poor tenement girl, in love with life in general.

The idea of the dance was a distinct novelty and was greatly lauded by press and public.

Paints Fine Picture For Film Showing

FOR years a feature of the Denver Sunday Post have been the paintings of Paul Gregg, noted chiefly for his splendid water colors of Indian life.

So when Manager Ellison, of the Princess, booked "Told in the Hills" for his theatre he linked up with Gregg in a full-page painting on the magazine section of the Sunday Post, painted from stills of the picture. Gregg never executed a better work of Indian life than this, the expression and coloring being superb. The picture was framed and hung in the lobby during the run of the film.

New Exploitation Idea for Roosevelt Film

AN exploitation idea for "Our Teddy," the Roosevelt film, originates from South Dakota, where the plan was given its initial tryout in Doland, a town of 500 population, when Exhibitor F. D. Riley played "Our Teddy" to two days of capacity business after enlisting the co-operation of the American Legion.

The American Legion chapter, which was in need of funds, was quick to take advantage of the opportunity to fatten its treasury and place it in a better position to look after the needs and interests of the returned soldier.

Of course, Mr. Riley gave a percentage of the receipts to the American Legion, but the amount above that was "velvet" for him.

The publicity he derived through this kind of co-operation was the best possible type he could hope to gain for the showing, and the results were better than they would have been had he presented the picture in the every-day manner.

He not only gained in bigger box-office receipts, but he had an opportunity to show his patriotism in a substantial way, winning the undivided support of American Legion members.

The production was a most appropriate one from the point of view of the American Legion, inasmuch as it dealt with the life of a former soldier, statesman and president.

Believing that the picture affords some wonderful propaganda and financial possibilities to both American Legion chapters and exhibitors, the producer has since the Doland showing been able to line up showmen and legion chapters in a dozen other North and South Dakota towns for similar mutually profitable engagements. In each instance the efforts have resulted satisfactorily to the exhibitor and the soldiers.

The less a man knows the easier it is to convince him that he knows it all.

Not So New But as Effective as Ever

ANOTHER prize winner in the Holah contest for exploitation schemes explained several times in these columns is H. O. Beardsley, owner and manager of Beardsley Theatre, Red Oak, Iowa. He opened his advertising campaign for Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" with a publicity story that told local theatre-goers of the improbability of it being shown in Red Oak because of the demand for it from the larger cities. This was followed, two days later, by another newspaper story which stated, as a news item, that Mr. Beardsley was making a special trip to Omaha in an effort to procure it. Two days later the paper published a telegram from Mr. Beardsley announcing that he had been successful.

Extensive newspaper and billboard space was then used. Upon his return he visited all ministers in the territory and told them of the good such a picture does. Several of them accepted his invitation to attend the opening performance. After the screening they signed statements boosting it, which Mr. Beardsley used in his advertising the following morning. The Mayor also was induced to attend and sign a statement. Local merchants were persuaded to hold special Pickford and Hoodlum sales in return for free advertising of the sales on the Beardsley Theatre screen. A girl, wearing a costume that duplicated one worn by Amy Burke, sold Pickford songs by house to house canvassing. A singer in the theatre featured the same songs and sold them for days prior to opening, mailing list was used extensively, and cut-outs of three sheets mounted on beaver board were placed in business sections. He gave a special children's show on the morning that the ministers' endorsements appeared in his advertising.

Teaser Campaign and Local Color Win For Moore

NO less an authority on advertising than R. E. Pritchard, director of advertising and publicity for the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Toronto, Can., said to you last week in his article on the efficiency of the teaser style of exploitation that "Given a humorous or at least a light subject the teaser method of advertising will pay provided there is a real idea behind it. But there must be some real idea to be developed: once you start forcing this sort of exploitation it loses its punch."

We do not use these columns for a place to air our ideas. Rather do we attempt to make it exclusively what its title implies, a service, leaving the advancing of theories to others. We are constrained, however, in this instance to step out of our role long enough to concur with Mr. Pritchard, excepting however his statement concerning limiting the subjects for teaser methods to "humorous or at least a light subject." Mr. Pritchard summed up his argument in the sentence which says: "there must be a real idea behind the teaser campaign."

That you may judge for yourself whether this is true we append herewith the experience of Tom Moore of Washington, who has just completed a three weeks run on "Soldiers of Fortune" at his Garden theatre in which the teaser method of exploitation was employed.

The advance advertising was a "teaser" reading: "Sold For?" which after five days we developed into "SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE" adding the name of the theatre. The "Sold For?" teaser was used in this shape daily; six of the cuts scattered through the news pages of the newspaper selected. No more than one to each page and each page to be up in the front of the paper. The reports indicate that all classes of people in the Capitol city talked about this query ad and waited to see what the mysterious words meant. The opening business of the film must have been attracted by this form of advertising because up to that time no other exploitation had been attempted. But there was an excuse for the use of "Sold For" and when Washington was finally let in on the meaning of the words there was no comeback. There was "a real idea behind it" as Pritchard said.

After the opening it was of course necessary to start with something else which would keep Washington reminded that "Soldiers of Fortune" was playing at the Garden and for this Moore hooked on to local color with several stunts. The Trinity Community House in Washington was campaigning for funds and as their cause was a worthy one the newspapers gave them a lot of space each day so Mr. Moore arranged a special showing for them. They netted a fair profit from it and did some good advertising for "Soldiers of Fortune." (Continued on next page)

Teaser Campaign and Local Color

They put cards announcing the presentation in department stores and other merchant's windows which had never carried a showcard previously and in the hotel lobbys and other public places about the city.

A paragraph mentioning the picture and their showing of it went in each of their newspaper stories. They tried to induce General Pershing to attend their show but as he had to choose between attending the picture performance and the House ball and his dates made it more convenient to attend the latter, the picture show lost out on this engagement. It did however get some publicity from the invitation.

Among the celebrities which were interested in the Community House drive was Mrs. Newton D. Baker and Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, wives of the Secretary of War and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, respectively. In fact these two had actual charge of the special showing.

From the tie-up with the Community House people, the Garden management went to the Red Cross and made a similar arrangement with it, getting in the Red Cross drive publicity for good space.

The Red Cross furthermore had their workers put out colored lobby photos carrying their own "dates" on the Red Cross subscription stands and booths throughout Washington. This brought stills into banks and other exclusive locations. In the meantime, displays of the usual type were being run in the Washington papers and other stunts were being pulled.

One of the most effective of these was the use of a "newspaper" which Bert Adler who handled the exploitation for the distributor describes as follows:

"I printed in Washington a newspaper with the title 'WASHINGTON NEWS' that carried a synopsis of 'SOLIDERS OF FORTUNE' but did not give the story away. It was really an elaborated teaser stunt.

"It looks fairly like the front page of a newspaper. This we gave out through newsdealers in the newspapers they delivered or sold to their customers — of course we aimed for the deliveries to homes — and then after some days when this avenue was closed to us, we improvised a mailing list from the telephone directory, hitting the women and the residential sections as far as possible."

One of the best attention attracting stunts was that of the use of a bulletin board filled with telegrams from members of the cast of "Soldiers of Fortune" and others who were interested in the film's first showing.

A big board was used to tack the telegrams on and many people passing the theatre stopped to read what was printed thereon. People who could not been been induced to look at the nicely decorated lobby, would stand in front of the theatre long enough to read every message on the board.

Several of the messages are reproduced herewith that exhibitors who may wish to use the telegram idea may see what form of wires proved successful with Moore.

It is indeed gratifying to know of the masterly way you have handled the showing of Soldiers of Fortune and the wonderful results you are having, accept my congratulations and best wishes to you and your patrons.

Takes Issue With Pritchard on Teaser Advertising

R. E. Pritchard, who wrote us an article on teaser methods of advertising last week, will know that his article was read since already we have received letters stating the opinion that the Allen's advertising man is wrong in saying a picture must be a light subject to prove a good medium for the teaser method.

From Cincinnati comes a story of advertising "L'Apache" Dorothy Dalton's latest release by a teaser campaign in its most advanced form and getting great results. Before Manager I. Lisbon of the Family Theater, Cincinnati, presented "L'Apache" he had the Cincinnati Post run a photograph of a moving picture star holding a black mask before her face. Only her hair, chin and mouth were visible. "Can You Guess?" was the headline the Post put on the photo and Manager Libson offered a ticket to those sending in the correct identity. Of course, she was Dorothy Dalton. In the first mail following publication of the picture more than 200 replies were received; 150 correctly named Miss Dalton. The best part of this stunt is the photo is just one of the "stills" furnished with "L'Apache" and draws direct attention to the new play. The fans "ate up" the stunt and before Manager Libson could close the contest in self defense, hundreds of letters swamped his office.

The teaser ad. which brought good results

Olympia Realizes Possibilities of Farrar Pictures

NAMES mean a great deal to motion picture audiences. That goes without saying since the very foundation of the success of the multiple feature was built upon it. The exhibitor who fails to make use of the exploitation possibilities of the star's name in any production he books, is throwing away the very thing he has paid for to a large extent.

The management of Gordon's Olympia in Boston realized the full possibilities of Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen's "The World and Its Woman," shown for a week to capacity business. In advance exploitation, in the use of the lobby and in the manner of presentation, no points were missed by the Hub's expert showman, who is making a big success of the Olympia as a first run house.

The two inside lobbies of the Olympia were liberally decorated with handsome portraits, stills, and signs announcing the showing of the Farrar production. The display was striking, yet dignified, and in every way calculated to draw patronage of the type attracted by the famous prima donna. Equal attention was devoted to the presentation of the picture. At the opening of the performance slides were thrown on the screen announcing the coming of Farrar in the greatest picture ever produced and offered for the first time in Boston exclusively at the Olympia.

When the slides were shown, "La Tosca," as sung by Farrar, was given by a Victrola in the orchestra pit. The courtesy of the music store that supplied the Victrola was acknowledged on the screen. An effective piece of staging was revealed with the raising of the screen, disclosing a cut-out of Geraldine Farrar seated on the top of a circle, indicating the world. The cut-out was 25 feet high and was made particularly striking by a play of lights on the rich red plush curtains that formed a background for the display. The manager of the Olympia received many compliments from his patrons on the artistic presentation given "The World and Its Woman."

I have just received word of the manner in which you have handled Soldiers of Fortune and the wonderful results you have had with my first independent production. It is indeed a satisfaction to know that its premier has met with such success and I heartily congratulate you upon the splendid results you have obtained.

When I heard of the success you are having with Soldiers of Fortune it brought back to me all the incidents that happened during the filming of the picture that at that time seemed like hardships but the news of the way it has been received in your theatre has more than repaid me. I sincerely congratulate you and hope you will tell the people of your city how I appreciate their wonderful compliment and how dearly I love them.

Character Exploitation Takes Away The All Star Cast Curse

By R. E. Pritchard

Director of Advertising and Publicity, Allen Theatre Enterprises, Canada

TRUTH in advertising is one of the demands of Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen, and of course that meets with the approval of every advertising writer who is looking for continued results instead of mere "easy money." Therefore, I have never had the temptation here to resort to the superlatives which I so continually condemned when I was writing from the Standpoint of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News.

But next to the superlative there has been nothing so abused as the "all star cast" expression unless it be "greater than 'The Birth of a Nation.'" Of course there are instances where the "all star" expression is justified, but it has been so abused as to become meaningless. In fact, it is the resort of the advertising writer when he is without a star and knows nothing else to say about a particular production.

Such difficulties meet one in exploiting "The Girl From Outside." I do not believe that any one is justified in using the "all star" expression in referring to this cast, but it remains a fact that in few screen productions have there been created characters that will live longer than all of the chief figures in this picture. Cullen Landis, whom I knew as a little schoolboy without picture dreams before I ever entered film work myself, does remarkable work in this picture, and there are others that will never be forgotten.

When we started the campaign on this offering we decided that the characters had the appeal and we attempted to convey this appeal to the public. And our efforts to do this were carried out without ever mentioning the name of any actor.

There were some other reasons for concluding that this was the right advertising angle. In the first place it would not have been good business for us here in Canada, playing the picture just as the cold season is starting to feature the below-zero habits of Alaska. As a matter of fact these are summer scenes in Canada and they do not justify the masses of snow that decorate some of the ready-prepared advertising. In the next place we did not lose sight of the value of the name of Rex Beach as the author, and it was mentioned prominently in all of our displays, but we did not believe that his name alone was sufficient argument for the people to come to see this picture. It was very well to go the limit with it on his first picture but not on later ones, in our opinion.

All pictures play a week at the Allen Theatre, Toronto, and the picture is shown at the same time in other principal cities in Canada in our chain that reaches from coast to coast. The plan of advertising employed by us in Toronto is to advertise the offering every day in the week and not to center the display in the Saturday or Sunday issues. (I have explained in a preceding article that such papers as are issued here and called Sunday are really printed and distributed on Saturday, though in addition to the regular Saturday issues.) We start our campaigns usually on each picture on the Thursday before the showing, and on that day split fifty-fifty with the current attraction. On Friday the current attraction drops to a few lines at the top of the ad with a "Now playing" line, and on Saturday it goes to the bottom with a "Last time today" or similar line.

It is our experience that if the people you get to the theatre the first part of the week are pleased with the picture and talk about it the business for Friday and Saturday is certain.

So in the first advertisement which appeared in the Thursday issues we sought to give some idea of what the title meant, so we used a picture of The Girl and then the line "This is the girl six men loved." In the Friday issues we introduced "The Curly Kid," quoting from the sub-title in the picture, "His hair was the straightest thing about him," and then added, "But how he loved—'The Girl from Outside.'" Then we referred to the offering as Rex Beach's "pulsing story of the amazing love of six men for a homeless little girl."

The Saturday ad took on some of the aspects of a "teaser." Here we used the heads of the five Wag boys and of the man who wins her and that of the girl with the simple line "These six men loved her" and after the title of the picture, "Rex Beach's pulsing story tells why." We expected that everyone would ask the question, "Which man married her?" but we preferred not to ask it for them.

Again, in the so-called Sunday issues the curiosity element was used. We employed up to four full columns with the prominent top line, "Rex Beach's Pulsing Story of the Girl Six Men Loved." Then we used the heads of the five Wag boys with the clever lines from the picture below each one and the head of The Girl. Of course everyone wondered where the sixth man was; even one of my friends was certain that a mistake had been made in the design.

This cut occupied the greater portion of the space and therefore we could use this selling argument in the smaller type:

"Death had left her alone there—where the law of the fang and claw prevailed. Her innocence was a bait to the human wolves until the five Wag boys made themselves her guardians. They lived by their wits, but their hearts were big and clean; and straight into each of them the little girl walked—to make them the purer and better.

"Laughter, and now and then a tear; innocence of young girlhood and the hardened spirit of evil; the quick action of the out-doors; a wonderful love story; selfishness utter and self sacrifice that knows nothing too big to give; every element that a pulsing photoplay should have will be found here. A picture without a star, but one that you will remember so long as the heavens are above."

My opinion is that there is a most unusual story in this picture and that it would be bad policy to attempt to tell the story in any of the advertising. We tried to keep the curiosity element strong and at the same time to make the appeal to the women with the stress on the love story.

So in the Monday ad we used a scene from the picture which shows the man she afterward married leaving her to go out to seek gold to replace the money that he had stolen. The expression on his face would indicate that they had quarreled and we allowed the impression to stand accentuating it with the line, "Why did she marry him?" and then the added statement, "Five other men loved her with amazing devotion," and "Rex Beach's story that holds the heart."

In either the Tuesday or Wednesday ad, or both, we like to challenge any person who hasn't seen our pictures to get the opinion of those who have. Word of mouth advertising travels unusually rapidly in Toronto and it is of great value. Therefore on Tuesday we selected one of the most appealing scene pictures that has been made and used it with the single line, "The screen's love story supreme," and then the advice, "Ask any one who has seen it." Wednesday we brought the whole Wag family back and the girl, using the scene where the girl is telling them that she is going to marry. Incidentally I believe that this use of scene pictures in their entirety is something of a novelty in newspaper advertising. In some instances we have painted out the background, letting only the figures stand out, but in others we have made the whole thing a portion of the ad. Where you can get a striking still this is very effective, but the photos must be clean-cut and mean something. I want to say right here that I never saw a better selection of stills than that which comes with "The Girl From Outside."

My personal belief is that this method of playing the characters rather than the actors themselves solves the question of advertising a picture that is without a real star. It creates in the public mind a desire to see each particular character and to know the remainder of the action that is suggested.

One of the first displays Mr. Pritchard used for the "Girl from Outside"

People are going to motion pictures these days purely for the enjoyment they are getting. They want to know in advance something about the general character of the story, but they do not want diagramed for them just what they are going to see. The curiosity element in itself is strong, but it is not sufficient. The fact that the picture is the work of a noted author helps a lot, but in itself it is not sufficient incentive.

Characters can put something of the soul into a picture and this is just what we tried to do in this case. The old love is the one that has the greatest appeal and when you combine that with something "different" you are apt to get attention. Certainly when you have unusual characters you have that opportunity. It is hard to create a real love for a character in a newspaper ad, but if you will connect all of them with the main theme—in this case a wonderful love story—you will have your patrons debating in their minds the question of which the girl should have married—and why—and the result will generally be a sale of tickets.

Keenan Picture Aids in Terminating Street Car Strike

WHEN the motion picture has reached the stage where it becomes a decisive figure in the affairs of capital and labor, there can be no doubting that the silent drama has attained at least one aim which all those with the best interests of the screen at heart have long striven for.

This stage has been attained beyond question, for in Oakland, Cal., recently it was the Frank Keenan picture, "The World Aflame," which directly assisted in bringing about the settlement of a street car strike which had all Oakland walking to its office for days.

Eugene L. Perry, Manager of the T. and D. Theatre in Oakland, shrewdly handled not only the exhibition of the picture; but the advertising of it, and succeeded in centering the attraction of every reader of the Oakland papers on the Keenan attraction. Tired feet are eager to turn to anything that might afford relief, and not only those directly interested in the strike — the carmen and the traction heads — but the public as well showered attention on the picture, and money on the T. and D. Box Office.

In an effort to bring about a settlement of the strike, Manager Perry inserted the following advertisement in the Oakland Daily Post and other papers of the town:

"Mayor John E. Davie, Commissioners Edwards, Baccus, Morse, Soderberg; W. R. Alberger of the San Francisco-Oakland Termnal Railways Company and L. F.

The number opens with a dark stage, and a spotlight revealed a girl who sang an original verse, "I am the Organ," following which C. Sharpe Minor gave a short selection on the pipe organ which very fully demonstrated the volume, range and accessories necessary for orchestral effect of the big instrument. A young man in overalls and shirtsleeves advanced to the center of the stage and introduced himself with the following verse:

I'm the man that operates the moving picture machine,
I'm the chap that throws the pictures up here on the screen,
From the features to the weeklies,
And the comedies just for fun;
And if you'll give me your kind attention folks,
I'll show you how it's done.

The stage was partially darkened, and a screen about six by eight was lowered at the back center. A motion picture projection machine was wheeled on and the short subject, "A Doll's House," bearing the Ford trade-mark, was projected on the screen.

The next introduction was by a soprano soloist who introduced Arthur Kay, the orchestra director, by singing one of his original selections:

The next man you all know,
He's a help to any show;
With his baton in his hand,
He has the power to command,
Music that thrills, with its sweetness it fills you,
And he plays everything from a rag to opera grand.

Director Kay appeared on the stage and lead the orchestra in special numbers. The house electrician introduced himself when he appeared on the stage in his working attire, with the following lines:

I'm the electrician and my work is out of sight,

Showing a Grauman audience how the picture is projected in "A Tour Through Grauman's"

Connecting with the illustration on the opposite page you will see Grauman's usherettes. Mr. Grauman could stage an opera without seeking outside talent

But it's up to me to see that all the lights are working right.
These color schemes and light effects, to please you folks are made,
And if they add to your enjoyment I feel amply repaid—
It takes a lot of work to light up one of Grauman's shows,
But watch us for a minute and we'll show you how it goes.

He then went to the back of the stage, and upon pushing a sliding door to one side, revealed the mammoth switchboard that operates all the lighting effects of the stage and auditorium. With his assistant, the electrician gave the audience a demonstration of how light effects throughout the house are made possible.

The Grauman electricians showing the audience how lighting effects are obtained in "A Tour Through Grauman's"

Perhaps the most popular number of the "tour" was that of the usherettes. Prior to the opening of the theatre, almost two years ago, Mr Grauman conceived the idea of giving his usherettes a distinctive costume, and he has made this what might be termed a trade-mark for the theatre, which has been copied by theatres in several parts of the country. One of the usherettes appeared first and sang an introductory verse:

I'm the little usherette
Who's always there to meet you,
To light your pathway down the aisle,
And do my best to seat you;
Efficiency is the slogan
That not one of us forgets,
Because you see we're proud to be Grauman's usherettes.

The first part of the usheretees' number consisted of a fancy dance by four of the girls. Following there was a general ensemble of all the usherettes on the stage, they making their entrance by the grand stairways at the rear of the stage. A fancy drill was then given in which all of the usherettes of the theatre took part.

For an encore the curtains which closed after the drill, were again opened and five little tots, ranging from three to seven years in age, stood at attention.

Regent of Toronto Stages Quaint Tabloids

MANAGER Will M. Elliott of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, has been staging a number of quaint tabloids at his magnificent house to add color to current film attractions. When "The Red Lantern" was presented for a two weeks' engagement, Lady Oga Towaga, a talented Chinese vocalist, rendered appropriate vocal selections from the steps of a Chinese Temple which formed the special stage setting for the period. Eight girls in Oriental costume also gave interpretations of Chinese dancing in a garden scene.

For Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," which opened at the Regent Theatre on November 10th, a pantomime was staged by Farnum Barton and a company of players under the direction of Mr. Elliott. This, too, was typical of the film feature and was presented with a special stage setting for the occasion. Manager Elliott also engaged Miss Ruth Patton as the special soloist for the act.

It is interesting to note the number of first-run theatres which are playing "Male and Female" this week, and that the feature is being used almost by itself to make up a bill.

Several of the wires which gave the information contained in these pages, stated that the De Mille production is breaking all house records, even those made by "The Miracle Man." At the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the picture opened Sunday at 1.00 p. m. At 2.15 the opening of the "performance de luxe" there was standing room only and little of that. At 2.30 it was impossible to get in the house. S. R. O. is unusual in New York houses before the the evening performances, at which the orchestras appear.

In Denver "Male and Female" is playing day and date at both the Rialto and Princess. The show will move to the Rialto, New York, next week to make room for Clara Kimball Young in "The Eyes of Youth" at the Rivoli.

Presents Novel Exploitation Idea for "The Hoodlum"

BASING an exploitation campaign upon the strongest of all human faculties—the imagination, Gordon's Olympia Theatre of Boston has devised a most unusual method of promotion to accompany the presentation of "The Hoodlum," one which any exhibitor can use in co-operation with a local newspaper.

The campaign invites all girls in Boston, who are 18 years old or less, to write to a Boston newspaper just what they would do provided their circumstances were like those of Amy Burke, played by Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."

Added to the inducement of seeing one's brain-product in print, the management of the Olympia, through the auspices of the evening newspaper which will carry the contest, is offering $500 in prizes. The capital award will be $250 in cash.

To stir up interest in the "What-I-Would-Do" contest, the newspaper will publish a full account of the human-interest facts in "The Hoodlum." A part of its copy for announcing the contest will be:

"If you were a motherless girl of 18 enjoying every luxury and advantage conferred through the immense wealth of a doting grandfather, would you give up everything to live with your own father in the lowliest slums where he engages in a work that enables him to fulfill his life's ambition?

"Should you decide to live with your father, it would mean the permanent separation from your grandfather and the luxuries he has always provided for you. Rather a vexing question, isn't it? Yet Amy Burke decided it and she never regretted her decision. Was she perfectly right in so doing?

"What would you do if you had been in Amy Burke's shoes? Would you leave the life of chummy roadsters, crepe-de-chine, French-heels and servants, to mix with the lowest form of human live abounding tenements? And just because your father had a freak ambition? Write out your answer and send it to this paper.

"The awards will be made about December 20 and the winners will be provided with extra money for the Christmas season. Just what would YOU have done? Wrap up your answer in a two-cent stamp and ship it to us right away."

Thus did a score or more appeals find their ways to thousands of Boston girls of 18 years and under. The management of the Olympia, in outlining the contest, shrewdly anticipated the fact that nothing is so easy for people to decide as somebody else's business.

Keenan Picture Aids

Laytham, President of the Carmen's Union:

"Stop the strike. The public of Oakland demand it. Civic government is impeded and business loss is more than $500,000 daily.

"I earnestly request that you see this picture. It contains the 'vision' for a settlement. I invite everyone in Oakland to see 'The World Aflame.'"

"Eugene L. Perry,
"Manager T. & D. Theatre."

The Keenan picture is based wholly on a car strike, in which the great character actor, as the mayor of a suffering town, brings about the settlement of the walkout, and fosters a more amicable arrangement between capital and labor.

Virtually the entire roster of striking street carmen attended the showing at Perrys house, and without question the picture and story they saw unfolded before them had a very sobering effect upon their judgment. It was not very long after the record-breaking run at the T. and D. that the strike was brought to a happy ending, and the basis of settlement wasn't much different from that effected by Keenan in "The World Aflame."

Fox Has Special Ad Novelty For Exploitation of "Checkers"

A decided novelty in theatre advertising is said to be available to exhibitors through the William Fox Exchanges for this company's current production of "Checkers," the Henry Blossom racing picture.

It is an illustrated cut out card about three inches wide and five inches long, printed on both sides and extolling the entertainment values of the picture.

The top of the card is cut out to outline the figure of a jockey, riding a racing steed, with the horse in black and white and the checkered coat of the rider in red and white, and checker-board in pattern. Under the illustration is, "Come on Remorse," one of the titles of the race scene of the picture.

Following this is the announcement of the picture with some selling talk of approved variety. A blank space for the theatre imprint is left at the bottom of the card.

On the opposite side of the card from the one described is a catch line which reads: "Gee—Ain't it Hell to be Broke," which is illustrated by the cut of a man's face expressing extreme downheartedness. Then follows the suggestion of seeing "Checkers."

Demand For Project-a-Lite Forces Company to Incorporate

Rutledge & Company of Chicago, widely known to the picture industry as the manufactures of Project-a-Lites, have incorporated and will remove their factory from its present location to larger quarters on the 1st of the year. The demand for Project-a-Lites has been so heavy that more manufacturing and shipping space has become necessary to fill the orders for the Rutledge & Company products. Announcement of the firm's new location will appear in the Motion Picture News during December.

"Chic" Sale to Abandon Stage and Engage in Stellar Roles For Robertson–Cole Company

Charles "Chic" Sale, one of vaudeville's best known comedians, who is to be a Robertson-Cole star

CHARLES "Chic" Sale, who is well known through his work in the Passing Show of 1917 in Zeigfeld's Midnight Frolics and the big Shubert show, Monte Cristo, Jr., has been captured for the screen. This important announcement was made by Robertson-Cole after the comedian had affixed his signature to a long time contract.

"'Chic' Sale is to the fun loving public as Caruso is to the operatic stage"; says the Robertson-Cole report, "and his natural ability to make others forget by his real impersonations has won for him an enviable reputation from California to New York. 'Chic' is now on his way to the Coast with his own act, and after playing the principal theatres in the country will go to Los Angeles and arrange to commence his screen work." The Robertson-Cole announcement states further that "the best available players will be secured to work with 'Chic.' His first picture will be a production from the Saturday Evening Post story, 'The Smart Aleck,' by Irvin S. Cobb."

After becoming a Robertson-Cole star, Mr. Sale issued a statement which is repeated in part as follows:

"I have been an ardent admirer of the silent drama for many years, but I refused offers several years ago. I did this so that my name might mean something to the trade at the time I decided to desert the spoken stage for the studio makeup. I honestly believe that it is far better to work up to be a movie star from the stage than it is to be born a motion picture celebrity over night.

"It is my opinion that the screen is becoming more popular with time. Years ago the star of the big show frowned upon the thought of entering the movies, but to-day it is considered a big boost to be elevated from the spoken to the silent drama."

Christie Ends Tour of Nation

He Visits the Leading Independent Exchanges; Now Arranging World Marketing of New Comedies

CHRISTIE Comedies, C. H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, recently completed a seven weeks' tour of the United States. On his arrival at Hollywood Mr. Christie found that in his absence the enlarged Christie studios had been completed, with the property fronting on Sunset boulevard containing a stage running the entire length of a city block, and also dressing rooms for all of the stock company. The new improvements were made necessary by the new schedule of production, which will include a larger number of Christie Specials for next year, the marketing of which Mr Christie arranged during his tour of the leading independent exchanges in the key cities of the United States.

Mr. Christie announced that the continuance of Christie Comedies in one reel and the increased production of special feature comedies will make necessary the acquisition of new star talent for Christies, the names of whom will soon be announced.

Preceding Mr. Christie to Los Angeles by one day was Reginald Warde, New York exporter, who handles Christie Comedies for the entire world territory outside of the United States and Canada. Mr. Warde is in Los Angeles arranging for the acquisition of Christie's new feature comedies for the world market.

With Mr. Christie and Mr. Warde on their arrival in Los Angeles were a party of British theatre men, including Messrs. N. Hobart, A. Mears and R. Griarson, who operate the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., of London, including between thirty and forty of the leading moving picture theatres in the British Isles. The British party visited all of the leading Los Angeles theatres and studios, securing many novel ideas which will be included in the construction of six new theatres which their syndicate has under way in England.

Clara K. Young Donates Picture

Annual Festival to be Given at Waldorf-Astoria on Dec. 6, For Benefit of Little Mothers' Aid Association

THROUGH the courtesy of Herbert K. Somborn, President of the Equity Pictures Corporation, a beautiful personally autographed portrait of Clara Kimball Young has been donated to the Little Mothers' Aid Association, which will hold its annual Festival and Bazaar for needy little folks in the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Saturday December 6. An unusually worth while afternoon is promised, splendid musical entertainment of songs and recitations, dancing, and novelty booths of all descriptions and decoration will make their appeal to both eye and pocketbook in behalf of the little ones.

"Two much cannot be said in appreciation of the wonderful work accomplished for these blessed Tads," writes Miss Young, in a recent letter to Mr. Somborn. "The training given the children is absolutely practical—helps them to become genuine home makers. Cleanliness and order are the first things instilled in their minds, then comes thorough courses by trained Domestic Science teachers in cooking, sewing, laundering, and hygienic care of the little brothers and sisters * * * and best of all, the wonderful, happy summer days in the country when otherwise they would never see the sunshine."

Miss Young's interest in social and welfare work of various branches has long been a matter of comment, as well as her donations and support toward certain Army and Navy Units of which she was Honorary Captain, and the sole maintenance of the Clara Kimball Young Knitting Corps, organized and conducted during the period of the war at Thanhouser Studios, New Rochelle.

Miss Young's love for children, and the comfort and ease which they, in turn, express when near her, is well brought out in the school room episode of "Eyes of Youth," a particularly dramatic and appealing bit of artistry which sends the spectator away with a lump in his throat.

"Eyes of Youth" will have its metropolitan presentation at the Rivoli Theatre, November 30.

Wide Drive for "The Lost City"

Exploiting Campaign to Have Circus Features and to Play up Wild Animal Character of Production

IT is reported that extensive plans are now being arranged for the exploitation of Colonel Selig's animal serial, "The Lost City," starring Juanita Hansen, in fifteen episodes. The Warner Bros., who have secured the American and Canadian rights of distribution, which will be sold on a state rights basis, are pioneer producers and readily appreciate the value of advertising.

Mr. Harry Warner states that "a gigantic advertising campaign in proportion to the magnitude of the serial will be launched. The exhibitors who book 'The Lost City' may feel assured that they will have at their command not only a large assortment of advertising accessories but they will be assisted by a newspaper and billboard campaign that will reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast."

As "The Lost City" is a production in which animals of all kinds are to be seen during the course of the action, the advertising campaign is to be conducted along lines of a circus-exploitation drive and will prominently feature the presence of these beasts in the picture. The heralds will be of the circus variety, eleven by fourteen inches, of various colors, with sensational pen sketch drawings. Regular circus banners of waterproof canvas printed in five colors will give the exhibitors the advantage to use the same banner for the entire fifteen episodes. The window cards will be a novelty and instead of the time-worn oblong shape, it will be a cut-out card of the form of an elephant, with sensational reading matter printed in two colors.

Besides the slides, lobby photos, cuts and mats there will be many novelties, it is said, which will appeal to the boys and girls. A pocket mirror with a handsome drawing of a lion's head and a photo of Juanita Hansen between the teeth of the lion will be used as a souvenir to the girls. For the boys there will be buttons and a set of small cards on which will be photographs of the different animals appearing in the serial. Arrangements are also being made with a prominent music publisher to write and dedicate a song to Miss Hansen.

Selznick to Produce Plays for the Legitimate Stage

Not content to be one of the dominant factors in the motion-picture field, Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, president of the newly-organized National Picture Theatres, Inc., and advisory director of the Republic Distributing Corporation, has entered the legimate producing field, it was announced by Mr. Selznick this week.

The first play which will be produced by Lewis J. Selznick is "Bucking the Tiger," a melodramatic novelty by May Tully and Achmed Abdullah, adapted from Mr. Abdullah's well-known novel of the same name. Rehearsals for the forthcoming production are now under way under one of the leading lights of stagecraft, and it is expected that the piece will have its Broadway premiere during the first or second week in January.

World Film Official Urges Plan to Insure Film Deliveries

The following communication, the outgrowth of the theft of a truck load of films, and urging the necessity of insurance, has been received from an official of World Film Corporation:

It seems that this is an opportune time to bring to the exhibitors' attention, the importance, and in fact the necessity of securing insurance on motion picture film while in their possession.

Coming close upon the heels of the stealing of a delivery truck this week containing 42 features, it seems that this subject is one of vital importance, and some action should be taken immediately. Owing to the quick work, however, of detectives, truck and film were located the same day and returned to the various exchanges.

There is a plan under foot whereby exhibitors can secure insurance of this kind from several of the indemnity companies for a small premium, and it seems that a plan of this kind should be worked out to the better interests of all parties concerned.

Fox Host of Britain's Future Ruler

IN historic surroundings the Prince of Wales, on Wednesday, Nov. 19, was entertained as the guest of William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation at the famous old Academy of Music in New York, where his grandfather the late Edward VII, then Prince of Wales, was feted by the city in 1860.

War heroes and persons prominent in social and business life filled the Academy. They cheered the Prince to the echo as he entered the famous structure; they cheered him as he walked into the royal box, escorted by Mr. Fox, they cheered him after he had made a brief speech there; and they cheered him as he left the building.

The best feature of it all was that the Prince enjoyed himself thoroughly. He laughed at and applauded motion pictures and he appeared to take a keen interest in pictures of himself which were screened in a special showing made by Fox news, the animated screen newspaper and magazine.

Sitting in the Academy were eighteen venerable men and women who attended the ball given to the then Prince of Wales in the same building in 1860. They were young folks in those days, and for one afternoon they became "young folks" again. They smiled and waved at the Prince. They laughed at the pictures. They had the time of times.

For more than an hour the Prince watched the special screen showings of humorous pictures arranged at his request.

Mr. Fox occupying a chair at the left of His Royal Highness was called on to answer many questions regarding motion pictures, their past, present and future.

The Academy was tastefully decorated for the occasion by John Zanfft, who with Manager Wuertz, had charge of the program. In the foyer were three large oil paintings of the late Edward VII, King George V and the present Prince of Wales. Flowers and potted plants also were in the foyer. The royal box was draped with the colors of the United States and Great Britain, and the famous three feathers of the Prince of Wales formed an added decoration.

The front part of the "pit" was given over to war heroes, and behind them sat the old folks who attended the 1860 ball in the Academy, and especially invited guests. The royal box was the first on the left, while that on the right was reserved for the family of Mr. Fox. In the other boxes were prominent New Yorkers, city officials and members of the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to distinguished guests.

Crowds began gathering outside the building at noon. Admission was by invitation only. By 1 o'clock a line stretched along Fourteenth street almost to Third avenue, although the reception was set for 2 o'clock. One hundred and fifty policemen established lines in Irving place between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets. This was because the Prince was to enter the Academy from Irving place.

Opposite this entrance was the United States Navy Recruiting Band and ranged on each side, from the doorway to the street, was a detachment of marines from the battleship Pennsylvania, under Lieut. W. V. Jewett.

Within the Academy was the Police Band, a splendid musical organization, which entertained the early arrivals. First

Chairman

Copy of invitation sent out by Arthur James, chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for William Fox upon the occasion of the Prince of Wales' visit to the Academy of Music of the guests of honor to reach the building were sixteen young society women, dressed in hoopskirts—the style that prevailed when the famous ball of 1860 was given. They were chaperoned by Mrs. Julian de S. Trenholm, of No. 15 West Ninth street. The young women were Mrs. J. Theus Munds, Miss Elizabeth Manning, Miss Leila Burden, Miss Lucile Baldwin, Miss Virginia Rice, Miss Helen Trenholm, Miss Mary Lancaster, Miss Grace Hendrick, Miss Deborah Bigelow, Miss Mary Wooley, Miss Zillah Thompson, Miss Dorothea Smith, Miss Rhoda Forbes, Miss Evelyn Payne, Miss Adelaide Kip Rhinelander and Miss Alice Goddard. They formed two lines in the foyer, and there waited to greet the Prince.

Promptly at 2.15 the Prince was driven up to the Irving Place entrance in an automobile. The waiting crowds gave him a great cheer, and as His Royal Highness stepped from the car the Navy Band "unruffled" four ruffles and then played "The King."

With appropriate words Mr. Fox welcomed His Royal Highness and then ushered him to the Royal Box.

Afterward the Prince sat in a chair which was occupied by his grandfather in the Academy in 1860. It was a large chair with arms, upholstered with purple plush, and was in striking contrast to the modern gold chairs in the box.

Mr. Fox was in a chair at the left of His Royal Highness. Then began the showing of pictures, and incidentally it was the first time since his visit to America that the Prince attended a motion picture performance. The showing was preceded by the flashing of the following on the screen

"With the idea that the Academy of Music is an institution dedicated to entertainment, the brief program of pictures for this occasion has been selected from subjects of lighter vein. The comedies shown will be only of modern type, the sort which provoke the millions to laughter throughout the world."

Came then Capt. Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff, a Fox feature which is known throughout the world. The title of this reel was "Sound Your A."

The Prince was heard to say to Mr. Fox "Mutt and Jeff are not strangers to me. I have heard of them many times." As the grotesquely humorous story unwound itself His Royal Highness laughed heartily. Then he was heard to ask Mr. Fox how animated pictures are made. The head of Fox Film Corporation explained the process briefly.

After "Sound Your A" one of the famous Sunshine Comedies was shown. Its title was "A Yellow Dog Catcher."

Next came a special arrangement of Fox News, the animated screen newspaper and magazine, which showed the visit of the Prince to New York.

Mr. Fox and the Prince conversed a great deal while in the Royal Box. When the head of the Fox Film Corporation was asked as to the nature of the conversation, he said that much of it related to motion pictures and that, having acted as host, he did not feel at liberty to relate it.

Details of the entertainment at the Academy were in charge of Arthur James, of Fox Film Corporation. Invitations were sent out to more than 2,200 persons. All guests were selected by Mr. Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, and Mr. James in co-operation with the British mission, of which Col. Norman Thwaites is the director. Colonel Thwaites was enthusiastic over the manner in which the reception was carried out, and he conveyed to Mr. Fox, through Mr. James, the thanks of the Prince and also word of his keen enjoyment of the affair.

One of the features of the reception was the presence of members of Fix Film Corporation who saw service during the war. Among these were Lieutenant-Commander Wells Hawks, late of the United States Navy; Capt. Merritt Crawford, of the Machine Gun Company of the Seventh Regiment; Capt. J. M. Loughborough, who served overseas with the 77th Division; Capt. L. A. Pollock, Lieut. W. H. Cook, Don E. Hancock, who served with the Canadian forces; Eugene O'Brien, who was with the 107th Regiment, and Louis Klopsch, who fougth with the famous old 69th Regiment.

"The Copperhead" Completed

Screen Version is Said to be More Elaborate Than Stage Play; Will Have 400 Scenes in 8 Reels

IT is reported that the filming of "The Copperhead," adapted by Charles Maigne from the play by Augustus Thomas, with Lionel Barrymore in the stellar role, has been completed at the Fifty-sixth Street Studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

It is claimed that at present the picture contains 400 scenes, and when it is released as a Paramount-Artcraft special production it will probably run eight reels. Charles Maigne, who adapted and directed the production, is busy cutting it, after which he will go to California to film "The Fighting Chance," by Robert W. Chambers.

The screen production of "The Copperhead" follows closely the stage play in which Mr. Barrymore made the greatest success of his career when it ran the season of 1917–18 in New York, and he duplicates his brilliant performance in the film version. However, it goes farther back than the stage production, beginning with the period of the Mexican War. The next period is in 1860, then 1862 and the last 1904. The locale is Millville, Ill., and to portray this town realistically a plot of ground was leased for a short time in the vicinity of Elmhurst, L. I., where it is said, through the efforts of the Art and Technical Department, buildings were erected to conform to Millville in 1846 and changed for each period thereafter.

Among the reported interesting features of this picture are said to be the employment of thousands of extras representing Mexican War veterans, Civil War soldiers and villagers, and 200 members of the G. A. R. appearing in a reunion.

Will Film "The Great Divide"

Vitagraph Now Completing Plans to Produce Past Stage Success With Western Scenic Embellishments

Vitagraph has about completed preparations for the production of its screen version of "The Great Divide," one of the most successful stage productions of more than a decade ago. It has the advantage over most stage productions of a few years ago, in that it lends itself to adaptation to the screen with little or no changes from the original text. While the action in the screen version will be of today there are no scenes that will have to be brought up to date by the introduction of modern inventions.

Albert F. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is confident that as a photoplay "The Great Divide" will surpass the stage production. The first two acts in the spoken version of the play were devoted to the Western scenes, but the beauties of the scenery could only be hinted at. The possibilities for wonderful effects by the cameraman are boundless.

"The Great Divide" will be another of the series of screen versions of the famous stage plays which are being produced by Vitagraph. Already it has presented "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree," "The Gamblers" and "The Climbers," all of which met with instant success. Winchell Smith's "The Fortune Hunter," with Earle Williams in the leading role, is nearly completed.

Extensive Territory is Already Sold on "The Lurking Peril"

"The Lurking Peril," a fifteen-episode serial featuring Anne Luther and George Larkin, is now being offered to the independent exchanges by the Arrow Film Corporation. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, reports 68 per cent of the United States territory has already been sold on this serial.

The following sales have been reported: For New York City, State and northern New Jersey, to the Pioneer Film Exchange, 126 West 46th street, New York City; for the New England States, to Arrow Film Exchange, Sam Grand, manager, Boston, Mass.; for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey territory, to Arrow Film Exchange, Ben Amsterdam, manager, Philadelphia; for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, Standard Film Exchange, Cleveland; for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee, to the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta, Ga., and New Orleans, La.; for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, the Liberty Film Exchange, Sam Flax, manager, Washington, D. Electric Teaser Sign May Herald New Selznick Star

Is Myron Selznick about to spring an unknown star on Broadway?

Speculation was aroused and much interest was evoked among the many sidewalk sightseers and Broadway professional folk who stood and watched a handsome and impressive electric sign which had sprung up overnight at the corner of Broadway and 46th Street. It read, "Gloria Dawn" in flickering blue and amber lights, and is coupled with a sign bearing the Selznick mark.

The sign is more than three stories in height, almost square, and looks as if it were built there to stay. Various surmises on the part of picture fans as to the possible meaning of the sign agreed on one thing — they did not know what it was all about but it looked as if Myron Selznick had another surprise to spring on the public.

Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, "Bumping Into Broadway," received a good billing at the New York Strand showing "And Lasca!

Lasca used to ride
On a mouse-gray mustang close to my side,
With blue serape and bright belled spur;
I laughed with joy as I looked at her."

"What Is The Motion Picture Tie-Up"?

How Can It Be Applied? Lee Kugel Tells How

THE unlimited possibilities of creating interest in the attractions that are booked by the exhibitor of motion pictures offer a rich and fertile field to the man who has imagination. In the many years that I have been connected with theatres, plays and stars, realization of the wonderful possibilities of publicity was never so thoroughly brought home to me until I became connected with a moving picture company. If the average publicity man handling a play created a dozen different themes or stunts, he felt that he was more than fortified to carry on an aggressive campaign that would give him priority of claim for the attention of the public of all against many of his competitiors. So rich is the motion picture in suggestions for business-getting ideas that even the prosaic and unemotional individual is bound to stumble on a score or more of valuable methods of putting his particular feature in an advantageous light before the public, and thereby bringing shekels in large quantities to the exhibitors who book the picture. Each day brings forth a new idea that can be converted into a collectible assets by application on his part and the exhibitor and by putting it to use by a common sense method.

Motion picture have made rapid strides since a few years back when short shots were shown of the Empire State Express running at 60 miles an hour until now when great plays and books are being screened in five reels or more. Even as swift has been the change of methods employed by picture house managers from the crude showmanship of those early days than what is being employed now when the finest theatres in the world are being devoted to the exhibition of screen productions. As we have progressed in the bettering of picture productions, in the same ratio we have improved our methods of getting the public up to the box office. We have coined new words and phrases that are applicable to the industry in all its branches. So many new words have been added to the already over-crowded list of parts of speech in connection with motion pictures, a glossary ought to be published to aid the exhibitor, editor and in fact the world at large, in defining the meaning of these new words that are being put to use in order to convey information concerning motion pictures and its uses.

The expression that is cropping up oftener than any other just at this time is "a tie-up." In film terms, especially where it relates to publicity and advertising, a feature that has certain advertising angles through which the manager secures the co-operation of outside interest, to boost the picture — he has made a tie-up. For instance, the picture may have to do with the latest modes in gowns. The tie-up in this instance is with a department store or a dress shop that has these styles for sale. The department store or dress shop makes a window display of these gowns and calls attention of the passerby to their showing of them in a picture in which the star of this particular feature wears a replica of the ones the department store has on display. The manager secures a tie-up by co-operation with the store in advertising the gowns in his theatre or secures from the store a number of these gowns for display in the lobby. It may be that the tie-up is between a music store or any other commercial institution that has something to sell which is related to the picture the theatre is showing. It may be a book; it may be a new style in hats or a thounsand other things. If the theatre manager is resourceful and is persuasive enough he can enlist the powerful influence of his commercial friends to co-operate in making their mutual interests earn a profitable increment.

The trouble with the tie-up in many instances is that the relation between the advertising angle associated with the picture is too remote to the commercial product the store keeper hopes to dispose of. A tie-up is a valuable thing but is no good unless it is perfect. The man you join issue with must get results or the next time you have a chance to tie up with him he will not lend a willing ear.

The Republic Distributing Corporation with whom I am associated is distributing ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild." We have attempted to make a perfect tie-up from as many angles as possible in order to assure the exhibitor of this picture, aid from as many different sources as it is possible to create. We have a song published by Joseph W. Stern & Co. entitled ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild." The exhibitor of the picture has a chance to tie up with department stores, the five and ten cent stores and stationery stores that handle music. This will insure him a window display for one sheets and window cards and the disposition of folders and heralds. As this advertising costs the theatre manager nothing and he gets a display of his advertising material in places where he otherwise could be unable to do so even if he paid money for it, here is a tie up that should work to mutual advantage and that will positively get satisfactory results for all parties concerned. Another tie up with this picture is the phonographic records of the song. Here again are advertising possibilities that even a manager of little experience can handle successfully. In view of the fact that the picture has Scotch settings and that the style this year runs to Scotch plaids, department stores will really consent to a tie-up as they can secure advertising material that they would be unable to get otherwise.

These are just a few instances of the perfect tie-up. On the other hand the tie-up that has to do with merchandise that lack advertising possibilities and are in slight demand, can do the theatre very little good and is a waste of time and energy to put into effect. The tie-up is merely one of the thousand vehicles that the live, wide awake exhibitor can make use of in promoting the success of this theatre.

Texas Guinan Signed to Do a Series for Bulls-Eye

Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, announced last week on his return from Los Angeles that he has signed Texas Guinan to be featured in a series of super-Western photoplays. These features will be released in two reels, beginning in mid-January, through Bulls-Eye exchanges to be announced shortly.

"The pronounced hit scored by Texas Guinan in short Western subjects recently," said Mr. Cohen, "convinces me that exhibitors will have a good line of short subjects available at short periods following the first of Miss Guinan's releases for us. Miss Guinan is happy to be with us, but was very much piqued to think she had to hop a train for the Coast on the day before Thanksgiving Day."

Jay Hunt, who has directed for the principal producers, will direct the new Texas Guinan subjects.

Opinion Solid on American Film

"Six Feet Four" According to All Reports is Being Received Warmly Through Country

HARRY E. GARDNER, of Colorado Springs, Colo., is famed among local movie men for his "hard-boiled" judgment, which has been demonstrated time and again during his successful reign as manager of the live Princess Theater of the Springs. It is therefore easy to understand why E. P. Briggs, Denver representative of the "Flying A," considers his opinion of "Six Feet Four" of sufficient value to call for the glory of cold type.

"Most of the western picture I have seen for the past two years," wrote Mr. Gardner to Mr. Briggs, "have all been along the same lines and about the same general style. It is certainly refreshing to see a western character as presented by William Russell, who contrives to bring out the fine, manly points of the character without having the appearance of over-acting the part. The picture is a great one."

While praise like this goes to prove the sterling quality of this "American production, the most tangible proof of all is found in the flood of contracts that keep pouring in from all parts of the country — long-run contracts from important circuits and first-run houses.

A recent addition to the long list of theater chains that have booked "Six Feet Four" is the great North West Exhibitors' Circuit, comprising more than one hundred theaters. H. B. Wright, manager, is boosting "Six Feet Four" as one of the strongest human-interest dramas he has seen in a long time.

The Stanley people in Philadelphia have booked the film over the famous Stanley Circuit.

Letters from enthusiastic exhibitors who have filmed "Six Feet Four" are filling the files — letters similar in tone to this laconic note from Frank McCarthy, manager, of the Rex and Strand Theaters in Milwaukee:

"Never had a bill I could recommend more highly that I can 'Six Feet Four.' Showed against Mary Pickford in 'The Hoodlum' at the Majestic. Played to two capacity houses the first night. First show had them jammed in the lobby. Will say it's some show — that's all."

Everywhere "Six Feet Four" is said to be bringing the same results. It is not only wonderfully adapted to special methods of exploitation, but it lives up to everybody's expectations. Reports show that progressive exhibitors playing this film are investing heavily along lines that mean bigger box-office returns — advertising extensively, posting an extra quota of strong paper, pulling unusual exploitation stunts, and featuring novelty lobby displays.

Blanche Sweet at The Broadway

Star Seen in "Fighting Cressy," an Adaptation of Bret Harte's Tale "Cressy"; is Well Supported

BLANCHE SWEET, star of "A Woman of Pleasure" and other big productions, came back to Broadway again this week, when "Fighting Cressy," second of her series of starring vehicles under the management of Jesse D. Hampton and distributed by Pathe, was booked at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre. This booking is several weeks in advance of the actual release date, but was granted the Broadway upon the insistent demand of the management, following a private screening of the picture in the projection room of Pathe's New York exchange.

Miss Sweet is reported to be surrounded in the second of her Hampton feature by a fine supporting cast, among whom are numbered Russel Simpson, as Hiram McKinstry; Edward Peil, as John Ford; Pell Trenton, as Joe Masters; Antrim Short, as Seth Davis; Frank Lanning, as Old Man Harrison; Billie Bennet, as Mrs. Dabney, and Georgie Stone, as Georgie.

"Cressy" is probably the best known of Bret Harte's famous stories of the West, dealing with the days when men "worked hard and played harder, lived fast and died faster." Jesse D. Hampton and Director Thornby were fortunate in obtaining the exact atmosphere of Harte's story, going right into the heart of "Toulumne County," California, where the author obtained inspiration for "Fighting Cressy."

Third Week For Realart Feature in Capital; Red Cross Tie-Up

"Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, began its third successful week in Washington with a tie-up in the local Red Cross drive. Tom Moore arranged for a special performance of "Soldiers of Fortune" for the benefit of the Washington Red Cross, and in return for Mr. Moore's courtesy, the local organization included mention of Realart's photoplay in all of its propaganda material. For a week in advance of the special afternoon showing there were daily news stories in all newspapers playing up the "Soldiers of Fortune" benefit.

The regular theatre lobby displays, with colored stills, were placed prominently in every hotel of the city, including the larger ones, such as the Raleigh, Willard and New Washington. Wherever there was a Red Cross booth, "Soldiers of Fortune" was brought to public attention.

The most direct form of advertisement which the Moore staff devised, was a broadside, called "The Washington News" made up in the form of the usual front page of a daily newspaper. "The Washington News" was distributed throughout the city by Boy Scouts and a detachment of volunteers from the local Woman's Transport Corps.

It contained interesting information about Richard Harding Davis, author of the novel from which the picture was adapted, and carried a portion of the narrative of Allan Dwan's romantic picture story.

All Set on Goldwyn Ad Campaign

Real Cooperation to Theatre Manager is the Plan in Bringing His House to Public Attention

EVERYTHING is set for Goldwyn's great national newspaper advertising campaign. The first gun will be fired on Monday, December 1st, with display advertisements appearing in many of the country's leading newspapers. Thereafter Goldwyn copy will be kept constantly before the eyes of millions of readers.

Details concerning Goldwyn's campaign in the most important daily publications in the principal cities and towns in all parts of America are particularly interesting. They reveal how far sound business methods have come to be applied to the motion picture industry, which too frequently heretofore has been haphazard in its advertising.

Genuine "service" advertising that will benefit every exhibitor showing Goldwyn Pictures, is the objective of the campaign, planned and executed by the Seaman Advertising Agency, Inc., and Ralph Block, director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn. The plan, as it is being placed in operation, is made feasible through the co-operation of Goldwyn's twenty-two press and service representatives located in the various exchanges. These men will play an important part in the actual placing of the advertisements and in tieing them up with local exhibitors.

Every exchange is supplied with a complete set of the electros prepared for all Goldwyn Pictures, and with a list of the newspapers selected by Goldwyn to carry to copy that in each instance advertises a Goldwyn star, a Goldwyn Picture and leaves space for the insertion of the name of the theatre at which the film will be shown and the date of the presentation.

When a production is booked in a certain town, the newspaper advertising will be launched at that time and in a way that will bring the greatest immediate benefit to the exhibitor showing the picture. Instead of confining the advertising to one paper that can be expected to reach only a part of the community, every important daily in that section will carry the display copy, thereby giving the theatre, as well as the picture, a prominence that is worth thousands of dollars to the exhibitor.

The Goldwyn plan, that is unique and marks an important step forward in giving the theatre manager real co-operation in bringing his house to the attention of the public, has the great advantage of timeliness. The combined circulation of the newspapers on the list to carry the copy during coming months, assures a reading public of over thirty million, and this audience will be told just where and when the Goldwyn Pictures being advertised may be seen. This is direct advertising in which there is no wasted appeal.

Charles Irving Fletcher has prepared distinctive copy, bringing out the salient points of each Goldwyn picture in a manner that will catch the attention and arouse the interest of the average newspaper reader. The text and tone of the advertisements is in keeping with the aim of the Goldwyn Corporation to establish its product as typifying the highest point in artistic photoplay production.

"Eyes of Youth" at the Rivoli

Clara Kimball Young Picture First Feature at Rivoli After Zukor's Acquisition of Two Big Houses

EQUITY Pictures Corporation announces the metropolitan premiere at the Rivoli Theatre, November 30, of Clara Kimball Young in Max Marcin's famous stage success "Eyes of Youth," made under the executive direction of Harry Garson and personally directed by Albert Parker. The engagement of Miss Young at the Rivoli is of special import in that "Eyes of Youth," is the first production to be put in at either the Rialto or Rivoli Theatres, since these houses were taken over by the Zukor interests.

Hugo Reisenfeld will personally supervise the decorations of the house. A prologue of magic charm and an elaborate musical score have been rehearsed to elaborate the presentation, it is stated.

It is reported by Equity Pictures that some episodes feasible for stage presentation have been incorporated in the picture. Four months were consumed in the making of this production, the report states, "at a cost exceeding $250,000." No detail was overlooked, in production, photography, or assembling of cast to make the picture a top-notch production. Some of the sets in the picture are described as being 180 feet long by 107 feet wide, full draped; and more than 12,000 bricks are reported to have been used in one set—a reproduction of the famous Pope home in San Francisco.

The cast which Harry Garson assembled in support of Miss Young includes such names as Vincent Serrano, Gareth Hughes, Edmund Lowe, William Courtleigh, Milton Sills, Sam Sothern, Pauline Starke and Edward Kimball.

Realart Publicity Man Leaves to Lend Aid in National Campaign

Hugh Carter Harvey, the commercial jack of all trades, who, however, regards the theatrical profession as his first love, has severed his connection with the Realart Pictures Corporation.

His latest venture is that of sales management. The National Tuberculosis Association, which annually sponsors the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals, has found in him an entirely able assistant sales manager. Some vague idea of the magnitude of his task may be gathered from the fact that more than a billion seals will be sold during the first ten days of December.

In order to insure the success of the sale, it has been necessary to build up the greatest volunteer sales force possible.

Baltimore Producing Co. Starts

City Begins to Feel it is Drawing Recognition as a Producing Center; Its Advantages

BALTIMORE is slowly but surely progressing toward becoming a center for the manufacturing of motion pictures. Not so very long ago a company for making photoplays was formed by Miss Katherine Cavanaugh in that city and now the Eagle Film Corporation has commenced operations. The company is capitalized for $20,000 of which no stock is for sale. It has a studio located at 211 West Saratoga street and it plans to produce one and two-reel comedies.

The director of the new concern, Sam Phillips, was at one time with the Universal and Mirror Film companies and assisted in the direction of several productions in which Nat Goodwin took part. The company has already completed one picture which will soon be placed on the market. A studio in Catonsville, a suburb of Baltimore, is contemplated in the near future.

The officers of the new company are John Waldeck, treasurer, and Raymond Hechinger, secretary.

Despite the fact that Baltimore and its environs possesses in abundance some of the most striking natural scenery in the East and has also a reputation for its beautiful women, film producers have been a long time awakening to its possibilities. Several small companies started operating there but these either through poor management or lack of capital failed.

The first of the later venturers in the moving picture field in Baltimore, however, was Miss Cavanaugh who not only organized a company of photoplay actors, but is also at present conducting a school for the development of moving picture players. The first photoplay to be produced by Miss Cavanaugh's Company was exhibited at Albaugh's Theater in Baltimore on last week and met with highly favorable comment. The film was a three-reel comedy called "Love's Crossroads," and was made with all local talent.

War Film Continues Successes

W. H. Productions Says New York and Wisconsin Reports on "The Lost Battalion" Highly Favorable

ACCORDING to a report from W. H. Productions Company the following statements of approval for the picture, "The Lost Battalion," have been received from the Gardiner Syndicate which controls the rights to this production for New York State:

"It beats the record of 'Mickey,' 'The Birth of a Race,' 'The Miracle Man' and 'Yankee Doodle in Berlin' with the Mack Sennett Girls in person."

"I have enough confidence in it that if you care to sell me the rights to some more of the eastern territory still open I will gladly purchase same and give it the biggest runs any picture has ever received."

"It made such an impression on the manager of the theatre in Lockport where we opened yesterday that he called at my office this morning and arranged for a return date and gave me a guarantee on same that is considerable over the guarantee that I got in the town on Yankee Doodle and the bathing girls, or any others. I expect to get guarantees in every city and town of an even larger amount."

From the Wisconsin Film Corporation, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, an excellent report is received, according to W. H. Productions Company officials.

American's President Goes to Coast to Supervise Diva's Production

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., has left Chicago for a visit to the Company's studios in Santa Barbara, where he will remain until the first of the year. The purpose of his trip is to give personal supervision to Mme. Marguerita Sylva's initial production of the "Flying A," which, it is announced, will be filmed under the direction of Rupert Julian, widely known as the director of "The Beast of Berlin" and other big photoplays. After this picture is completed Mme. Sylva will resume her professional tour, returning to Santa Barbara in March to make another feature for the American.

Mr. Hutchinson is highly enthusiastic over the screen possibilities of both the famous diva and the popular vehicle which has been chosen for her first picture and before leaving Chicago said, "Mme Sylva will screen wonderfully, and will soon be as great an idol of the silent stage as she already is of the concert and operatic stages."

General Manager R. R. Nehls and Studio Manager A. L. Thompson have personally conducted a scouting tour of Los Angeles and San Francisco, in search of exactly the types of players to interpret the striking characters of the original story.

Kerrigan in "Lord Loves the Irish" at Hodkinson Exchanges

While the majority of big screen stars and their producers are engaged in discoursing on "bigger and better pictures," J. Warren Kerrigan goes on his merry way making them for W. W. Hodkinson distribution. Turning out successful Robert Brunton productions has become a habit with the artist. First it was "A White Man's Chance," then came "The Joyous Liar," to prove that his initial Brunton production was no flash-in-the-pan, and now it's "The Lord Loves the Irish."

Prints of "The Lord Loves the Irish" have been shipped to all Hodkinson exchanges where simultaneous trade showings will be held two weeks before its release date, December 14th.

Pushing "The Beloved Cheater"

National Campaign For the Lew Cody Feature Includes Plan Book, Press Ads, Song Publication, Etc.

AS the opening gun of the advertising campaign on "The Beloved Cheater," Lew Cody's first starring vehicle, Robertson-Cole have completed a plan book which prominent exhibitors are said to have acclaimed as being the most complete of its kind and as offering the theatre "the most comprehensive and practical service in featuring and presenting the picture."

The Plan Book is compiled with the expectation that exhibitors will plan their campaigns commensurate with the pulling power of the picture. It contains several pages devoted to exhibitor exploitation. This section contains everything of practical value from advance teasers to the presentation of the picture in the theatre, it is said. There is ample press and publicity material together with several novelties in the way of advertising tie-ups and business getting letters and post cards, according to the Robertson-Cole announcement.

A special effort was made, it is asserted, to secure an unusual line of striking ads and cuts; and mats of these and of scenes illustrating the high lights of "The Beloved Cheater" will be available at all Robertson-Cole Exchanges.

Numerous ways to dress the lobby, designs for special lobby-posters, display photos, a specially compiled "trailer," attractive slides, and a herald in two colors are also features of the campaign. A special edition of a high-grade booklet, beautifully illustrated, according to reports, and full of pithy epigrams, called "Lew Cody's Lexicon of Love," is also mentioned in the Robertson-Cole announcement.

The second gun in this campaign will be in the form of national advertising in various magazines and periodicals. Seeing the possibilities that lay in the title "The Beloved Cheater," L. Wolf Gilbert and Edna Williams have seized upon it as the theme of one of their song hits which they have called "That Beloved Cheater of Mine." According to reports, it will soon be on all music stands and should prove an effective aid in boosting the Lew Cody picture.

United Makes Extensive Plans

Photodramas Starring Dustin Farnum and Florence Reed and Short-Reel Subjects are Being Arranged

THE United Picture Theatres of America are now said to be putting extensive production plans into active operation. The company has made arrangements to film a number of photodramas of the highest grade; and in addition, contracts have been made whereby two series of two-reel comedies will be released by them.

During President J. A. Berst's recent trip to the Coast, details of many new productions were gone over, it is said. With the renewal of Dustin Farnum's United contract, several of the picture dramas in which he will appear, have been chosen, casts selected and advance details for the filming made. Now that Mr. Farnum has completed "The Corsican Brothers," he will shortly begin work on the making of scenes for "Square Shootin' Dan," which he will be seen in a typical Western role of the two-fisted, fighting type that he has made famous on stage and screen.

Florence Reed, United's popular emotional star, has completed her next release, "The Eternal Mother," and this feature will soon be shown to the public in theatres served by United. Miss Reed will soon return to New York from her road tour and will not resume her place on the speaking stage until at least two feature pictures have been finished, it is reported. Already scenes in which Miss Reed does not appear, have been "shot" for the first picture she is to make; and all will be in readiness for her to begin work without delay when she gets to New York.

To supply their theatres with good short real subjects, President J. A. Berst recently contracted to release the Cuckoo Comedies and two-reelers in which Cissy Fitzgerald is starred. Both of these comedy series are said to be of the highest grade in their laugh-provoking qualities and should supply United exhibitors with just what they have been looking for.

Critics Boost "Piccadilly Jim"

Owen Moore's First Selznick Picture is Warmly Received at Private Showing

ALL the natural wit and humor possessed by happy-go-lucky Owen Moore and the added ingenuity of screen craftsmanship is solidly injected into "Piccadilly Jim," Moore's first picture under the Selznick banner, which was privately shown to press reviewers and several leading exhibitors last week.

Owen Moore as "Piccadilly Jim," the devil-may-care hero in P. G. Wodehouse's famous Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, returns to his American public with a freshness and determination that is as conspicuous as it is entertaining.

Director Wesley Ruggles and Cameraman George Peters have made sure that "Piccadilly Jim" will surprise and delight the most critical of picture patrons and to make their efforts all the more convincing many unusual and noteworthy angles in settings and photograph have been effected.

Second only to the charm of the story and the natural "acting" of Owen Moore are the many ingenious "shots" which take audiences on New York's elevated trains, where drama mingles with comedy as Owen Moore devours peanuts and tosses their skeletons onto the lap of the well-known and familiar "banker," who long ago forgot why peanuts were ever born.

Short shots and long shots of New York's great white way at the mystic hour of midnight lend an infinite charm to the general photography, while several cameras must have been loaded on buckboards to shoot several novelty scenes, the nature of which have never before been seen even on the screen.

"Piccadilly Jim" is described as a typical English-American play in which the characters are human and go through adventures ordinarily experienced by real human beings. Comedy runs riot throughout the five acts. Owen Moore as the town rounder who becomes implicated in a deep, dark plot to kidnap "Fatty" Arbuckle, Jr.," for the sole purpose of pleasing the girl he loves and thus terminating a wild and wooly career as a rounder par excellence, adds new laurels to his already established fame.

Zena Keefe, Selznick's 1920 star, is seen in the role of Anne Chester, who detests "Jimmie Crocker of gay London," but falls in love with this self-same young man when he journeys to America to forget wine, women and song of his native land.

"Piccadilly Jim" is set for early release through Select Picture Corporation.

"Erstwhile Susan" Wins Favor

Communications From Exhibitors Are One in Acclaiming Picture and in Predicting Success of the Star

REALART reports that after showing one Realart picture, Constance Binney's "Erstwhile Susan," in his big Oklahoma Theatre, Glenn Condon, the Tulsa exhibitor, has signed up for an entire year's program of Realart productions at an advance in rental of $50 over a previous contract for the first three Realart pictures.

The Realart report further announces that Constance Binney's picture has drawn splendid tributes from many other exhibitors who have shown it during the past week. The consensus of exhibitor opinion seems to be that "Erstwhile Susan" is particularly fitting vehicle for the intial Realart presentation of this young actress, and that given more of such appealing stories to interpret, the star's continued popularity is assured.

Four typical expressions of approbation, selected from the many that have been received at the Realart offices, are set forth as samples of the commendation with which the feature has been received. Max Stern, proprietor of the Majestic Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "Constance Binney in 'Erstwhile Susan' just opened a week's engagement at the Majestic and was received with enthusiasm. Given the proper vehicles we predict a brilliant screen career for Constance Binney."

O. A. Potter of the Columbia Amusement Company, Erie, Pa., wired: "Was much pleased with 'Erstwhile Susan.' Patrons also expressed their satisfaction when leaving theatre. Miss Binney's work very commendable." George Mayne of the American Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, says: "Constance Binney great. My people fell in love with her." From J. W. Trunk of the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, comes the following: "'Erstwhile Susan' more than went over. Everybody pleased. Many came twice."

Special Campaign is Planned to Push "The Corsican Brothers"

It is stated that a special exploitation and advertising campaign will be carried out by United Picture Theatres of America on "The Corsican Brothers." Plans are stated to be now under way by which the active co-operation of book stores, publishers and public libraries will be obtained in giving publicity to the picture in various ways.

For the book stores, detailed instructions for window trimming will be available. Suggestions as to the manner in which the works of Dumas can be displayed and the display attractively illustrated with stills from the picture and star photographs are to be furnished exhibitors. Plans and layouts for interior displays will also be taken up.

The way in which the public libraries can be induced to lend their aid in advertising this picture are being carefully worked out according to reports. Further co-operation methods having to do with literary societies, reading clubs, amateur dramatic societies and other like organization will be fully explained to exhibitors who book the picture.

Pershing Views "Undercurrent"

Many Notables Witness Premier of Guy Empey's Select Special at Capitol Theatre

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING was a guest of honor at the first New York showing of the Select special "The Undercurrent" at the Capitol Theatre, November 23. The picture is one of the most important of the Select special releases made from the story by Guy Empey, the famous soldier author, and featuring Empey himself in the leading role, supported by Florence Evelyn Martin.

The occasion of the performance at the Capitol was the visit to New York of the International Trades Conference, representing France, Great Britain, Italy, Belgium and the United States.

More than two hundred notables in military, naval, financial and diplomatic circles were present.

The all-star cast which supports Mr. Empey in "The Undercurrent" includes Florence Evelyn Martin, Marguerite Courtot, Betty Blythe, Sally Crute, Eugene Strong, Charles A. Stevenson and William Dunn. "The Undercurrent" was written in story form by Mr. Empey, done into a scenario by William Addison Lathrop, directed by Wilfrid North and photographed by Jack Brown.

The initial presentation of the picture before the two hundred members and delegates of the International Trades Conference was managed by Edward J. Bowes, vice-president and managing director of the Capitol Theatre, and Ben H. Atwell, head of the Capitol publicity department.

SELECTION of vehicles and directors for the Screen Classics, Inc., stars at the Metro Studios in Hollywood for the third round of special productions has been made. Camera work on six features comprising the second round of the "fewer and better" pictures is rapidly nearing completion.

The six productions which were begun at the same time in September will be finished together. They will be ready for release within a short time. "The Best of Luck," a picturization of the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh, Henry Hamilton and Arthur Collins, now appears as probably the first release. Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lilie Leslie and Frederic Malatesta are featured in this production with an all-star cast.

The order of release of the other productions is uncertain, but it is likely that "Should A Woman Tell?", an original melodrama by Finis Fox, in which Alice Lake is featured for the first time with a notable cast including Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier, will be the choice. This production was directed by John Ince.

The other big features of the second round include Viola Dana in "The Willow Tree," directed by Henry Otto in a screen version of the Japanese fantasy by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes which was produced on the stage by Cohan and Harris. May Allison will be seen in "The Walk-Offs," an adaptation of the Morosco stage comedy of high social life by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. Herbert Blache directed. Bert Lytell, who began work a short time after the other companies had got under way, will be presented in "The Right of Way," from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the Canadian Northwest. He was directed by Jack Dillon.

May Allison will face the biggest opportunity of her career in assuming the role of Vashti, the miracle girl in "Judah," a picturization of Arthur Henry Jones' play.

A notable feature of the new program will be the appearance of Emma Dunn for the first time on the screen in the part of Angie in "Old Lady 31," the character she portrayed with such success on the stage.

Viola Dana's new play will be "Eliza Comes to Stay," a successful comedy by the English playwright, H. V. Esmond. Henry Otto will direct Miss Dana in this production. For the second big Drury Lane melodrama of the five purchased by Metro, "The Hope," Herbert Blache who directed May Allison in "The Walk-Offs" has been selected by Director General Karger.

Alice Lake will again have an opportunity to display her dramatic powers. Her vehicle will be "Shore Acres," the famous old rural melodrama by James Herne, which for years in regular companies and in stock was one of the most popular plays which the American stage has produced in the last fifty years.

The securing of more office room was necessitated by the rapid growth of the company, which is said to be handling an unprecedented volume of business with the productions of Goldwyn stars, the Rex Beach Pictures, and those of the Eminent Authors. British Booking System Faulty

Howells Says English Book Films a Year Ahead and Thus Lose Money, Publicity and Timely Appeal

ACCORDING to David P. Howells who has just returned from England, one of the most serious problems confronting the British film man there is the present release date system. Under present conditions all picture theatres are booked with pictures for a period of twelve to eighteen months ahead. Under this system enormous sums of money are required to finance a production from the time of its completion to its exhibition, which usually takes from a year to a year and a half. In the second place, by this arrangement the pictures have to be advertised twice and called to the notice of the people twice; once, at the time of the trade shows, and then again at the time it begins to appear in the theatres. In addition much valuable free press notices given by the newspapers when the pictures are finished or are presented in the trade show is lost on the public by the time the pictures are released by the exhibitors. The third great disadvantage of this system of release is that all pictures depending on timeliness as their chief asset become worthless. A fourth drawback is said to be that costumes worn in the pictures are often out of date when the pictures are held so long before being released.

"All manner of wild remedies have been suggested," said Mr. Howells, "among them being a prohibition of motion picture imports for a period of six months or a year. This solution would probably meet with great favor in governmental and financial circles as it would not only cure the releasing difficulty but would also curtail in a measure British imports thereby tending to improve the money exchange with the United States and would do much to encourage British productions.

Such a solution, however, would only be temporary, as the foreign producers would dump their productions on the British market as soon as the prohibition on the British market were lifted and the resulting condition would probably be worse than now. It occurs to me that a more sensible solution would be for each exhibitor who now changes his program only once a week to change it twice, and that each exhibitor who now changes his program twice a week should change it three or four times.

"If such a course were decided upon, the exhibitors and the renters should be willing to meet half way as to payment. For instance, the one program-a-week exhibitor should under the new conditions be willing to pay for a program he runs only half a week 75 per cent. of his former rental for the entire week, and the film renter should be willing to accept such a discount of 25 per cent. The experiment would not injure either party but work to the common good, as within six months the release dates could be brought to within four months of the trade showings of the pictures, and the permanent cure would thus be effected.

Expect Much of "The Lost City"

Spectators Are Favorably Impressed by Private Showing and Extensive Distribution Rights Are Sold

IT is claimed that Colonel Selig's wild animal serial, "THE LOST CITY," in which Juanita Hansen is being starred, will prove very popular among the State-Right buyers and exhibitors throughout the country. This assertion is based in part on the many long-distance telephone calls and wires that, it is said, are being received at the Warner Brothers' offices, where the American and Canadian rights are for sale.

Sam Grant, who represents the Arrow Film Corporation for the New England States, came to terms with Harry Warner on the spot, after a private showing of the picture, and they immediately went to the Warner offices where contracts were signed for the distribution rights for the seven New England States. Harry Charnas, representing the Standard Film Service Company, contracted for the distribution rights for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

Mr. A. F. Brentlinger, who operates a chain of theatres in the State of Indiana, was one of those present at a private showing of the first three episodes, and like the rest of the spectators, was very enthusiastic. Mr. Brentlinger said he thought so well of "THE LOST CITY" that he would book it for three days each in his Liberty Theatre of Terre Haute, the Orpheum Theatre of Fort Wayne, and the Murrayette of Richmond. In view of the fact that Mr. Brentlinger has always been opposed to serials and has never allowed any to be run in his theatres, speaks very well of "The Lost City."

Arline Pretty Serial Completed

"A Woman in Grey" said to be Sensation in the Way of Chapter Plays; Story by the Williamsons

A MUCH looked for event in the annals of motion picture serials is the announcement by George H. Wiley, president of the Serico Producing Corporation, of the completion of "A Woman in Grey" starring Arline Pretty and directed by James Vincent.

"A Woman in Grey," based on C. N. and A. M. Williamson's famous mystery story of the same name, is said to be a decided forward step toward the advancement of this particular form of screen entertainment inasmuch as that it is entirely different, both in plot and production, from the usual stereotyped serials of the past.

When the picture rights of "A Woman in Grey" were acquired, Mr. Wiley announced that he would venture into a new field in transferring the works of noted authors to the screen in serial form. This is said to be the first time such an experiment was ever tried, and those who have viewed the finished production with its baffling mystery, its masterful staging, its finished acting and hair-raising thrills surrounded by massive feature settings, are unanimous in declaring that it reaches a pinnacle high as serials go.

From the offices of the Export and Import Film Company, who have purchased the foreign rights of "A Woman in Grey." comes word that the serial is a veritable sensation.

Arline Pretty, who plays the part of the "Woman in Grey," is well known for her serial work, having played the heroine in the Vitagraph serial "The Secret Kingdom" and the Pathe serial "The Hidden Hand." Supporting Miss Pretty is Henry G. Sell, former leading man for Pearl White in a number of her Pathe serials. The other principals of the cast are Fred Jones, Margaret Fielding, James Heenan, Ann Brody and Walter Chapin.

James Vincent, well remembered for his masterful production of "The Spirit of Lafayette," the Pathe serial "The Hidden Hand" and numerous Fox Special Productions, directed "A Woman in Grey" while Walter Richard Hall is responsible for the screen version.

Mayer Planning Wide Publicity

"In Old Kentucky" Will be Supported by Strong Campaign and Novelty Stunts, Says Mayer Report

ACCORDING to the reports from the office of Louis B. Mayer Productions Company, the feature "In Old Kentucky" is to be heralded by an extraordinary publicity campaign, the details of which are now being worked out by the Mayer publicity forces preparatory to the initial showing of the picture which it is said will take place toward the end of December. Louis B. Mayer, at present in the West, is said to be keeping in constant touch with the New York offices and to be following intently the various moves of the publicity unit in its campaign to exploit the forthcoming production.

Novelty stunts of considerable variety and ingenuity are said to be under consideration. Following are some of the stunts that the organization proposes to make use of, according to the reports received from the Louis B. Mayer Productions offices. "Accompanying the film is to be a massive and spectacular stage effect of racing horses to visualize the exciting race-track scene which is one of the punches of the film. Jockeys on fast horses will run on specially constructed stage treadmills—a stage novelty providing wonderful advertising possibilities. This will be used as an interlude toward the middle of the picture. For the opening another elaborate stage setting will introduce a Kentucky cabin in mountaineer style with all the quaintness and romance which the atmosphere of the picture conveys."

Another horse stunt will be the use of Night Riders garbed in the mystic robes of the Kentucky mountain vigilantes. By day they will parade silently through the streets, the white-hooded and white-shrouded horses going two by two, mountineers' rifles over the riders' knees. By night the same men will ride wildly through the darkened streets bearing flaming torches. Such stunts as these are good for front page publicity in every newspaper.

Some of the other stunts reported by the Mayer offices are the appearance of a girl dressed in the costume of the Kentucky mountaineer womenfolk in the principal streets of the place where the picture is being shown, bearing a placard announcing the photoplay; a moonshine distillery outfit in full operation if the Federal authorities permit the display on the substitution of sawdust for the customary corn meal; and a specially arranged song hit entitled "In Old Kentucky," which is said to have been composed by Anita Stewart and which is to be handled by the Watterson, Berlin and Snyder publishers to exploit the picture, according to the advises received.

Prominent Personages Assemble to Pay Tribute to Late Author and to Witness Filming of his Successful Story, "Soldiers of Fortune"

ONE of the most memorable events, one that will never be forgotten, at least by friends of the late Richard Harding Davis, occurred at the Capitol Theatre on Saturday, November 22.

The distinguished audience, among whom were 5,500 boy scouts and marines, assembled to honor the late author and to witness the film story of one of his greatest novels, "Soldiers of Fortune," produced by Realart Pictures Corporation and directed by Allan Dwan.

And mention must be made here of the intense interest and excitement portrayed by the audience, as they followed reel after reel of this well-constructed logical story, the picture receiving big applause in the battle scenes, especially at the entrance of Uncle Sam's sailors who save the day.

Charles Dana Gibson the well-known artist delivered an eulogy of Mr. Davis, revealing many incidents in his life.

"Richard Harding Davis was a true American, he said and one that held his country above all else. What he wrote will live. He was a man of the type of Theodore Roosevelt. There was no Bolshevism in his time."

He then introduced little four-year-old Hope Harding Davis and lifting her in his arms gave three rousing cheers with the assistance of the audience. And as the band played a march dedicated to her by Arthur Pryor, she stood at attention. It was a very touching scene.

Among those present were Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, Henry Wise Wood of the National Security League; Belvin W. Maynard, the flying parson; Mrs. Bessie McCoy Davis, little Hope Davis and many men and women of affairs who knew the author in life and around whom he wove so many of his stories. There were also 5,500 boy scouts and marines present.

Brentwood Particular on Titles

President Haynes Explains Importance Ascribed by His Concern to Proper Titling of Film

THE Brentwood management attaches unusual importance to the main titles of the pictures which they release through Robertson-Cole. Speaking of this matter recently, to an official of the Robertson-Cole Company, L. C. Haynes, Brentwood's president, said that it was not only with a view to box-office results that this care was used, but that his corporation tried wherever possible to secure for its pictures titles which might suggest the helpful and constructive aims of the company.

"We are shortly sending forward," said Mr. Haynes, "prints and negatives of a picture in which Claude H. Mitchell has directed ZaSu Pitts, Henry Woodward, Edwin Stevens, Hughie Mack, Frank Hayes and a strong supporting cast. The story which was picturized having ZaSu Pitts' inimitable quality of pathetic humor in mind, was that of a girl of the most sincere unselfishness who did not believe in sitting with folded hands and submitting to harsh conditions, but rather that "Where there's a will there's a way," and in consequence of her pluck and resource won over almost insuperable difficulties.

"Where There's a Will There's a Way" does not only reflect the theme of the story of this picture, but is also a most helpful and practical motto for the human family to keep before it. It is a motto which lends itself to optimism and to publicity. And since it seemed to fit the situation all the way around we chose, "Where There's a Will" as the title for this picture, feeling that the saying is too well known to need entire quotation and that the first four words would fully carry the sense.

"Again in the picture which Henry Kolker is directing with Mahon Hamilton and Betty Blythe in the leading parts, supported by an unusually strong cast, the story deals with the influence upon the third generation of a motto adopted by the founder of the family fifty or sixty years before. This motto reads in Latin, 'In negotiis probus. Fidelis in famliam' which means, "Probity in business, fidelity to family." The story firmly establishes the substantial character of the founder of what has now become one of the wealthiest of New York families.

"We have chosen for this picture the title, 'The Third Generation,' believing this to give scope to the imagination of picture goers and to suggest to them what we all know to be a fact that it is not really until the third generation that the real American is established, and the ideals and solid strength which he may have drawn from his alien ancestors shaken down and adapted to his environment in this country."

Triangle Releases Re-Issues

"The Flame of the Yukon," "Betty of Greystone," "The Clodhopper" Are Leading List, Beginning Nov. 23

THREE of the best productions made by Triangle, "The Flame of the Yukon" with Dorothy Dalton, "Betty of Greystone" with Dorothy Gish and "The Clodhopper" with Charles Ray, have been announced for release through the Keystone Triangle Exchanges beginning November 23rd. These productions have been chosen to head the list of recreated features which Triangle will release, one every third week, on account of the diversified character of the stories and stars. All the productions have been recreated. The stories have been recut and retitled and new art titles made by well known illustrators have been inserted, it is said.

The three stories differ as widely in theme as they do in the character of the stars. Dorothy Dalton plays the stellar role in "The Flame of the Yukon," said to be Monte M. Katterjohn's greatest story of the frozen north during the days of the gold rush when life was cheap and honor unknown. The production was supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

"Betty of Greystone" starring Dorothy Gish and to be released December 14th, was directed by Alan Dwan and produced under the personal supervision of D. W. Griffith. In "Betty of Greystone," it is said, Dorothy Gish has a story that combines tense situations with ample opportunities to display her abilities as a comedienne which have made her so popular with the moving picture public. Miss Gish's supporting cast, besides the popular Owen Moore, contains such names as George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Norman Selby (Kid McCoy).

"The Clodhopper" is said by some critics to show Charles Ray at his best. This is also a Thomas H. Ince production and will be released January 4th. The story was written by Monte M. Katterjohn.

It is announced that campaign books touching upon every possible angle of exploitation for these productions are being issued, and Triangle is lending exhibitors, who realize the box office value of these three successes, every means to make them record breakers for their theatres.

According to a report from the Pa Exchange, many of the members of trade have been writing Hobart He for a synopsis of his new feature, "S Deep," to be released soon by Pathe. is said that many of these requests insi ated the existence of some groundless m tery that seems to be afloat regarding photoplay. A pertinent statement fr Mr. Henley follows:

"There is no mystery surrounding 'S Deep.' The production is another of M Sidney Drew's adaptations from a story Beulah Poynter and though quite a diffi ent tale in its development, will be alc the lines of 'The Gay Old Dog' from human standpoint. In developing the p duction, I have simply worked out plans in very much the same method used in my other features. I do not co sider discussing picture subjects so far plot is concerned a necessity until the p duction is on the market, but there nothing about 'Skin Deep' that savors mystery."

Large Press-Book for "Romany"

World Film Reports That Plan Book With 16 Pages of Practical Suggestions is Now Available

EVERYTHING is said to be set for the distribution of ROMANY, "Where Love Runs Wild," by the World Film Corporation. According to reports, the advertising material includes a 24-sheet stand in six colors; six sheets, three sheets, one sheet, advance ones, half sheets, heralds and other accessories. There is a plan book which is described by the World report as "the last word in exploitation," without necessitating the spending of enormous sums of money to properly place the merits of the picture before the public.

The scheme of the plan book is reported to be based on the elemental principles of showmanship, taking for example the alert, wide-awake, up-to-date methods employed and utilized to successful advantage in promoting interest in a traveling attraction of similar character to ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild." The plan book has 16 pages. Of stunts there are many, and all are practical, efficacious and inexpensive, sample ads in which white space predominates over black ink, thus giving a conspicuosity highly desired by the men who pay the bills. The sample press notices have the salient features of a special story and add interest to reading notices. The intent of these newspaper notices is to create a desire on the part of the public to go and see the picture influenced thereby from reading the copy submitted for newspaper work.

As this press book states, "the lobby is to the theatre what the show window is to a store," and helpful suggestions are given to the theatre owner to make his lobby as attractive as possible in order to get the public up to the box-office window. These suggestions are said to be as applicable to a small town as they are to a metropolitan city and the mediums employed in making the lobby attractive are of such a character that no great burden is imposed on the theatre owner in fixing up his "show windows."

The two sets of music cues are described as thoroughly atmospheric and the music libraries supplied the ROMANY music that admirably fits into the scheme of presentation. A number of practical co-operative plans for the exploitation of ROMANY have been formulated in which large commercial institutions have agreed to assist the local exhibitors in making this picture a big go, according to reports.

MAY of 1919 saw the commencement of the work of erecting the new studios and allied structures of the Swedish Biograph Company, and it is hoped that on the first of January, 1920, the buildings will be ready for occupation. The establishment is situated at Rasunda, a pretty suburb of Stockholm and is said to have an area of between 700,000 to 800,000 square feet with a diversity of surface — level ground, woodland and hill.

There are two studios — a large one and a smaller building. The large studio is of considerable dimensions, 454 x 284 feet, while the other is 340 x 204 feet. Both are 26 feet high. They have been constructed of iron and reinforced concrete in accordance with the newest principles in this method of building, and are reported to be provided with the most up-to-date arrangements that are to be had; such as, rotary scenes, traverses for the mounting of the lighting apparatus, etc. The smaller studio is also provided with dressing-rooms and with a storage room for the accessories.

The laboratory is a perfectly independent building of 3 floors, built of brick with fire-proof floorings and with inside walls of trussit and fire-proof material. Paternoster lifts go through the whole building and permit of rapid and convenient communication between the different floors. The laboratory will be given a productive capacity of 162,000 feet of copies per day it is stated.

At the entrance to the establishment, there has been erected a large administration building, containing offices of various kinds. Farther off a glimpse is caught of the workshops and the stables for the animals that may be required for a play, and sheltered in a pretty little copse there is seen a restaurant where several hundred persons at a time can get a good and yet inexpensive meal. The plans for the entire establishment at Rasunda were drawn up by the company's private architect, Mr. Ebbe Crohne.

Universal Plans Greater Things

Five Years After Creation of Universal City, Company Plans Even More Big Pictures

SEVEN years ago Universal City was a dream in the creative mind of Carl Laemmle.

To-day Universal City claims to be the greatest producing unit in the world, embracing the largest space devoted exclusively to the production of motion pictures and sending its product to the screens of theatres from the tropics to the Arctic Circle; from the Occident to the Orient.

Five years ago next March Universal City, as it is to-day, was dedicated to the art of the silent drama. It was consecrated to the public, those millions who nightly find entertainment in the motion picture theatres throughout the world.

Like an opal clasping the emerald strand of the San Fernando Valley, Universal is the one place in the world where wonders never cease. Throughout the days of the year, far-flung ampitheatre of the visual drama is made to assume the geographical characterizations of the distant places of the earth.

One corner of the famous studio to-day is a replica of Stamboul, the ancient quarter of Constantinople.

In the foothills encircling the world's film capital there is a winding little street, a street built exactly after a street that to-day may be seen in Montreal.

Within a stone's throw of the executive offices is a New York street—a strip of California soil camouflaged to represent exactly Avenue A of New York, as it was a decade ago.

There is no part of the world that has not been duplicated at Universal City for the Universal cameras.

What Universal has done in the last seven years is chronicled among the brilliant achievements of modern art and business.

What Universal is going to do to-day is what counts.

Tarkington Baker, the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in New York, is now conferring at Universal City with Harry D. Kilne, Manager at Universal City. The result of the conference is a definite promise to playgoers from Universal.

It is more pictures. Better pictures; even more beautifully produced.

With the tremendous facilities for the production of pictures at its hand, Universal has accomplished the miraculous in the last six months.

Eight-six completed photodramas are at the exchanges throughout the world ready to be released on schedule.

To-day for the first time in history Universal is able to turn the entire force of its endeavor toward the selection of more stories.

Director of "Checkers" Speaks

Richard Stanton Goes After Results No Matter at What Cost; Believes in Players Keeping at Work

THE extraordinary popular demand for "Checkers," which flies the William Fox banner, has brought into renewed prominence the name of the director of that great production—Richard Stanton. Also the fact that Stanton has to his credit the direction of a long series of successful pictures produced by Fox. Accordingly, in the motion picture world, people are asking: "What is Stanton's secret? Other directors come and go with startling suddenness. Is Stanton going on forever?"

Richard Stanton is back in New York, accompanied by vague rumors of a new Fox thriller in the making. He has this to say:

"The boss doesn't keep you in your job on account of your beauty, or the funny stories you tell, or because he approves your taste in neckties. He keeps a ledger, the boss does. If you keep your job, the results of your labors have got to appear on the credit side rather frequently—that's all."

"Most of the big pictures you directed are supposed to have cost a lot of money, was suggested. Yet it is said that you have developed interesting methods of keeping under the original estimates."

"If you save twenty or fifty or a hundred thousand dollars on production it may turn out that failure to have done so might have put you on the wrong side of the ledger. As to methods they're as simple as a, b, c. For instance, preparedness—so that when you have your actors and a big bunch of extra people on location, and are under considerable expense for transportation to and from, you can keep them working instead of sitting around while you make up your mind. Keep them working all day and maybe all night."

Four of the one-reel Holly Comedies, starring Sid Smith, have been completed for the Bulls-Eye program. Robert P. Kerr is directing Smith, assisted by James Parrott.

English Notables Attend Showing of "The Auction of Souls"

According to a report recently received, Viscount Bryce of England in company with Lord Gladstone attended a first showing of the "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian, at Queens Hall, London, recently. This picture of which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor is a screen production centering about the ravaging of Armenia. It is reported that Viscount Bryce made a short talk prior to the running of the picture, explaining from personal knowledge that many of the incidents in the screen version of the ravage of Armenia were conservatively related in order that the subject might be brought before a mixed audience.

English exhibitors are said to be keenly awaiting the release date of this attraction, realizing that the picture offers unprecedented box office possibilities, especially in view of the fact that Aurora Mardiganian is planning to go to England to make personal appearances with the showings as she is doing in this country.

Three of West's Most Beautiful Mansions in Mayer's Picture

Louis B. Mayer announces that three of the most beautiful homes in the West—the Flood, Spreckles and Brunswig mansions in southern California—will be used as settings for "The Inferior Sex," in which Louis B. Mayer is starring Mildred Harris Chaplin.

While these mansions are used principally as backgrounds in exteriors, the interiors used in the picture, it is claimed, will be on an equal scale of magnificence and should appeal particularly to those interested in modern interior decorating. Some of these interiors were taken in and around California's most fashionable seaside resort, Del Monte.

Lauds the First of Tarkington's "Edgar Comedies" Scripts

When Booth Tarkington agreed to write a series of 12 two-reel stories for the screen, to be produced and released by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation under the name of Edgar Comedies, he promised to introduce something new in the way of character development. E. Mason Hopper, recently engaged to direct the Edgar Comedies at Goldwyn's Culver City Studios, is ready to concede that the Indiana author has made good his claim to originality, even when he is working in a strange medium, for this is Mr. Tarkington's first venture with photoplays.

Mr. Hopper has found, after a careful study of the scripts for the first of the Edgar Comedies, that Mr. Tarkington has followed a line of development that will make his characters as clear on the screen as in book form where their mental processes are customarily revealed through the keen descriptions of their creator.

"The Fortune Teller" Secured as Vehicle For Marjorie Rambeau

It is announced "The Fortune Teller," by Leighton, has been chosen by Marjorie Rambeau and Albert Capellani to be picturized for Miss Rambeau's debut as a Pathe star. It is claimed that no more fitting vehicle could have been found for the famous actress than this powerful drama of a woman's fall and her redemption through mother-live. It is predicted that it will be one of the most appealing stories ever shown on the screen.

It is reported that work on this Pathe feature will begin within the next fortnight, in spite of the fact that Miss Rambeau is appearing in a Broadway play. Mr. Capellani is trying to secure those members of the original stage cast who have had previous picture experience.

"The Sins of the Mothers" Will Take Place of "The Suspect"

Vitagraph has announced the substitution of "The Sins of the Mothers" in place of "The Suspect," previously announced for late next month. Both are Anita Stewart features. "The Suspect" which has much of its action laid in Russia deals more or less with a class of people which include the Bolshevists, and Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, felt that its presentation at this time would not be timely. "The Sins of the Mothers" was edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester and was directed by Ralph Ince.

Transatlantic to Make Comedies

Will be Two-Reelers and Dale Hanshaw will Direct; Something New is Promised

THE rumor that the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., was to enter the producing field is now being verified. This company has issued a statement that within a very short time they will release a series of two-reel comedies. The name of the series is to be announced later.

Mr. Lewis Roach, president of the Transatlantic, who has complete charge of the destinies of this newly organized company, is the originator of many new ideas in the matter of motion picture production and in the very near future intends putting these ideas into practice.

This series of comedies are to be released exclusively on the states right market and already several prominent out of town buyers are willing to accept the franchise on these pictures, but to date the Sales Department of the Transatlantic under Charles Yale Harrison has refused to make any binding statements.

Dale Hanshaw, the well-known director and scenario writer, has enlisted his services with the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., for the production of the comedies.

It will be remembered that Mr. Hanshaw was formerly associated with the United Booking Offices in the capacity of producing vaudeville acts. During his screen period he has been associated with Metro and Goldwyn. Quite recently he wrote and directed "Healthograms," also originating the idea and producing Bernard McFadden's physical culture screen magazine.

In the production of these two-reel comedies, Mr. Hanshaw has originated a new idea in the matter of two-reel situation comedies and in this venture he has the unfailing support of a staple company such as the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc.

Pathe to Release "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis Feature

Edgar Lewis has completed cutting his latest picture, "Other Men's Shoes," from twelve to seven reels, and has turned the negative over to Pathe for release. The story is by the famous war correspondent, Andrew Soutar of London, and is said to be one of the finest achievements of the producer-director's career.

Mr. Lewis' choice of players has given his latest picture added value. Crauford Kent, who was Catherine Calvert's leading man in "The Career of Katherine Bush," does good work, it is said, in the dual role of James and Steven Browning; Irene Boyle is described to be charming as Irene Manton, who loves both men, thinking them one. Bobby Connolly, John P. Wade, Harold Forshay and Stephen Grattan are also included in the cast.

Barker Lauded for New Feature

"Flame of the Desert" Hailed by Critics and Exhibitors as Triumph For Director

REPORTS on the first showings of Geraldine Farrar's latest Goldwyn picture, "The Flame of the Desert," have convinced Samuel Goldwyn of the wisdom of featuring every production directed by Reginald Barker as a "Reginald Barker Production." Critics from New York to San Francisco are unanimous in praise of the splendor of the production and the finesse with which Mr. Barker has carried out the details of his vast program. To use an artist's phrase; he has employed a large canvas and presented his subject with broad brush strokes, yet never lost sight of the detail without which his work would have revealed only the outlines of a generous theme.

The motion picture critic of the Los Angeles Times has this to say of Reginald Barker's directing:

"Reginald Barker has some sort of wizardry which I cannot define, by which he makes you become magically a person within the picture, rather than a cold spectator. He shows his wizardry supremely in 'The Flame of the Desert.'

"There is a skilful handling of sumptuously set scenes, and an effect, even in intervals of action, as if a great deal were always happening, an achievement characteristic of these cunningly devised Barker productions."

Tom Oliphant, of the New York Evening Mail says that Reginald Barker's production "parallels, as nearly as any picture I have ever seen, the gorgeously effective stage productions in which Leslie Carter appeared before the audiences of another decade."

Not only have critics sung this director's praises, but exhibitors have written to the Goldwyn office in happy terms, as this latest Reginald Barker production has meant the S. R. O. sign in nearly every first run theatre in which it has been shown.

Perhaps the secret of Mr. Barker's success as the director of productions in which magnificent settings and a large number of people blend to convey the impression of an entire people at their daily occupations or recreations, lies in his understanding of crowd psychology. He knows how to present a large number of persons on the stage, all engaged in different action, yet conveying a singleness of impression which tends to heighten the dramatic intensity of the story he has to tell. Moreover, across this panoramic background of living people, he moves his leading characters through such climactic episodes that the beholder seems to be standing behind a curtain while an epic is being unfolded for his particular entertainment.

Mitchell Lewis Signed by Metro

Portrayer of Red Blooded Characters Will be Starred in Four of Jack London's Novels

AS its newest star, Metro Pictures Corporation has signed Mitchell Lewis, and announces this actor will appear in picturizations of four novels by the late Jack London. The four Jack London stories thus far selected as vehicles for Mr. Lewis's rugged personality are "Smoke Bellew," "The Star Rover," "A Daughter of the Snows" and "Burning Daylight." They were chosen as the most representative of the works of Jack London, master-writer of red-blooded fiction, and will be produced by Screen Classics, Inc.

Metro is able to present the Jack London stories under an arrangement with J. Frank Brockliss and C. E. Shurtleff, prominent English motion picture men and officers of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., which controls the screen rights to the Jack London novels. The agreement was reached during the recent trip to the West Coast of Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, who was accompanied by Mr. Brockliss.

Acquisition of the Jack London stories and of Mitchell Lewis as a star to interpret them on the screen follows on the heels of another important announcement by Metro; namely, that Metro will release and distribute the pictures of Taylor Holmes, the engaging comedian, who is now producer and star of the new Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc.

Lloyd's Antics Sway Audiences

Reports From Big Houses in Widely Separated Points Laud the Clean Tone and Fun of Two-Reelers

ACCORDING to a report from the offices of the Public Exchange, communications highly commending the new Harold Lloyd series of two-reel comedies, have been received from big exhibitors in various centers of the country.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, formerly managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres in New York, who recently reopened the California Theatre in Los Angeles, played "Bumping Into Broadway," last week. After the opening night, he dispatched the following wire to Pathe's New York headquarters:

"Have booked Lloyd Comedies after seeing three of them projected for me. The first one, 'Bumping Into Broadway,' showing here this week. House rocked with laughter. There is no question in my mind of Mr. Lloyd's instantaneous success and will place him in the front rank of screen comedians."

From Charles W. Picquet, who manages the Carolina Theatre in Pinehurst, N. C., reported to be a house drawing high-class audiences, comes the following additional testimonial of approval:

"It was my pleasure the other day to see two comedies that ARE. I refer to the new Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, 'Bumping Into Broadway' and 'His Royal Slyness.' At last! Here are some real comedies; comedies that are genuine laugh makers; comedies that mother, father, son and daughter and sweetheart can enjoy together without fear that something will be sprung that is vulgar."

From the Marion Theatre Company, Marion, Ind., comes the following tribute: "We packed them in for three days at advanced admissions with Harold Lloyd in 'Bumping Into Broadway.' Personally, it is the finest, cleanest cut comedy I have had the pleasure of seeing."

Jack Eaton, manager of the Strand Theatre, New York, supplements the tribute he paid the Lloyd comedies three weeks ago, with the following statement, written after "Bumping Into Broadway" had taken his theatre by storm:

"I think the Pathe Exchange is to be congratulated on having the distribution of the new two-reel Harold Lloyd comedies. 'Bumping Into Broadway' was one of the best comedies that has played at the Strand Theatre in a long time."

Deitrich-Beck Picture Scoring

Doris Kenyon in "Bandbox" a Hit in First Run Houses; Publicity Through Theatrical Run

LAUNCHED for a first run in Pittsburgh for a full week's engagement at the Minerva Theatre, downtown, Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox," the first Deitrich-Beck production from a Louis Joseph Vance novel, has within a period of five days been booked for first run presentation at every key city point within the Pittsburgh territory, including a circuit wide booking of all their theatres by Rowland and Clark, the most powerful organization in Western Pennsylvania. Both the Minerva and Rowland and Clark organization have sidetracked previously booked pictures to give "The Bandbox" an immediate successful presentation.

This melodrama, directed by R. William Neill and distributed under Hodkinson auspices, came at the most opportune moment when Miss Kenyon has scored a theatrical success in New York in "The Girl in the Limousine," an attraction that will keep her playing on Broadway for perhaps a continuous run of a full year.

Convincing proof that the Doris Kenyon picture is everything that the producers and the Hodkinson organization has claimed for it is shown in the spot booking record established by "The Bandbox" at trade showings held at all Hodkinson exchanges within the past month. Some of the biggest exhibitors in the country who had seldom, if ever, featured Doris Kenyon at their theatres, were given a pleasurable surprise by the beautiful artiste's sparkling performance as the heroine of the gripping Louis Joseph Vance story, and the all 'round excellence of the Deitrich-Beck picturization.

"The Bandbox" opened a week's engagement at the Rose Theatre, Chicago, on Sunday, playing to crowded houses at all five performances. The Madison Street playhouse was gaily bedecked for its first Doris Kenyon presentation, the lobby of the Rose far outshining any other "front of the house" display in the Loop district.

Louise Huff will show her latest American Cinema feature "The Stomy Petred" to a gathering of her friends at Columbus, Georgia, next week. Columbus is Miss Huff't home town and she has received numerous requests that the picture be shown there.

Hyman Attractions Branch Out

Purchase of Big Story Marks Entrance Into World Rights Field in a Bigger Way

THE announcement by Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Chicago and Detroit, of the purchase of the world rights on Clara E. Laughlin's story, "The Penny Philanthropist," featuring Peggy O'Niel, marks the entry of this successful and enterprising firm into the world rights field in a big way.

Mr. Hyman, who now is in New York arranging for extensive exploitation of "The Penny Philanthropist" and for other big productions, has come to the front in the film world with a rush, starting three years ago in Michigan with the child picture, "Mother Goose." His exploitation of this film was so successful that he immediately purchased other features including "Redemption," "Hearts of the World," "Wives of Men," "Fool's Gold," and "Virtuous Men" and a number of other large productions, until today more than twenty-eight pictures are under control of the Hyman Attractions for the state of Michigan.

In May of the present year Mr. Hyman purchased the rights for "Virtuous Men" for Illinois and Indiana and opened offices in the Consumers' Building, Chicago. He also purchased the rights for "Fool's Gold" which was released November 1st and "Brown of Harvard" featuring Tom Moore, released December 1st.

"The Penny Philanthropist" will be released December 15th, the rights for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Michigan being retained by the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, the balance of the United States being put on the state right market and foreign rights will be handled by a New York firm.

The offices of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions in Detroit are located in the Film Building, room 202, C. O. Brokaw, manager. Chicago offices are located in the Consumers' Building, W. G. McCoy, manager.

Past Successes Pave The Way

Fox Says Success of "Checkers" and "Evangeline" is Cause of Heavy Demand For New Feature

THE Fox Film Corporation reports that its new cinemelodrama, "Should a Husband Forgive?", is already booked in many theatres throughout the country for a total of more than ten months, represented by contracts for from two to fourteen days each. The Fox officials claim that the success of the two preceding features, "Checkers" and "Evangeline," is having a very noticeable effect in the selling of this new production. The Fox report runs as follows:

"Following as it does the sensationally successful super-productions, "Checkers" and "Evangeline," this master melodrama, last of the big specials scheduled by William Fox for release this year, promises to surpass even the exceptional records established by the earlier successes.

"Wherever 'Checkers' or 'Evangeline' has been played the demand for 'Should a Husband Forgive?' denotes the highest appreciation of the box-office values of the Fox specials. Exhibitors are reported as closing contracts on this picture without any question of price. They simply take its value for granted, basing their conclusions on the results obtained with the other specials."

"Should a Husband Forgive?" has all the elements of a successful screen entertainment. It was staged by R. A. Walsh, who directed "Evangeline." In the cast interpreting the melodramatic story are such players as Miriam Cooper, creator of the title role in "Evangeline;" Vincent Coleman, Percy Standing, Mrs. James K. Hackett, Johnny Ries, Eric Mayne, Lyster Chambers, Charles Craig, Martha Mansfield, James Marcus and Tom Brooke.

Desmond in a Wodehouse Story

"The Prince and Betty," a Hampton Production, to be Distributed by Pathe; Released Dec. 21

PATHE will distribute William Desmond's latest starring vehicle, "The Prince and Betty," produced by Jesse D. Hampton from the novel by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse. The contract has just been signed, and release date for the Hampton photodrama has been set for December 21st. Pathe is also distributing the Blanche Sweet features produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

According to Pathe's announcement, Desmond's first appearance in a Pathe attraction, will be a noteworthy event, for "The Prince and Betty" is reported to be the highest class picture he has ever appeared in. Desmond's leading woman is Mary Thurman. The direction was by Robert Thornby. Fred Myton wrote the continuity for "The Prince and Betty."

Supporting Desmond in the Wodehouse story are Anita Kay, George Swann, Walter Perry, Wilton Taylor, William Devaull, and Frank Lanning, all well known and capable performers. "The Prince and Betty" is described as "a romantic comedy drama, with a powerful appeal to all those who love humor and adventure."

Mr. Wodehouse's work can be recalled through his success with "Oh Boy" and "A Damsel in Distress," which in Pathe annals are classed as two of the most successful features of the year. The story concerns itself with the adventures and love affairs of John Maude, an American who is suddenly transformed into the prince of a South American principality. It is not the customary comic opera story that Mr. Wodehouse wove about this fact, but a human, logical tale.

During his career as a screen actor he played leading roles in "The Unpardonable Sin," "The Life Line," "Victory" and "Soldiers of Fortune,"

"Miss Sweet has absolutely no contract other than the one with the Jesse D. Hampton Production, Inc., and therefore, no one is authorized to use her name in connection with any stock selling proposition."

Western Salesman Refutes Claim That Industry Is on Decline

Melvin G. Winstock of Seattle, who for the past year has been chief salesman for the Metro Pictures Corporation, writes that "the West has demonstrated that a real motion-picture theatre, operated by real show brains, can pay any reasonable price demanded for real box office attractions." Judging from the content and spirit of Mr. Winstock's letter, he has nothing in common with those whom he describes as claiming that "the business is going to the dogs because prices for films are continually mounting and that the end is nowhere in sight."

Neilan Assembles Good Talent

Producer Has Well-Known Artists Under His Banner; First Film Play Finished Very Soon

MARSHALL NEILAN is said to have assembled an exceptional organization of histrionic talent for the presentation of the characters in his independent productions. In obtaining his talent Mr. Neilan has drawn from both the stage and the screen worlds.

Lewis Stone's engagement by Mr. Neilan, which was recently announced, follows a short return to the legitimate stage before which he appeared in many successful photoplays. Marjorie Daw, who has also recently signed with Mr. Neilan, attracted particular attention as leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks in six of his most successful pictures.

A new member of the Neilan company is J. Barney Sherry, who by his years of experience on the legitimate stage and his seven years of service with Thomas H. Ince, has gained a wide reputation. Jane Novak, one of the most popular leading ladies of the screen and who has played opposite such stars as William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Sessue Hayakawa and others is another new acquisition to the Neilan Troupe.

Mr. Neilan's most recent acquisition is in the person of Charles West, who will be remembered as playing opposite Mary Pickford, Mabel Normand, Blanche Sweet and others in the old Griffith-Biograph days.

Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced youngster, "discovered" by Marshall Neilan several years ago, is another valuable asset to the Neilan troupe. Yama Mata, the Japanese actor, has also just been signed by Mr. Neilan. Mata has appeared in many motion picture successes and is said to be considered a second Hayakawa in West Coast producing circles.

Mr. Neilan, accompanied by his entire producing organization will shortly journey to Canada to do the exteriors for his initial independent production. It is expected that this film will be finished within the next three weeks at which time a new production will be started which is said to be an adaptation of a famous Broadway comedy success.

Booking Mark on "Desert Gold"

Jensen and von Herberg Run the Production Four Weeks in Cities of Northwest

JENSEN and von Herberg's four great first run cities of the Pacific northwest — Seattle, Portland, Tacoma and Butte — are now seeing Benjamin B. Hampton's first Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," under contracts signed during the past week for four weeks of showing of this big production in their chain of theatres. "Desert Gold" opened in the Northwest at Tacoma on November 22d, followed on November 29th in Portland and the week following will play simultaneously in Seattle and Butte.

Behind this production were unloosed and set into action all the powerful presentation and exploitation resources of this big Northwestern organization, with full page newspaper copy as the introductory event in each city. Coupled with this is the fact that the rentals paid in each city are double those ever paid before in each of the four cities for a Zane Grey production and previous rentals have been high. The booking for these four cities completes the booking of the five largest cities of the Northwest, "Desert Gold" it is said having first broken every house record at Stillwell's Casino in Spokane three weeks ago.

During the current week "Desert Gold" has broken all the house records at the Colonial, Richmond, Va., Jake Wells' big house, both in number of patrons and volume of receipts. Harry Bernstein, general manager of the Wells interests, reported that all existing matinee records were exceeded by the picture, lines being held out each afternoon for an entire week.

Contracts for first run presentations with immediate play dates have been signed with the Fuller Theatre, Kalamazoo; with Goldberg Brothers, of Omaha, for the largest and newest of their three Omaha first run houses; with twenty-five of the S. A. "The Face of the King"
By James Roberts

Character of story: Romance.
Theme: Love and adventure.
Characters: King Rudolph of Molbania; Princess Marie Louise of Thex-Schwegstein, his affianced bridge; Archduke Basil Pulasky, cousin of the King; Ermin Pasha, a Turk; William Wallace, an English tragedian; Mrs. Peter Delancey Throckmorton of New York; Emily, her daughter; Count Bouloff, a Russian diplomat; an innkeeper, the Princess' aunt and others.
The Plot: When the story opens there is a plot afoot to induce Molbania to enter into a treaty with Austria to allow Austrian soldiers free passage over Molbanian territory in case of war between Austria and any of the neighboring states. The King is opposed to this treaty and it seems doomed when the Archduke Basil, being in London, sees William Wallace act. Wallace bears a remarkable resemblance to the King and it occurs to the Archduke that if the King could be removed temporarily Wallace could take his place until the purpose of the conspirators could be accomplished. With this end in view he makes the acquaintance of the Throckmortons and the actor and invites the latter to visit his country. The actor declares that this is not possible as he is soon to make a tour of the New World. The Archduke offers to wager him a large sum of money that he will be in Molbania within a few months. Returning to his own country the Archduke induces the King to invite Wallace to the capital of Molbania for the week of the wedding, to give a performance before the court. This the King does against the advice of the Princess. The King and the Princess, being of a romantic disposition, have been holding secret meetings in the garden of Castle Thanlis where the Princess is domiciled with her suite pending the wedding, and in this way they have secured the courtship which they would otherwise have missed. While the King is visiting the Princess thus, he is captured when climbing over the wall and carried to an inn over the Austrian border where he is made a prisoner and shaved to increase the resemblance to the actor. It is given out that the actor is mad and confined in this in. Wallace, meanwhile, has taken the place of the King in the capital. With the aid of his make-up box he is enabled to completely deceive everyone — even the Princess — though he finds it necessary to avoid close contact with her, and knowing nothing of the secret rendezvous fails to keep the appointment which the real King had made on the night of his capture. The Princess is troubled, but does not suspect the true state of affairs. Pulasky decides that he will run away with the Princess and, if necessary, leave the actor on the throne until such time as it suits him to remove him by revolution, once the treaty has been signed. He lures the Princess into a closed carriage on the pretense that the King has been injured and carries her away to the King's hunting lodge on the Turkish road. The King, meanwhile, has bribed a barber to help him escape, and after an exciting chase reaches his own palace and eventually rescues the Princess. He arrives at the palace to find the treaty signed, but the captain of the King's guard unmasks the impostor, who crazed by his taste of royalty, attacks the real King. Pulasky throws himself before the King, saving the life of the monarch and sacrificing his own.

The Grip of Fear
By Maurice Level

Character of story: Detective story.
Theme: Circumstantial evidence.
Characters: Onesimus Coche, a journalist; Monsieur Ledoux, his friend; Monsieur Chenard, editor of Coche's newspaper; Monsieur Avyot, sub-editor; Police Commissioner; Javel, a detective; innkeeper, officials; the three strangers.
The Plot: This is a French detective story. Onesimus Coche, a reporter, who had made a brilliant record in running down crime stories, has dined with his friend, Monsieur Ledoux, and is on his way home to his own lodgings when he sees three suspicious figures approaching along the deserted boulevard and hides himself thinking they may be robbers. These three have emerged from a narrow street debouching into the boulevard. There are two men and a woman. One of the men is wounded. The other carries a heavy bag. From their conversation Coche deduces that they have just come from the scene of a robbery and when they have passed he enters the street from which they came and investigates each wall gate till he comes to one which yields. Entering the house with some trepidation he finds that there has not only been a robbery, but a murder also. A man's throat has been cut with a piece of broken bottle. Coche's first impulse is to give the alarm, but he conceives the idea of playing a tremendous hoax on the police by leading them astray, thinking that after he has made them ridiculous he will tell the facts. He proceeds to create circumstantial evidence against himself, leaving one of his cuff links in the room where the murder was committed and tearing up an envelope bearing his name and address. Then, over the telephone and anonymously, he notifies his paper that there has been a murder in a certain house on a certain street. Before morning his editor sent for him to cover the case and he goes with the police to the house of the crime. There he helps to point out to the police the evidence which he has created, though not so plainly as to result in his immediate arrest. Having set them on the wrong track, he notifies his paper that he must have a vacation, gives up his rooms and retires to another part of the city where he registers in a doubtful hotel under another name. His plan works well. The police follow his clues and follow him to arrest him. Once in jail he lets the denouement rest a little and then is seized with a sudden mental paralysis or fascination of horror which prevents his telling the truth before his trial. When the time comes for the trial he declares that he was with his friend Ledoux at the time of the murder, but Ledoux has died and this cannot be proven. The evidence he has created is too strong to be set aside and he is found guilty. His protestations are of no avail and he is actually on the steps of the guillotine when he spies in the crowd the three murderers whom he saw on the fatal night. He denounces them and they endeavor to escape. Captured, they confess and Coche's life is saved.
Locale: Paris.
Picture High Lights: Very good oportunity for emotional acting on part of lead; with introduction of love interest would make a picture not unlike The Mystery of the Yellow Room

"The Ivory Pipe"
By J. U. Geisy and Junius B. Smith

Character of story:
Theme:
Characters: Peaches Mallory, a dancer; Gladys Vance, a singer; Joe Edwards, reporter; Inspector Johnson; Glace of Glace & Bryce, detectives; Mrs. Lee, society woman; Semi Dual, astrologer.
The Plot: Peaches Mallory, who has been one of the shining lights at the Victory ball, is found stabbed to death in the apartment of Gladys Vance — a singer. The Vance girl declares that the Mallory girl was at the door when someone in the hall stabbed her and threw the knife into the room. The knife is an ugly Oriental affair — almost a sword. Suspicion falls upon Gladys Vance and her fiance, Joe Edwards, a newspaperman, calls in Glace & Bryce, private detectives, to investigate the matter and, if possible, clear his sweetheart of suspicion. Palls and Gregson, two brokers, who live together, were present in the house where Peaches Mallory and Gladys Vance lived and appeared at the door of Gladys Vance's apartment shortly after the alarm was given. They explained that they had come home from the ball with the Mallory woman for an early morning breakfast. Gladys Vance is lodged in jail and there seems to be no method of clearing her of the suspicion cast upon her. Glace & Bryce call upon Semi Dual, a celebrated astrologer, who has offices and residence on the roof of an office building where he lives in Oriental magnificence. This man possesses strange powers of reading the future, being learned in every branch of science from palmistry and table tapping to electricity and wireless telegraphy and seems to find something good in all of them — even those which are usually regarded as mere superstitions. The detectives, it seems, have had occasion to prove his powers and have a wholesome respect for them. Semi Dual warns them that an attempt will be made to kill Gladys Vance in her cell, and this confirms them in the opinion which they have already formed that the dancer was probably killed in mistake for the singer. The prisoner, in spite of their precautions, is poisoned and very nearly killed by smelling a bunch of roses which ostensibly came from Joe Edwards and which are found to have been sprinkled with cyanide. At the funeral of Peaches Mallory the two detectives note a pall of red roses exactly like those in the poisoned bouquet and learn that these were the gift of a Mrs. Lee who attends the funeral in company with Palls and Gregson. Investigation shows that Mrs. Lee lives in a large house on upper Riverside Drive with a Chinese butler attending the door. How many other servants she may have there is no means of knowing. She knows a good many society people, but practically all of the fast set. Investigation shows that the pall of roses for the funeral were sent from the same shop that the poisoned flowers came from. Semi Dual now takes a hand and when the detectives are sent for to come to the house on the drive they find him in full charge. It seems that Mrs. Lee is the wife of the supposed butler and that she and her husband keep a high-class opium den and general den of inquity where moneyed degenerates indulge themselves in vice. The Vance girl had learned of this and in endeavoring to save the Mallory girl from such companions learned more than was safe for her to know. The murder was committed by an aboriginee from a Pacific Island — one of the retainers of Mrs. Lee.

The Wings of Desire
By Rita Wellman

Character of story: Psychological study.
Theme: Love.
Characters: Roger Betton, a hothouse young man; Elizabeth Betton, his foster mother; Karl Kennard, an author; Zita Wheeler, "a free soul" of Greenwich Village; Mary Hope, a model; Knox Whalen, a millionaire; Mary Hill, a butterfly; Mildred Knox, a predatory aristocrat; McHenry, a neighbor; Davidson, a man about town; Harper, an artist.
The Plot: The story is concerned with the adventures of Roger Betton who is brought up as a worshipper of beauty by Elizabeth Betton, supposed to be his mother, but in reality his foster mother. Roger is a foundling, the illegitimate child of an immigrant, but he does not learn of this until some time after he has started on his career. Roger and his mother are wealthy, with nothing to worry them and with no object in life but that of making each day pleasant. McHenry, a neighbor, feels that Roger should be engaged in some sort of work, if only to keep him occupied and urges that Roger go to New York with him to see something of the world. Roger is restless, though he does not know what he wants to do. Elizabeth feels that Roger has reached an age where he must learn something of women and she consents to his visit to the metropolis. He goes in company with McHenry and meets Karl Kennard, an author, who introduces him to Greenwich village society. There he falls in love with Zita, an artist, who disapproves of marriage, but has no objection to affinities. Zita holds Roger through sheer physical attractions, and for some time they are together. Roger, urged by Harper, a plodding artist, begins to paint and borrows a model from Harper, Mary Hope, a beautiful girl of no force of character or mentality, who is wax in the hands of any man. Swept off his feet by a sudden passion for the girl, Roger enters into an affair with her which, he learns later, makes him a father. He provides money for the education of his son, but does not go to see him. Roger then begins to go about with a rather fast crowd led by Knox Whalen and is injured in an automobile accident with Mary Hill and others. Upon the fringe of society Roger meets Mildred Knox, a self-willed young woman, who determines to marry him, which she does. They have plenty of money, and there is no need for Roger to work. He soon finds himself superfluous in the household. His wife is busy with society and he is simply a bit of ornamental furniture. He encounters Zita, who has been having an affair with Davidson, but who now says she is sure that she and Roger were made for one another. Roger persuades his wife to divorce him, and goes to Japan with Zita. There they are happy until Davidson again shows up and Zita decides that she has had enough of Roger and will again go away with Davidson, which she does. Roger continues to work in Japan with the result that he acquired quite a reputation. Here he is finally sought out by his son — the son of Mary Hope — who is a sailor and poet — a second edition of the weak, amiable, talented father.

Locale: New York and Japan.

Picture High Lights: Many emotional scenes. Needs some justification for Roger at the end. As a picture of a certain phase of modern life it is interesting.

The Wall Street Girl
By Frederick Orin Bartlett

Character of story: Love story.

Theme: Making good.

Characters: Donald Pendleton, a rich man's son; James Barton, his father's lawyer; Frances Stuyvesant, Donald's fiancee; Morton H. Stuyvesant, her father; Sally Winthrop, stenographer; brokers, office workers, etc.

The Plot: Donald Pendleton on the death of his father learns that by his father's will he is left the family residence and that provision has been made for the payment of the servants and for taxes and upkeep with the exception of his own meals, which must be provided for out of his own earnings. No money is left to him. Thus Donald finds himself the owner of $12.30 and engaged to a girl who has an allowance of $10,000 a year. It takes him less than half a day to spend this money, and he accepts a position with a brokerage firm — secured for him by James Barton — at a salary of $1,200 a year. He talks matters over with Frances and they decide that he ought to be able to make $10,000 a year by spring and that when he has come to this sum they will be married. Donald makes the acquaintance of Sally Winthrop, stenographer, during his first day in the office. Sally insists upon lending him two dollars until he gets his salary on Saturday. Sally herself lives on something less than half of the salary that Donald receives and can see no reason why he should not find it easy to live within his income. Frances, knowing nothing of business or the demands of business, keeps Donald on the go evenings, so that Sally begins to wonder whether he will be able to hold his job. She determines that he must have a chance at least, so she writes him a letter at his club warning him that he will be dismissed if he does not come to the office earlier and pay more attention to his work. Donald finds that it is a long way from $1,200 a year to $10,000, but is soon interested in the business and anxious to be made a bond salesman. Frances is impatient with his business and does not like to talk of money. She goes to Europe for her summer vacation and urges Donald to come along, though it is obvious that he could not do so if he were as idle as in the old days. Donald stays in the city, coming to depend more and more on Sally for companionship and inspiration and under her instructions learns to do his work well. Sally tells him that there is no need for him to wait longer before making Frances his wife since he has the house and his salary is quite sufficient for two people to live on. Thus encouraged Donald broaches the subject to Frances immediately upon her return, but her father strenuously objects, and she admits that she cannot quite see it herself. She tells Donald that he has been thinking of her as of some other girl and that she is not the sort of girl he thinks she is. Donald then awakes to the fact that Sally is the girl he loves and he follows her to Maine where she has gone for her vacation. They are married and he is informed that on his marriage he is to get $2,000 a year from the estate and on the birth of his second child to get the whole estate.

Locale: New York and a village in Maine.

Anth. Trent, Master Criminal
By Wyndham Martin

Character of story: Mystery.

Theme: Crook and supercrook.

Characters: Anthony Trent, author and crook; Connington Warren, rich society man; Austin, Warren's butler; Inspector McWalsh; Crosbeigh, an editor; "Tubby" Weems, a promoter; "The Countess," an international crook.

The Plot: Anthony Trent is a magazine writer of "crook stories," earning about forty dollars a week on the average. He is a crack sportsman and has expensive tastes which he cannot afford to gratify. Upon the joking suggestion of his friend, Crosbeigh, a magazine editor, Trent decides to become such a supercrook as figure in his stories. This book contains a number of his adventures of which the first relates the theft of a large sum of money from the house of Connington Warren. Trent, having learned something of the habits and mannerisms of the rich man, gets into his house in his absence and when surprised by the butler sits with his back to the door clad in one of Warren's smoking jackets and waves his hand impatiently at the butler, making use of a gesture which he has seen Warren use in a club. The butler is suspected, but able to clear himself of suspicion. Trent, having made sure of his swag, gets himself a residence on the top floor of a walk up flat house on Central Park West with the use of the roof and puts his establishment in the hands of a housekeeper who is discreet and without any inclination to gossip with the neighbors. The death of a mythical uncle in Australia accounts for the improvement in Trent's circumstances, and after the first coup, he proceeds to plan all of his robberies in great detail. He relieves of their ill-gotten gains certain predatory plutocrats and money-lending Shylocks. In the course of one of his adventures he is fooled by The Countess, an international thief. A man named Drummond, who makes a business of lending money to young society men and then blackmailing them into helping him socially, has been seeking a hold on a young man whom Trent impersonates with the result that Drummond is not only discredited by Trent, but also robbed. The adventure following this leads Trent into the home of Guestwick in search of a wonderful jewel. The Countess, posing as an actress secretly married to the son of the family, plays upon Trent's sympathies and prevails upon him to leave her in possession of a large sum of money which he has unearthed from the safe as well as the jewel. Trent, through a sense of chivalry, does this, and the next morning learns that this woman carried out the robbery which he had begun. As in the case of most stories dealing with gentleman crooks, there is a certain sameness about the method used in each of the cases which Trent takes in hand, but there are many interesting tricks played by the supercrook and the action continues to be lively throughout with enough "woman interest" to make picture material.

Locale: Chiefly in New York; one story laid in San Francisco. Action could take place in any large city.

Picture High Lights: Many dramatic situations throughout.

Little Miss Muffet
By Elizabeth Kirby

Character of story: A love story for grown-ups.

Theme: Love.

Characters: Little Miss Muffet; Lady Bombadier, her aunt; Philip Hungerford, a decadent novelist and advocate of free love; Sit Stagg Bombadier, her uncle; Pegotty, a boarding-house friend; Speedwell Bolsover, a literary barnacle; Peter Swift, M. D.

The Plot: Little Miss Muffet is the daughter of a country clergyman in England. She is stifled with the narrowness of her environment and the priggishness of her set. She fears that she will become the typical old maid clergyman's daughter and determines that she will get out into the world and make a "career" as a writer. She has had one or two stories accepted by a weekly woman's sheet in London and on this she builds her hopes. As an opening wedge she writes to her aunt, Lady Bombadier, to invite her to visit in London, and her aunt obligingly does so. Since Lady Bombadier is the pride of the family, no reasonable objection can be offered to this visit. Little Miss Muffet goes to London where she sees the sights, but finds conversation with her aunt very difficult. Her aunt does not admire the works of Philip Hungerford, the aspostle of free love, nor has she much sympathy for any of the very modern theories of life and conduct. Snubbed when she ventures into these fields, Little Miss Muffet, or Angela, to give her her Christian name, desists from her efforts to make conversation and finds the stately meals at her aunt's house a nightmare. Applying at the offices of the Weekly Gossip she secures a position as a staff writer. Her aunt makes known to her a project to adopt her, but Angela sternly puts away wealth and ease for her career and goes to live at a boarding-house for professional workers. Here she meets Pegotty, a capable young woman, who makes her living in commercial fields. As a journalist Miss Muffet is decidedly not a success. She persists in writing articles which the editor describes as "high brow," and the only department which she successfully conducts is the advice to the lovelorn — answering the questions of troubled lovers out of the wealth of her own inexperience. Invited to call upon Speedwell Bolsover as a result of the publication of two of her passionate poems in The Red Review, Angela experiences the delivious terrors of being in a private dining-room with a man who is certainly not over moral, but who lacks the force of character necessary to lead her astray. She uses Bolsover to get an introduction to Hungerford, but outside of that he is accorded few privileges beyond kissing her hand and buying her meals — a system which soon palls upon him. Hungerford she idealizes, but Hungerford is now sixty and finds little Miss Muffet amusing but insipid; he prefers strong women of mature age — so their affair never gets beyond flirtation. Pining for love, Miss Muffet is sent to a sanitarium and there meets her fate in Peter Swift, M. D. Little Miss Muffet, in short, is an innocent who longs to see life with a capital L and who is protected from her indiscretions by her very apparent innocence.

Locale: London.

Picture High Lights: The success of this story as a picture will depend upon the interpretation of the character of Miss Muffet.

He, in turn, accuses John Hartman of the theft, but is laughed at, for Hartman is rich as everyone knows. Koehler broods on his troubles and loses his mind. Katy learns that Alvin is about to marry a girl in another village and that he has been appointed schoolmaster in Millerstown. She has no longer any money. Alvin appeals to her for a last loan of $50, and she borrows it from the Squire. She fears her relatives will learn what she has done with her money and goes to work for David's mother to try to earn money to make up the sum she has given Alvin. Alvin takes from the hiding place in a tree where Katy has left her money before, the little hoard she is saving. He is caught in the act and Katy confesses that she has been helping him to his education. Alvin, pressed by creditors, is turned adrift by the girl who was to marry him and becomes a Menonite and marries the daughter of the minister, Essie. David's mother dies, and as the communion is offered her, Katy recalls that as a little child she saw David's father drop the communion service into the hole in the wall. This he had actually done while trying to recover a threatening letter which he had received from a woman known earlier in his career. Upon Katy's information Donald and the Squire recover the communion set and Donald offers to make up to William Koehler and his son Alvin the losses they have suffered through the unjust suspicion which rested upon the old man. William is brought back from the poorhouse to live with his son and daughter-in-law and Alvin is set up as a merchant upon capital furnished by Donald. What Metro is Doing

ALL Metro and Screen Classic Companies are nearing completion of current productions, and the end of the week will see all finished with the exception of that started this week by the Nazimova Company. This new subject, which will be the next release after "Stronger Than Death," is an adaptation from the novel, "The Heart of a Child."

Plays have been selected and continuities written for the next series of pictures to be put in production. This list including "Judah," from the book by Henry Arthur James, for May Allison; "Eliza Comes to Stay," for Viola Dana; "Alias Jimmie Valentine," for Bert Lytell, and "Old Lady Thirty-One," which is to have an all-star cast, and will be produced under the direction of John Ince. Emma Dunn, who took the role of Angie, and David Harmon, who played the title role in the original stage presentation company, have been engaged to play in the film version, and are now at the Metro Studios.

Alice Lake, who was recently placed under contract by Metro because of her very excellent work in "Should a Woman Tell," is to be starred first in "Shore Acres," which will be directed by Rex Ingram. Ingram has been identified with the Universal for the past several years with the exception of the time that he served in the army.

May Allison will be seen in "Fine Feathers" later, this play having been purchased from Eugene Walters for this star.

A greater portion of the Metro exterior space was utilized this week for a Japanese street scene, the principal building of which was a temple 70 feet in height. This was built for the Viola Dana Screen Classic, "The Willow Tree."

Universal Activities

IN the absence of General Manager Harry Kline, who has been called east for a conference with the executives of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Tarkington Baker, general manager of the company, is serving as general manager of the producing plant.

"How long I will serve in this capacity," Mr. Baker said, "depends entirely upon action of the executives in the east. I may be here two weeks, or two months. I expect to hear from Mr. Kline within a few days.

"No new policy is to be inaugurated at Universal City. We are going ahead on the plans we made several months ago, and we have our production in such condition that we are in position to carry out the scheme of several weeks' preparation between pictures on the part of each director. It is our intention to make a series of twelve pictures, and then give our working organization a slight interval of rest before taking up the next series. The first series has been completed, and plans have been made for the next. Production will be started shortly."

Practically all companies making feature productions will finish their present pictures within the next few days. A majority of the subjects are now in the editing process, which means they will be ready for shipment east within a few days. The pictures almost ready for the print laboratories are "The Phantom Melody," starring Monroe Salisbury; "The Triflers," made by William Christy Cabanne; "Rouge and Riches," with Mary MacLaren; "The Pedlar," directed by William C. Dowlan, and "The Prince of Avenue A," with James J. Corbett. Allen Holubar is reducing 80,000 feet of negative to an eight-reel feature, which will be released as "Ambition." This film stars Dorothy Philips. Director Rollin S. Sturgeon is editing "The Breath of the Gods," and Eric Von Stroheim is making the last scenes for "The Woman in the Plot."

Illness of Art Acord, being featured in "The Man Hunter," has delayed production by Director Reeves Eason.

Date for the departure to South America of Director Jacques Jaccard and the Eddie Polo serial company making "The Vanishing Dagger," has not been fixed. At the present time they are working at Universal City where a big cast has been engaged for the interior scenes.

One of the most expensive serial scenes made by Universal was that in which 200 Chinamen took part this week, for scenes in "The Lion Man" featuring Jack Perrin and Kathleen O'Connor.

Universal announces the purchase of a J. G. Hawks original story, "Sins of the Fathers." This will serve as a vehicle for Mary MacLaren, and will shortly be put in production.

Director Phil Rosen has begun the making of a two-reel western melodrama, "The Jay Bird," with Hoot Gibson and Josephine Hill.

Other films in production are "Lower Four and Upper Three," directed by Al Santell; the Priscilla Dean, "The Beautiful Beggar," directed by Tod Browning, and "Overland Red," starring Harry Carey.

Jesse D. Hampton Notes

ALL three of the Jesse D. Hampton stars are beginning work this week in new productions, two working at the studio on Fountain Avenue, and the Blanche Sweet Company beginning "Simple Souls," at the new Hampton Studios on Santa Monica boulevard.

A very excellent cast has been selected for the Blanche Sweet vehicle which includes Charles Meredith and Herbert Standing, loaned to the Hampton studios for this production by Goldwyn; Kate Lester and Herbert Grimwood. The direction will be in charge of Robert Thornby. "Simple Souls" is by the English author, John Hastings Turner, and the film rights were purchased by Mr. Hampton's London representative. Continuity was written by Fred Myton.

Little Virginia Lee Corbin has been borrowed from the William Fox organization to play the title role in "The White Dove," adapted from the William J. Locke novel and which is to be the starring vehicle for H. B. Warner. Claire Adams will be the leading woman, and players to appear in support are James Barrows, Herbert Grimwood, Donald MacDonald, Elinore Hancock. Henry King will be in charge of direction. Eugene B. Lewis wrote the screen version and Victor Milner will be in charge of photography.

The third unit to begin production is that headed by William Desmond, who is to play in "The Parish Priest," adapted from the well known stage play by Daniel J. Hart. It is to be an elaborate production for Pathe.

Ruth Rennick, who has been very successful in coast speaking stage stock companies, has been placed under contract with Jesse D. Hampton to appear in pictures under his management.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH of the Vitagraph Company arrived in Los Angeles this week, and is giving his personal attention to the completion of arrangements for two new producing units at the Hollywood studio, as well as taking an active part in the enlargement of the producing plant by the erection of new stages, scene docks, property buildings, etc.

William Duncan is now giving his attention to the concluding episode of "Smashing Barriers," while the studio technical staff is preparing sets for his first special feature production. This means there shall be no delay in the Duncan Company. As soon as the serial is completed, the making of the larger film will be commenced. Edith Johnson, it is announced, will continue as leading woman for Duncan.

The second new producing unit will be headed by Joe Ryan, and this company will film a story written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and Albert E. Smith. The entire personnel of the Ryan Company has not been decided upon finally.

The three Vitagraph comedy companies this week started on new productions.

Goldwyn Studio Notes

AFTER making the exteriors in and about New York City for "Duds," the Henry C. Rowland story, the Goldwin unit, under the direction of Tom Mills, has returned to the Culver City studios to film the remainder of the picture. Naomi Childers and Christine Mayo play the leading parts with Tom Moore appearing in the semi-professional detective role of hero. Edwin Stevens has been engaged to appear in the part of Karakoff and Jack Richardson will be the heavy.

T. Hayes Hunter is doing the final editing on the first Rupert Hughes Goldwyn release, "The Cup of Fury," and following this will take up the filming of the Basil King story, "Earth Bound." The cast for this will be named shortly.

Victor Schertzinger, who is directing "The Blooming Angel" for Madge Kennedy, will have Edward Johnson appear in the role of the police judge, and Russ Powell will play the role of the circus owner.

Players are being selected for the short subjects adapted from the Tarkington "Edgar" stories which will be directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Richard Tucker, who will be remembered as leading man of a number of Edison releases several years ago, has been placed in stock at the Goldwyn studios following his return from overseas. Tucker enlisted in the service shortly after America entered the war and was promoted to a captaincy, and served in the Marne division. He was reported dead in the American casualty list and returned shortly, greatly to the surprise of his many friends. Tucker came to Los Angeles with a speaking stage attraction which closed the season here.

Famous Players-Lasky

THE Famous Players-Lasky producing staff is honored this week by the presence of both President Adolph Zukor and Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky, a condition which has existed but once before in the history of this big film organization. President Zukor arrived November 16th from New York, and to interviewers has made the meager statement that this is his annual visit to the producing plant, and aside from being here to visit and talk over plans with Mr. Lasky, he has no announcement to make. He expressed very keen satisfaction of the improvements made at the Famous Players-Lasky plant, for since his last trip to the coast, many of the fire-proof buildings have been erected to replace the frame structures built hurriedly several years ago, to satisfy the requirements of a rapidly increasing producing organization. Mr. Zukor will remain in the west two or three weeks.

Jesse L. Lasky, who came west early in October, made his first visit to the studio this week, he having been ill since shortly after his arrival.

Paramount-Artcraft will have a new release which will be known as William C. deMille Specials, and the first of this brand will be a film version of "The Prince Chap," adapted from the stage play of the same name. Tom Meighan is the only player so far selected for this production, which will be started in a few days, but at the studio it is stated the production will have an all star cast.

The second Houdini subject has been given a permanent title of "Terror Island." This company has gone to Catalina Island for the making of submarine scenes, and a big launch has been engaged to transport the players from there to an island off the coast of Lower California. At this island, which has a South Sea atmosphere, practically all the remaining exterior scenes will be filmed.

San Francisco will be given a thrill November 21st, when George H. Melford will stage the ferry-boat and steamer collision in San Francisco Bay for "The Sea Wolf." The company is all in the Northern city for the making of these scenes.

Another Famous Players-Lasky unit working in San Francisco, is that making the finish of the automobile race for "The Bear Trap," starring Wallace Reid. This race was started from Los Angeles.

Walter Edwards, who has been directing Marguerite Clark in the east, has returned to Los Angeles, and this week began the making of "Young Mrs. Winthrop," starring Ethel Clayton. Harrison Ford has been named leading man.

One portion of the Lasky studio contains a very wonderful collection of bottles, but all empty, which are serving as props for the Bryant Washburn picture, "The Six Best Cellars," which has Wanda Hawley as leading woman. Donald Crisp is the director of this company. Howard Gaye has been signed to play the part of Sturdevant Jordon.

HERE AND THERE

MOLLY MALONE has been placed under contract to be featured in Supreme Comedies made under the direction of Scott Sidney, and released through Robertson-Cole. Others to appear in this brand of one-reel attractions are Harry Depp, Gertrude Selby, Teddy Sampson, Katherine Lewis and James Liddy. Miss Malone has been leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle in several of his most recent successes.

Director William Beaudine has begun work on filming "Are Honeymoons Happy?" Supreme Comedy with Harry Depp and Teddy Sampson. Depp is responsible for the story, and claims he got the idea while going over the well-known honeymoon route from Niagara Falls to Thousand Islands.

Another Supreme Comedy in production is titled "Pass The Apple, Eve." This features Katherine Lewis and James Liddy, and is being directed by William Beaudine.

Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp are to work in "Their Little Wife," a farce of the domestic type.

Announcement was made this week by Harry Rapf of the engagement of Howard Hickman to serve as director of Selznick Pictures, and the work of filming the first subject will be started within a few days. Studio space has been leased at the Robert Brunton studios, and it is the ultimate aim of this firm to have five or six producing units at work at this plant. The first film to be made will be an adaptation from the Eugene Walters play, "Just A Wife," which was produced on the New York stage by David Belasco. Kathleen Williams and Roy Stewart have been engaged for the feature roles. As soon as this company is well underway, Mr. Rapf expects to give his attention to the organization of other companies. It is expected that Owen Moore, Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien and other Selznick stars will work on the coast in the near future.

The Mary Pickford Company is making exterior scenes, and all others for "Pollyanna," in which the star does not appear, during the absence of Miss Pickford, who is in New York attending trial of suit respecting commissions for engagements. Miss Pickford is expected to return to Los Angeles within the next ten days.

American Pictures Dominate Abroad Says Eve Unsell

Eve Unsell, international scenario writer, who left here last July to take up her duties as scenario head of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., sends us some interesting information through her husband, Lester Blankfield, who recently returned from a flying visit to his talented wife in London. Miss Unsell states that she is comfortably located in her cozy office on Wardour St.—the "Film Row" of London. Her only worry is that of wading through the avalanche of original stories sent in by future Bernard Shaws. Most of their stories are better constructed than are originals at home, but the plots, according to their reader, would make Balsac's a milk diet for this sinless generation. Now and then a diamond in the rough is found, however, that is so good that it spurs her to "carry on."

Eve goes on to say that the English audience is a very critical one. American pictures predominate and are well received. The theatres are not so large as ours nor do they present such elaborate programs, and they charge more. Americans get a greater variety of amusement at less cost than their cousins across the water, and this Miss Unsell thinks is indeed a feather in the cap of the American producer and exhibitor.

Miss Unsell is enthusiastic with regard to her own reception in London. She is impressed with the extreme courtesy that she has met with at all times, she says, and the interviewers have been extremely kind. She has found none of the antagonism that we sometimes hear about. She thinks the culture of the people an unusual treat—that even the shop girls' diction would put to shame that of many of our society matrons. The fair sex smokes, however, wherever it happens to be, and in the movies it is sometimes difficult to see the screen—so dense is the haze in the room.

The fog is a problem one has to contend with, according to Miss Unsell. Neither has she grown used to the rationing. She reports, mournfully, that home made biscuits are read about but never seen, and she thinks longingly of those that her own maid Nellie knows how to make.

Ever on the alert to improve the quality of their productions, the Ford Educational Weekly Magazine has entered the field of color photography in the latest release, "Nature's Echoes," which will be issued this week by Goldwyn.

Lyons and Moran Going East

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, known throughout the west coast film colony as "the boys," are leaving Los Angeles, Saturday, November 15, for a thirty to forty-five days' stay in the east, they having completed their Universal contract made more than two years ago. The last picture to be made under this contract was, "Stop That Wedding." Messrs. Lyons and Moran have played together for the last nine years in comedies and in so doing have established a record unparalleled in the history of the film industry. During all of that time they have been co-starred in one and two reel comedies with the exception of five or six light comedy dramas of five and six reels.

Antonio Moreno Gets Invitation to Mexican Bull Fight

According to reports, the town of Tia Juana, Mexico, has invited Antonio Moreno, motion picture star, to be an honorary guest at the series of bull fights recently inaugurated across the border. Tony admits that he had the lofty ambition of being a toreador when he was at the age of fifteen in Spain, but he has since learned to content himself with football, tennis and the weekly amateur bouts at Vernon, near Los Angeles. Furthermore, it is said, he wants to know just which of the Mexican chieftains will be on the reception committee before he promises to attend the spectacle.

Close-ups of Players

The most recently enrolled member of the Going-up Club is Beatrice Joy. She took a ride over San Francisco with an army aviator and now knows just what the Exposition Grounds look like when 3,000 feet up.

Alan Forrest is responsible for preventing strikers from stopping the making of scenes. As leading man in the initial Sargent production, "The Forgotten Woman," Forrest was at location on the Sacramento river where the company was trying to secure steamer scenes during the strike. The Union delegate was finally inveigled into telling the men to work after Forrest had tickled his vanity by giving him a part in the picture. There was no more trouble after the labor official got the grease paint on.

Little Frankie Lee turned the entire Mary Miles Minter Company into spasms of fear when he took one of his playthings onto the set. Miss Minter saw it first and a scream echoed and re-echoed through the corridors of sets. Clubs were secured and a battle royal was about to be staged when Frankie pulled the string and the mouse disappeared. Nobody even thought of spanking him.

The old Hokum stunt of burying alive was practiced at Universal City last week by Director Douglas Gerrard unintentionally and Monroe Salisbury was the victim. One situation of the "Phanton Melody" provides that Salisbury shall be placed in a coffin and the coffin in a grave. For convenience and also for realism the tomb was placed in a hillside and to get a better perspective Gerrard climbed up the hill overlooking the grave while directing the making of the scene. Just after the casket has been placed therein, the hill began to crumble, and down went Gerrard, hill and all, covering the tomb with yards of soft earth. The actor was safely removed but his make-up was in bad condition.

Allen Holubar used approximately 80,000 feet of negative film in making scenes for the forthcoming Dorothy Phillips vehicle, "Ambition." Less than 10 per cent will be used in the final subject.

Bits of Information

Jane Jennings, that sweet looking little woman, who takes such imposingly stunning photographs, having completed "Women Men Forget" with Molly King, is now hard at work on "The Cost," in which Violet Heming is star. She has had to refuse several other very enticing offers owing to this long engagement with Famous Players.

Henry Mortimer has finished an important part in "The Fear Market", a Realart production, and is vacationing at the Lambs Club. Mr. Mortimer is another of those heavies who often gives the leading man quite a run for his money, while the audience frequently feels that if they were in the heroine's place they would fall for him at once.

Gladys Valerie selected a certain dress from a wholesale house the other day. Hardly had the dress reached home, than Miss Valerie was called to the telephone, and an interested voice asked whether they might name the spring models that they intended making from the one she chose, the Gladys Valerie frocks. Miss Valerie, with her usual graciousness, replied that she had no objection whatever.

In the cast of the first Grace Davidson picture which is in course of production at the Mt. Vernon studio, are Montagu Love, Stuart Holmes and Mrs. Margaret Wiggin, who has recently been playing in several Selznick productions. Charles Horan is directing the picture.

When David Picker's new picture house opens its doors at 159th Street and Broadway, it will bear the name "Zit", in compliment to the New York Evening Journal dramatic critic.

Joe Marquis, who was wounded and gassed in France, is making his second picture since his discharge from the Army. He was seen in "A Matter of Taste", a Universal, in which he played the leading role in support of May Collins, and is now with the MacManus Corporation.

Irene Boyle has recently returned to the screen and will be seen in the leading role in "Other Men's Shoes", Edgar Lewis' first picture for his own company. Harold Foshay is also in the cast.

Betty Andersen who has been engaged to sing at the Rivoli theatre, New York, for three weeks

It's hard to keep up with Rod LaRocque these days. First he's with Screencraft, then American Cinema, then Goldwyn, and the latest is Famous Players. We wonder how he knows at exactly which studio they are expecting him, when he first wakes up in the morning.

Vincent Coleman, who plays the leading role in Fox's much advertised "Should a Husband Forgive?" has been engaged for the leading juvenile role in "Partners of the Night", the first of Goldwyn's Eminent Authors Productions to be made in the East. Mr. Coleman feels that he is justified in reporting progress. In "Should a Husband Forgive?" he was a bookkeeper in the Bank of England, while in "Partners of the Night" he is a bank paying teller.

"The Dark Mirror", Dorothy Dalton's next, will introduce a new player to the screen. Douglas MacPherson, stock leading man of several years' training, will make his moving picture debut as the juvenile in this production.

Lilian Hall didn't want to leave New York for California one little bit. Only the temptation of the part offered in Rex Beach's "Going Some" tore her away from a winter season near Broadway. But from a recent letter, we rather think she is having a better time than she expected. And she says that six weeks in the desert is making her "real rough and Western." We can't imagine Lillian as either rough or wild, but — who knows?

Robert Gordon is working on "The Blood Barrier", a Blackton production by Cyrus Townsend Brady. The company is busy with exteriors just now, which are being taken at Commodore Blackton's old home on Long Island.

Winnifred Dunn, author of "The Red Viper", will soon commence work on her next photoplay for Tyrad Pictures, which general director Jacques Tyrol will direct. It is to be a six reel society drama, and judging by the excellence of her other productions it should meet with unusual success. There is an amusing story told of the time when Miss Dunn wrote her first professional article, of how, thinking little of her own work, she made a dozen copies or so and sent them to as many papers, with the hope that it might be accepted by one of them. By return mail, it is said, she received enthusiastic letters of acceptance from all of them — with invitations for more. After making her choice she extricated herself from the dilemma by explaining frankly, and admitting naively just how it had come about, with the result that she received even more urgent invitations to become a regular contributor.

Henry G. Sell has completed his part in "The Woman in Gray", the Serico Production Serial starring Arline Pretty. The entire company left Wilkesbarre for New York on Wednesday last.

George Larkin Completes Serial "The Lurking Peril"

IN a recent communication from George Larkin, announcement is made of the completion of his latest starring vehicle, "The Lurking Peril," of which Mr. Larkin is the author. The author also conveys the information that he intends to go to Lakewood for about two weeks where he will put the finishing touches on his new fifteen-episode mystery serial and a five-reel feature, which Mr Larkin describes as a thriller.

Pickford in "The Hoodlum" Breaks Standing Cleveland Record

E. H. Gerstle, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Cleveland, announces that a new house record for both attendance and receipts has been established by the recent run of the First National production of Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."

The previous record for the Valentine was established over a year ago by Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." Because of the fact that the signing of the armistice occurred during the run of "Shoulder Arms," Mr. Gerstle had expected this record to stand for all times on account of the special performances which he ran because of the Peace Day celebration.

"Brothers Divided" Booked For Loew's Metropolitan Circuit

According to reports from Pathe, "Brothers Divided," latest of the series of Frank Keenan independent productions for Pathe distribution, has been booked over the entire Metropolitan Circuit of Marcus Loew Theatres. The playing dates have not been definitely selected as yet, but probably will cover the latter part of December.

John J. Dacey, circuit salesman of the New York Pathe Exchange, who last week signed up the Loew circuit for the entire series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, beginning with "Bumping Into Broadway," also booked "Brothers Divided."

Stage Rehearsal Tactics Adopted For Photoplay Production

Henry Kolker and Arthur D. Ripley, who is assisting him in the production of "The Third Generation" at the Brentwood, not only rehearse the players in each important scene but give to each a copy of his lines that he may study his part as though for the stage. Without this Mr. Kolker claims it to be impossible to secure the perfect timing of the action of the players to their sub-titles and the securing of that complete spirit of each part upon which the director insists.

As a consequence of this thorough preparation it is said that several long scenes are being shot in which the drama and story are perfectly carried to the climax without recourse to a single close-up.

Film Specials Announces Release on Dec. 1 of "Jolly Comedies"

Film Specials announces that "their series of comedies will be ready for release December 1." The new comedies will be titled "Jolly Comedies." The first release will be "The Nut Crackers," in two reels, produced by G. M. Anderson, featuring Ben. Turpin, and directed by Jess Robbins.

The second release will be called "Neptune's Step Daughter," in two reels, produced by the Macdon Pictures Corporation, featuring Gertrude Selby, and directed by Frank P. Donovan. These will be sold on the state rights market, according to the Film Specials report.

First Syd Chaplin Paramount Art-Craft Comic Written by Star

Sydney Chaplin, producing star of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week the title of his first comedy production under his new million dollar contract. It is "One Hundred Million," from a story by the screen star himself.

With his advent into the author's field, Mr. Chaplin further demonstrates his versatility, as he is the star, producer, director and author of this his first Paramount-Artcraft production.

The company is said to be now busy filming interiors at the Jasper Hollywood studios where Syd, in the role of a wielder of the shears, is reported to be trying to figure out how to beat the forthcoming raise in tonsorial prices by working at the trade on a barber shop set.

"The Breath of the Gods" Will Have Elaborate Settings

The technical department at Universal City received instructions from President Carl Laemmle to spare no effort or expense in making "The Breath of the Gods," Tsuro Aoki's first starring vehicle.

Accordingly, nearly 50 different sets were erected at Universal City for Miss Aoki's initial feature, and as many more outside locations were utilized in completing the photodrama.

Rollin Sturgeon directed the production, and in the cast are Barney Sherry, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Arthur Carew, Ethel Shannon, Pat O'Malley and M. Seki.

Red Cross Institute Trains Cripples to Become Skilled Projectionists.

By Henry Braxton.

WHEN the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men announced about a year ago to the motion-picture industry that it was prepared to train cripples to become skilful projectionists the project was looked upon by exhibitors and producers in the light of an experiment. To-day it is an established fact for the Institute has graduated from its classes 42 disabled men who are now earning an average of $35 per week in the city's theatres as licensed operators. The first graduate of the class whose arm was shattered in a munition factory accident was equipped for a job as projectionist in a two months' course and sent out to work for a large film exporting house at 729 Seventh avenue at an initial salary of $35 per week. This man who little realized that he would ever be able to get back on the pay-roll after his accident is now earning $65 weekly with a good future in prospect.

Soon after America entered the war several far-seeing men and women realized the need of providing training for the cripples of industry, so that the experience thus gained might serve as a basis for the re-education of the returned disabled soldier. The enthusiastic efforts of these persons resulted in the establishing in New York City of the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men under the auspices of the American Red Cross. After the Institute had been under way for sometime and had found positions for hundreds of the city's cripples it was realized that crippled labor could supply the demand for skilled operators that resulted from the heavy drafts upon the ranks of industry made by the war. Accordingly a class of motion-picture operating was established with James R. Cameron as instructor.

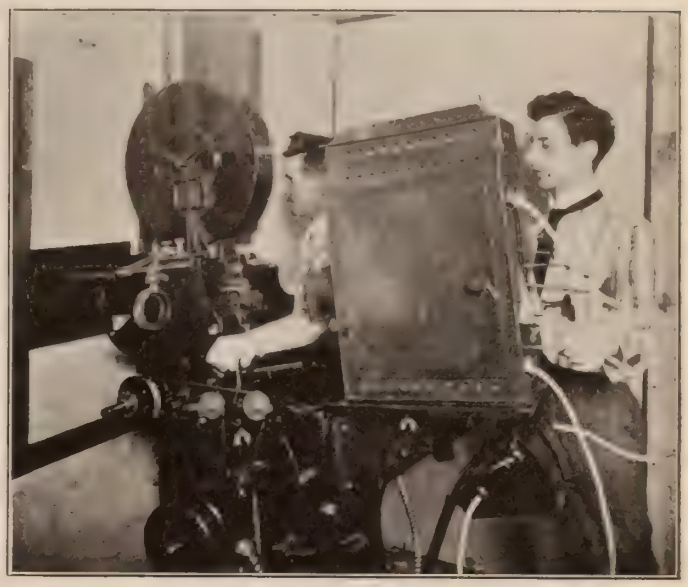
The choice of motion picture projecting as a trade for cripples was based on the knowledge that it was one of the growing trades, that in England and France the cripple had made good as a projectionist, that the wages were good, the working conditions were favorable and that almost any man with both hands intact could, with a course of study of about two or three months of duration, acquire sufficient knowledge to enable him to take charge of the machines in an operating booth.

Most of the first pupils to enroll were leg cases, either paralysis or amputation. They had to support themselves while learning but they were industrious and knew that the mastery of this trade would keep them forever from depending upon their relatives or the public for support or from begging on the streets as so many cripples are doing to-day. Out of the total of 45 men enrolled during the year only three men were found unfitted for the trade. The rest have passed the city examinations for licenses and are all holding good jobs.

The course of study in the motion-picture operating class in the Red Cross Institute is designed to be as thorough as possible. The pupil receives training in (a) elementary electricity, (b) the application of electricity to an arc lamp, (c) the construction, care and use of electrical appliances, such as transformers, mercury arc rectifiers, rheostats, motor generators, storage batteries, etc., (d) optics-construction of lenses, (e) theory of light, (f) construction and care of projeting mahines, (g)) handling, care and repairing of films.

The aim of the course is not only to fit a man to take the city examination for a license, but to give him a good working knowledge of actual projection. He must make a certain grade in his work both in theory and practice before the Institute permits him to apply for his license.

The equipment at the disposal of the students in the Institute was generously loaned by the Nicholas Power Company, the Precision Machine Company, the United Theatre Equipment Corporation through its president, Mr. Hallberg, Mr. William Fox and others. It is valued at $9,000 and consists of everything necessary to a mastery of the art of projection.



Instructing Disabled Soldiers in the Science of Projection

The equipment includes the following: Power's Motor Driver Projection Machine, Simplex Machine installed in asbestos booth, Acme Portable Machine equipped with mazda lamp, Cosmograph Portable Machine with pencil arc, Hallberg Motor Generator, Hallberg Economizer, Hallberg Regulator for mazda lamp, Step-Up and Step-Down Transformers, Rheostats, Mercury Arc Rectifier, Stereopticons, distributing board fitted with the various house-wiring systems, ammeters and voltmeters, various makes of screens, film measuring, cleaning and rewinding machines.

The producer, manufacturer and exhibitor in the motion-picture industry is urged to cooperate with the Red Cross Institute by calling upon its employment bureau for cripples who can fill the jobs that they have to offer, and by bringing to the attention of any disabled man of their acquaintance the opportunity that awaits the cripple by learning a good trade, free of cost, at the Institute. It is only by giving the cripple a chance to prove his worth that we can in some measure atone for the injustice to him in the past.

A New Department Suggested

R. Spedden:

I would like to suggest an addition to the Projection Department of the NEWS. Why not give the exact footage on films as they are released. The exchange doesn't tell us the number of feet hence the projectionist does not know. If he did know he could figure out ahead of time how long the show would be and how to space the reels so as not to rush one part of the show and slow up the other.

ANSWER:

A good idea, perhaps, but is it workable? Some of the smaller theatres get 60 to 90 day films. Thus if the exact footage was given at the time of release, the projectionist would find it necessary to look back through four to eight issues to find the list containing the feature he is to run. Would he do that?

However, we are not killing the idea but are passing it on to readers. If enough of them reply in favor of it and it is found that the suggestion can be worked through the producers and exchanges the NEWS will put it into practice.

Let's Call This Question Settled

G. WALDO, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., writes:

I see that different projectionists are having quite a time trying to place the blame for punch marks. Some blame the small town man and others the city man. I, myself, think that is about an even break, as I have seen it done in both small and large towns. But why try to put the blame on one or the other. If these men that are trying to place the blame would put as much of their time into trying to help stop it, they would be doing some good. As far as who is the better man, the small town or city man? I can show you some real good men in small towns and some in cities. There are also some very poor projectionists in both. Some who would make better street sweepers than they do projectionists.

It is up to the film exchanges to put their shoulder to the wheel. Without their help punching will go on as before. To date I have not seen where any exhange has sent out any literature to managers or projectionists to try and stop punching.

Another thing that the projectionist is doing is that when he works out some little attachment for the machine or has an automatic stop on his rewind, that he has figured out himself, he usually "hogs" his idea. How much better it would be if he would pass it along to the next one so as to help out some man who has not been able to remedy similar trouble.

It is time that the large and small town men throw up the sponge and pull together for the good of the game. Send in your little helps to the Projectionist Department where others can get the same good of them that you do. Don't be afraid that someone will laugh at your ideas. True, there is always someone that will "crab," but let them "crab." Where would you be to-day if you could not get help when you needed it?

Sure, I expect some "know-it-all" to have a come-back to this letter, but let him come if he can show us where he never needed help we will have to get a glass case for him.

Another thing that I think we have all noticed of late is the way film is scratched. It seems that the projectionist is forgetting that these scratches look bad on the screen. Also that as the film gets older and the scratches fill with dirt that they show up more on the screen. It is time that more care is given to the film all around. The waxing that is done in some of the exchanges is a crime. They might as well take and hold a piece of wax on top and bottom and let it go through that way. Oil, you will notice, is generally found on the left-hnd side of the film, as you look at it when running through the projector. Where does it come from? Most of it finds its way out of the intermittent movement and on to the star shaft. From there to the sprocket and then is thrown on to the film. Also it comes out of the upper and lower sprocket bearings and then to the sprocket, then on the film. Keep these sprockets clean and free from oil. Also keep the fire valves and your aperture plate clean. These are common faults that one will find wherever you go. Half of the projectionists' troubles come from dirty machines. Keep them clean, and with the type of projector with outside gears, wash them out good and clean once a month and cover the head at night with a piece of cloth; then notice the difference in the life of your gears.

Remember that oil and dirt together make a mighty poor lubricant. But for a better grinding compound that will cut the life of your gears in half, I have seen men use stick graphite on gears and never think of washing them out. The result is that it is no time before they have to put in a new set of gears. Every time that the house is swept out there is a lot of dust raised that has a way of getting through the portholes and settling on the machines. This mixed with the oil does the damage. Take and put a little oil on the end of your finger and rub your thumb on it and you will see how nice and smooth it is. Then take and sprinkle a little dirt on and rub your thumb over it and see how gritty it is.

COMMENT:

You have "hit the nail on the head" with your suggestion for improving general projection conditions. Only by passing around all stray ideas can the average of projection be bettered. A visitor can seldom go into a projection-room without seeing a device, a hook-up, a scheme of control or some such idea that is new to him. If the originator of the idea would only make a sketch of it or describe it sufficiently so that a drawing can be made, a good many thousands of projectionists instead of a few would benefit from it.

As one example — consider the automatic change-over scheme. There is a constant demand from men — especially those in the smaller towns — for simple cheap methods of changing over. Yet few ideas on this topic are received and printed.

What is the reason?

We believe it is due to a belief on the part of inventor that no one would be interested in the particular system he has devised and put together. Of course this attitude is wrong. Even though your idea is the same as a number of others are using it is still of great interest to thousands of men in states many miles from yours.

For some time now we have been publishing letters from both small town and big town projectionists. At first you may have noticed how one side put every scrap of blame on the other faction. Then as time went on and champions of both sizes of towns became aware that people are much the same whatever the population of their burg the language became slightly less violent until at the present time the writers are dividing the blame. Which is quite the right thing to do. As we have so often said in these columns, there is as much damage done to films in one town as another. The town doesn't cause the harm — it's the man in the town.

Neither does the wage paid the man determine his ability — at least not in the majority of cases. Unfortunately in many instances, the small town man is still receiving the wages of 1910, even though his own knowledge and competency has been added to until it is the equal of his city brother. If the small town man "gets down on himself and his profession" because of these conditions, he is liable to let his work get sloppy and unfinished. But this, we believe, is not the usual happening. As a general rule the small town man gets his education in or near his home town — and it is a mighty good education too — then leaves and takes up projecting in a city, with a naturally increased labor scale. Others prefer to remain at home, even though the remuneration is less, because of the fact that relatives or acquaintances are of more value to them than more pay. Thus we have the good men, both in the city and in the country — and there is no difference between them.

Frankly, we do not know what will be the next move of the Exchange. We hope that they have reached the apex of poor inspection and treatment of film. But that is merely a hope. Through experience we have found that it is impossible to do business with the Exchange Manager direct or with the man over him. Those over him seem to take no interest in the routine of the Exchange and invariably take the word of the Exchange Manager in preference to the word of a disinterested person. There seems to be but one thing to do and that is to go on as we have been going on the past few years, doing what we can. When a bad case of mutilation or inspection is called to our attention we take it up with the Exchange. Maybe promises of better work are made; more often nothing is heard from the protest. But sooner or later the truth must sink in, even in the most ivory of heads, and when that happens we all know that Exchanges will be something else than a mere shipping point.

Some time ago the writer of the foregoing letter sent us a sketch of an oil protector for the Simplex machine. We submitted the sketch to the Precision Machine Company and in due time received a reply. The illustration was made to accompany the description and everything was ready for printing when the printers' strike materialized. Now all the printed matter and cuts are at the printer's and cannot be reached. Regretfully we must withhold this story until better times. As it is, the NEWS has done well to get out a Projection Department in each issue, even though the material contained in it has not always been up to our usual standard. All we can say is "Watch for the first few issues when we return to our larger size," which we hope will be soon. There are several articles coming that will be of value to everyone. And they are but the beginning of many more.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

An Excellent Booklet

ONCE in a while a manufacturer will prepare a bulletin or booklet which carries real information, but the majority of such literature is practically worthless to the prospective purchaser and user.

There is no reason why business literature cannot be written from the viewpoint of the man who ultimately will use the equipment but few writers have seemed to realize this fact. It is not enough to fill a certain number of pages with text matter, illustrations and diagrams. Statistics either in column form or in paragraphs are at their best, uninteresting. But when facts are gathered together in a coherent story, every paragraph of which teaches and instructs while maintaining interest, the firm publishing the material has produced a work of real value to itself and industry.

The new booklet "Weather — and the story of how it is manufactured," issued by the Carrier Engineering Corporation, is one of the few pieces of business literature which come up to the standard set above.

In this book the story of manufactured weather is told in such a way that a novice can understand it and what is more important, apply the principles to his own business.

Several motion-picture laboratories have already installed the system of air conditioning treated in this book. Exchanges are coming to see the advantages of keeping the moisture content of the air in film storage vaults at the best figure for the year around. Even the best theatres are becoming educated to the possibilities of scientific air treatment.

For these reasons we are suggesting to laboratory and exchange managers and theatre owners that they request a copy of this book on "Weather." It will be well worth their while to learn the facts making up the book.

Formula For Shutter Positions

L. G. No. 1180;

How far from the lens should the shutter be set according to the distance of the screen, to prevent flickering?

REPLY:

This question is a bit vague but we believe we know what the writer means. He wants to know what the rule is (if there is such a rule) by which a man can set his shutter a certain number of inches from the lens with a certain throw in feet.

We have never heard of a positive rule of this sort. With the optical system as flexible as the one now in use, the formulation of such a rule would be an exceedingly difficult task.

The shutter is usually and best set according to local conditions as they exist. By this we mean that the shutter can best be set after the projector is installed and the remainder of the optical system adjusted.

After the projector is in place, the arc is struck and the lamp house moved back or forth until the right sized spot is obtained on the aperture plate. Of course the film will not have been threaded. Then by propping open the fire shutter the screen will be illuminated with a clear field. With the projection room dark it will be possible to see clearly the beam of light as it leaves the front element of the objective. At a point a few inches from this front element the beam will come to a "neck" or will narrow down to its smallest diameter, from which point it again diverges to the screen. This point of narrowest diameter is the proper place for the shutter.

By placing the shutter here it will be possible to cut down the width of the intercepting blade, thereby saving light. This point is generally called the "aerial image."

Now, it may be possible by the use of higher mathematics and optical laws to figure to a fraction of an inch where the "aerial image" will be formed but so far such figures have not been published.

In some theatres, conditions are abnormal causing the "aerial image" to be placed 12 to 15 inches from the front element of the lens. When this occurs the projectionist can do one of two things: compromise or buy a shutter shaft extension from manufacturers. If he can't afford the slight extra cost of the extension he usually runs his shutter as far out on the shaft as is allowable and lets it go at that.

Change in Frequencies

"Ohio" asks:

Can a 60 ampere Compensarc be used on 25 or 40 cycles? If it cannot, what is the reason?

ANSWER:

Perhaps you may have noticed that when buying alternating current machinery or devices the foremost question as asked by the manufacturer is: "What is your frequency?" This would indicate that the number of cycles play an exceedingly important part in a. c. apparatus, which is true.

You may also have noticed that for a device of the same capacity and voltage, the size varies inversely as the frequencies. That is, a 40 cycle outfit, say for example, a transformer would be larger than a 60 cycle, and one of 25 cycles still larger than the 40 cycle equipment. The reason for this increase is mostly in the weight of the iron core.

As the alternating current passes through the turns of wire wound around the iron core the iron is magnetized and sets up a magnetic field. This causes a sort of back pressure effect in the conductors and limits the flow of current. Now the amount of iron, or as it is more often referred to, the cross section is settled upon to a certain extent by the frequency of the circuit on which it is to be used.

To save weight and cost this cross section is cut down to as low a figure as possible and still give results without over-heating.

If this same device, we will assume it is a Compensarc made for 60 cycles — should be connected to a 40 cycle supply, it would be found that the iron was not sufficient to provide the required "back pressure" and more than normal current would flow. In some instances this abnormal current would burn out the device, but at least it would make itself evident by unusual heating of the core and case.

For purposes of illustrations, the reduction in frequency can be likened to a gradual approach toward direct current. And everyone knows what happens when inductive apparatus is connected to a source of d. c.

Newman Redecorates Royal Theatre Without Interference to Patrons

THE Royal Theatre at 1020 Main Street, Kansas City, is at present in a condition comparable to the task of entirely making a bed, even to changing the mattress, without disturbing the occupant. The house is being remodeled and redesigned throughout, yet, impossible as it may seem, performances are going on all the time just the same. The seating capacity is being enlarged 200 seats. Although the work is not yet near completion, some of the more complicated portions of the work have been finished.

The Royal ranks to-day with the "best houses" and is in no way in the ranks of the "has beens," although it is not, of course, five years ahead of the times as it was when built by Frank L. Newman. The owner has determined that the theatre should have the latest equipment in lighting and mechanical effects in connection with the scenic productions that are to be used with the photoplays, and a beautiful and costly interior that will render the Royal — and Royal is a fitting name — one of the finest and costliest and most exquisite of the smaller theaters in the country.

The floors have been changed to select oak polished and all chairs are to be of the latest make. The balcony loge floors have been re-stepped, improving the lines, and the floor work is laid over solid concrete. Marble wainscotes are to be used everywhere for beauty and cleanliness. This marble has been little used in this city and was adopted for its soft blending texture and color.

The main auditorium and stage are entirely redesigned, the new interior being in the Adam pattern, and the paneling of the ceiling in the center will be handled in the richest manner. The lighting effects will be as complete as those of the Newman, also owned by Frank L. Newman and said to be the most gorgeous in the United States in that respect.

The layman would not be impressed, perhaps, with the detail that to obtain the effects desired 100 switches and 50 dimmers are required.

The stage will be reconstructed to accommodate electrical and mechanical changes. The orchestra will be increased to sixteen musicians and the organ will be enlarged.

The women's room will be redsigned in the Colonial period and the men's room will be in Flemish treatment. The nursery and play rooms will be entirely done over as well.

Magnificent new draperies are being designed to correspond with the interior, which will be a Polochromatic blending of colors with old ivory and antique gold. Special electric light fixtures are being designed in polychrome coloring. The work is being rushed as far as possible, in order not to interfere with the comport of the theater's patrons.

C. A. L. says: Another Man Pledges

I wish to put in my application to become a member of the National Anti-Misframe League. I have been a projectionist for about four years and have always tried to keep my film in as good shape as possible and am pretty sure that all my film leaves in better shape than it came in. I do not use a punch and never have.

I never have had any real trouble with my machines. We use the Powers 6A and they are in good shape. I always remedy all misframes and bad patches.

Some Letters from Readers

C. K. GORDON, Winchester, Ind., has this to say:

I am a small town operator and I would like to join the N. A. M. L. if you take on other than union men.

I have been reading in the News each week about the N. A. M. L. and the part it is playing in the treatment of films. And I know it is doing good because I receive better films when they have an N. A. M. L. tag on them than when they don't. I believe as Mr. Garvin and your corresponding Christopher, because we receive our pictures just as soon as the large houses in the city get through with them, and they nearly always have punch marks in them.

I am enclosing two pieces of film, one of 17 pictures and 15 punch marks. (This was at the beginning of part four. Why did they need it there?) and the other of 18 pictures and 16 punch marks. You can see that the film is new and hasn't been run very many times, and then the last of all at the end of part five where it said "The End" there were 10 punch marks and only 18 pictures. They were all made by the same punch. There are only two answers, it is either the city man or his helper.

Then Correspondent Christopher says:

Here goes for a line or two.

Enclosed you will find a membership blank for the N. A. M. L.

Send this fellow a bunch of labels, button and card for when his name is added to the list it makes our city 100 per cent. N. A. M. L.

We had one fellow in our city who was one of those "I don't give a care" kind but thanks to Providence (not R. I.), that we have gotten rid of him and he was the only one who wouldn't join but the fellow whose name I am sending you is in his place and one word about the N. A. M. L. to him and he said "Where's the blank?"

Well, this is all now as I have so much to do I am on the go all the time.

Chief, four houses or theatres and out getting members for the N. A. M. L. That's all I have to do.

Yours for boosting the N. A. M. L. "Over the top."

Let's have the United States 100% N. A. M. L.

Down with that sloppish "I don't care" kind of operators.

That's my slogan.

Hickman, Kentucky.

Friend Christopher:

Have just finished reading your interesting letter in the NEWS and will say, "Atta Boy." I am, like many other small town operators, for you. Some time soon you will have the opportunity to read what my opinion is of the big town projectionists. But let's stay together, all small town operators, and some day or any time we'll show them they are not the only ones that can thread a machine or turn up an arc.

JOHN R. WRIGHT.

I have just finished reading an article written by "Christopher," whoever he may be, for as this is but the second issue of the NEWS that I have received—I haven't got a line on all of the fellows.

Anyhow, I think his article registers a "Bull's Eye" in more ways than one—though he does take up quite a bit of territory.

Now, just at this time I happen to be what you might term "A Small Town Man." In fact the town is so small that one has to take a pretty powerful glass to see it at all. But in the past few years I have handled some fair-sized jobs, and worked on all kinds of equipment.

And after all the facts are simmered down you have this—"Good" and "Bad."

The picture booth is just like every other spot on this earth. In it you find the good and the bad—and I am not alluding to the Projectionist alone either, when I say this. In some first-class houses I have seen equipment that I would not dirty my hands on.

Yes, it is an inevitable fact that we have the good and the bad, and there is no remedy. Just as long as this world rolls along we will continue to have the good and the bad.

The good?

Simply this—when a Projectionist goes on duty he takes an oil can and lubricates his machines, cleans his sprockets, aperture, objective lens, condensers and then takes a greased rag and grooms the machines from top to bottom.

After this is done he prepares his film for showing — and he has then shaken up about enough dirt for one day so he sweeps out and puts things in order for the day's routine.

Now — providing that he has decent equipment — he projects a clear steady picture upon the screen. He keeps his machines in repair at all times and takes PRIDE in his work.

How many Projectionists can fill the bill as "GOOD?"

The "bad?"

Yes, two classes. Those that know no better and those that do know better but do not care, and take no pride in their work. The latter are hopeless — so kick the seat out of their trousers. Those that know no better deserve the right to learn. We all had to learn and so must they learn.

Last winter I visited the Strand, Minneapolis, Minn. The shutter was limited to about a five-inch streak — and as that is not as bad as ten inches — I did not blame the Projectionist but cussed the manager —" to myself."

In the best of houses you will find the bad, and in the poorest of houses you will find the good. There is but one course to pursue. Give a helping hand to the worthy, and the unworthy — RIDE THEIR FRAME.

For the benefit of those that have no good method of marking film connections I am enclosing a sample of system, and trust that you may deem it practical enough to reproduce in your Projection Department.

Truly yours,
G. E. SHEILS.

Argus Sales Conference

The annual convention of branch managers and salesmen of The Argus Enterprises, Cleveland, was held at the Hotel Winton, November 14 to 18.

About 40 representatives of this progressive, rapidly growing organization met to consider developments and new ideas of the company and to formulate their selling campaign for the coming year.

The Argus Enterprises, organized only a few years ago, have had a remarkable growth and have extended their business to international activities. They claim to be the most complete organization in the entire motion picture industry, their many activities covering the writing, producing and distributing of photo-plays, educational and industrial pictures; the manufacture and distribution of projection equipment, and the supplying of complete theater equipment.

Much of the time during the convention was spent on the new improved Argus-Mazda Universal Adapter for Mazda lamp projection, and the Argus Crystal Bead Screen. These two Argus products are meeting with increasing popularity because of their great efficiency in matters of insuring better screen illumination and of reducing operating costs.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE"

Argus produces educational film for Cleveland Community Chest Drive.

Pictorial 1-sheet poster will be mailed on request.

An important part of the big publicity campaign inaugurated in Cleveland, November 18, for the annual Community Chest Drive for $5,000,000 is a very interesting two-reel motion picture made from an allegory written by Robert McLaughlin, the playwright, and produced by The Argus Enterprises of Cleveland.

In his usual inimitable style, Mr. McLaughlin has built a very beautiful story around the three Biblical characters, Faith, Hope and Charity. The story and the film are exceptionally interesting and will no doubt have a great influence in bringing the Cleveland drive to a successful conclusion. The film will be shown during the week of the drive in every motion picture theater in Cleveland.

Emlay's High Speed Camera Tested

TEST pictures of the new Stereospeed camera, the invention of Earle Emlay, were made last week and reports indicate that they more than realize the anticipations of the Motion Picture Producing Company of America which controls it. The camera's maximum ability to take 384 pictures a second opens a new field for its exploitation aside from that of furnishing entertainment in public theatres.

Several requests for its rental have been received by the Company from manufacturers of scientific organizations in various parts of the country. Its ability to analyze the motion of high-power machinery, etc., is expected to require its activity mostly in this field.

Wages For Assistant

R. S., Philadelphia, Pa.:

My assistant asked me to ask you what you think would be the right wages for an assistant who works nights, 6:30 to 11, six days a week and Saturday matinee, 2 to 5 p. m.

He has no shows to carry.

REPLY:

A difficult question. We should say it depends on his training, whether he is really an assistant or merely a projectionist learning the game. His time of labor figures up to 30 hours weekly.

As an apprentice his earning power would probably depend on the size of town, seating capacity and quality of theatre. But offhand, we should say that an apprentice should receive not less than one-half of the pay of the regular man, and preferably more than this to keep him interested in his work until such a time as he steps into the shoes of a "regular."

On the other hand, if he is a projectionist hired to assist you, the difference in wages for equal hours should not be over 10 per cent.

The Complete Plan Book

Two Autographed Subjects

"Our Children" and "In Middies and Bloomers"

AUTOGRAPHED Films, over the signature of Carlisle Ellis, who has been working for Uncle Sam in the film end of Government activities, is sponsor for two short reel subjects under the titles of "Our Children" and "In Middies and Bloomers."

The first mentioned is sort of children's hospital clinic, being an intimate view of the proper way to rear Young America and showing what the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor did in the way of educating Gadsden, Ala., how to live and play better so far as the children were concerned.

The reel is interesting, contains many bits of comedy which register effectively because they are the unconscious little tricks of babies, both white and black, as they came before the visiting Government nurses and physicians who were conducting an educational campaign in the town named. Such subjects usually drag because an attempt is made to work in a story and because there is no action. This one holds attention because of the little shavers; they show them from the "fat and wiggly" age up to about twelve years, and because the scenes are always changing to new characters and to new demonstrations of what the work the Government is going along this line really amounts to. There are no "actors" in this. All who appear in the scenes are just people.

Of course some of the grown-ups can't resist the temptation to take a peep at the camera occasionally and most of them manage to look uncomfortable when being "shot," but this does not detract from the value of the film. Length of the production is stated as 2,050 feet.

"In Middies and Bloomers" isn't as entertaining as "Our Children," since it covers a more commonplace subject, the activities of the Y. W. C. A. in its Summit Lake (near West Point) summer camp for girls and the Bear Mountain camp for school girls, also a Y. W. C. A. enterprise, and because the participants in the scenes aren't so interesting as are the kiddies.

This picture, however, does have a wealth of beautiful scenery as a background and some good water stuff. With the exception of a few hundred feet, there is no attempt to inject a story into this production either. It is just views of the two camps and of the girls as they live during the vacations that the Y. W. C. A. provides

This one is stated as 1,850 feet in length. Mr. Ellis is the producer of both subjects, in so far as it has been necessary to title the sequences and tie the scenes together.

Plans for releasing have not been fully made. The first picture mentioned will be under Government supervision in part at least and the second will go out through the Y. M. C. A.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Universal Screen Magazine - No. 44

IF the exhibitor is ambitious to act in the capacity of teacher as well as entertainer he can do no better service than subscribing to the policy of running an animated Magazine on his program. No one is so wise but what he can glean a little more knowledge from this form of screen amusement. The field is inexhaustible. The Magazine can take the spectator into the realm of science; it can invite him on a little journey to the hidden spaces of the earth; it can introduce him to the wheels of progress; it can humor his vanity in the art of make-believe; it can point out to him memorable figures of yesterday; it can appeal to his sense of humor through life's little jokes; in fact it takes him by the hand and teaches him. And what he sees will not be forgotten. The Magazine teaches without making the onlooker conscious that he is being taught. He accepts it all as entertainment.

Universal is acting as a public benefactor with its Screen Magazine since there is no limit in the scope of the camera. It has revealed things which have heretofore been sacred to the laboratory. And by offering a variety of subjects there is always something of interest to everyone. Perhaps it has never entered your mind what an interesting study the Grand Central Terminal presents. You have only caught its architectural side. Here the camera takes you right into the yards and shows you how the trains are manipulated. Over seven hundred of these enter the Terminal a day, and you wonder at the system which guides them through without a single mishap. You see the crowds, you catch a glimpse of the dispatcher's office and the work that is achieved there. For it is the dispatcher who has you in the hollow of his hand once you have stepped aboard the train. Your safety rests with him.

Do you like shrimp salad? You've probably not given much thought about this member of the lobster family. We will tell you or rather the Magazine will show you that once the shrimps are caught, they are exposed to the elements and separated from the shells by dexterous footwork upon the part of the fisherman. He literally puts his stamp of approval on them. And a vital subject is revealed for the ladies. It shows the feminine sex how to choose their future husbands by handwriting. Weakness of character is revealed through a certain style. And so forth ad infinitum. The Magazine concludes with an interesting close-up of Kit Dalton, who is acknowledged to be the only living representative of the old outlaw days. He displays a revolver given him by Jesse James. And he certainly looks as if he meant business in his time. A wonderful face. A spry and erect figure for a man seventy-seven years of age. The Magazine surely holds the mirror up to nature, history, science and art.—LAURENCE REID.

"THE STEEL KING"

Will Satisfactorily Entertain Generally

ALTHOUGH the title implies a frenzied finance theme this picture comfortably dwells in a social atmosphere and portrays the familiar trio, a married couple, and the other man.

When the "Steel King's" father was gardener for an aristocratic family he had been unjustly discharged years before because the son had fought with one of the guests, and after this same son became rich on steel he finds the high brow family in dire straits financially and is able to purchase their mansion and marry the haughty daughter.

And then the guest whom the youth had thrashed years before came back pursued by a determined creditor and tried to persuade the wife to elope with him and thus obtain the fortune settled upon her but she found that she loved her husband now as much as she had previously loved his money and catches the bullet from the revolver held by the villain and thus saves her husband for whom the shot was intended and after her recovery the couple found happiness in each other's arms.

Is well directed, the continuity is even, and cast, sets and photography are all that could be desired.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences will register about as follows: Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, good puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released November 24.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

June Elvidge and Montagu Love, popular World stars, are featured in "The Steel King," which will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This is not a story of Wall Street but is described as purely and simply a love story. It is not a story of high finance but deals with a millionaire's romance.

A middle aged millionaire purchases the estate of a proud but impecunious family who had once discharged his father as gardener because the son had fought with one of their guests.

He felt that having now bought the estate he was squaring old accounts for discharging his father so unjustly and then he marries the daughter. But the girl does not love him at all but needs the money to maintain her social position.

It is at this time that the man he had quarrelled with as a boy returns from the South and tries to induce the wife to elope with him. The millionaire discovers this plot and tells his wife that if she will make over all the property he gave her over to her father he will let her secure a divorce.

She finds that the plotter has deceived her in many statements and feeling also that her husband is tired of her she writes each of them a note of farewell and starts away alone.

The wife is seen by the would-be eloper and he embraces her just as her husband arrives upon the scene. It is the big scene of the photodrama and is described as wonderfully thrilling.

And out of all these romantic circumstances two hearts are joined in what looks like a promise of great future happiness.

PROGRAM READER

When he was a boy his father was unjustly discharged as gardener by this wealthy and aristocratic family.

And simply because the boy had fought with one of the guests.

When the boy grew to manhood and amassed millions he took a peculiar delight in coming back to that very same town and buying the estate from the formerly wealthy but now proud and impecunious family.

But he went farther than that. He married the pampered girl of this same proud family. He loved her.

And the girl frankly confessed that she only married him for his money in order to maintain herself and family in the high social position to which they had become accustomed.

It is at this time that the man whom the youth had quarrelled with as a boy, returned and made love to the wife.

This spelled trouble. And the final outcome is graphically depicted in the World picture coming to this theatre next week; "The Steel King."

June Elvidge and Montague Love are the stars.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture it would be well to emphasize in all your advertising and publicity that it is not a story of high finance in Wall Street but purely and simply the romance of a millionaire. And then you should capitalize in every way possible on the names of the two stars as they each have a following. Announce that it is an Apfel production for World Pictures and spread as many photographs and cuts of the two stars as is possible to place. No stunt advertising would be in place.

"WINGS OF THE MORNING"

Farnum Followers Will Like This One

HERE is a story by Louis Tracy that fits William Farnum like a glove Thus the production will assuredly more than please the many admirers of this star. It should also undoubtedly entertain those who like the heroic; the chivalrous chap who meekly accepts disgrace rather than compromise a bad woman by telling the truth; the man who bravely rescues a strange young woman and tenderly cares for her on a desert isle; etc.

The scenarist, abetted by the director, has cleverly succeeded in putting everything in this picture and of course this provides plenty of action although the theme is so familiar that it does not furnish any suspense to speak of. The locale enables the cameraman to obtain some picturesque scenes of the isle and sea and the cast in support of Mr. Farnum is very good.

For this style of story and for this type of picture it can be proclaimed a very good production, calculated to register particularly heavy with the gallery gods and also to generally satisfy the more intelligent audiences.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and pleasing; Elite, good puller and fairly pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Workers, strong puller and greatly pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released November 24.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William Farnum is presented by William Fox in a screen version of Louis Tracy's story, "Wings Of The Morning" at the ——— theatre beginning ——— for a ——— days run.

Louise Lovely, Hershall Mayall and Frank Elliott have principal roles in support of Mr. Farnum and the production is described as a thrilling romance on land and sea.

The young captain at a British garrison in Singapore tries to put a stop to the affair the Colonel's wife appears to be having with Lord Ventnor, also of His Majesty's service, but the wife and her admirer succeed in directing suspicion towards the young Captain and he is cashiered from the army in disgrace.

Under an assumed name the former captain enlists as a sailor on one of Sir Arthur Deane's ships. The daughter, Iris Deane was on the same ship when it went down in a terrific storm and was saved by the cashiered officer and they were the sole survivors.

Upon the desert isle they managed to exist and were able to successfully defend themselves against attacks of pirates until a ship finally came to their rescue.

This happened to be the ship that was searching for survivors and her father, Sir Arthur Deane was aboard as was also Lord Ventnor, her suitor.

When she told her father that she was engaged to the sailor who had rescued her and that he was the former Captain who had been cashiered, Lord Ventnor was furious.

In the meantime the Colonel's wife learned that Lord Ventnor had accompanied Sir Arthur Deane in the search for his daughter and became so jealous at his perfidy that she confessed to her husband the whole truth about falsely swearing away the honor of the young captain.

Then the big scene takes place when the Colonel brings the two men face to face. This production is not only described as intensely dramatic and filled with fast action but has the romantic angle enhanced by the tang of the ocean.

It is said to be one of William Farnum's best starring vehicles.

PROGRAM READER

William Farnum is coming to this theatre next week in a William Fox picture.

"Wings Of The Morning" by Louis Tracy, has been filmed and this is the star's best screen vehicle according to all reports.

The tang of the sea is said to be in this romance and thrill upon thrill in a fascinating drama that is vitally gripping.

Louis Lovely, Hershall Mayell and Frank Elliott are in support of Mr. Farnum and J. Gordon Edwards directed the production.

The young Captain is cashiered in disgrace from the army and he would have been vindicated and not his innate chivarly prevented him from compromising the honor of a woman.

But a shipwreck brought him his own romance and was the direct cause of his final victory against the enemy.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture you will naturally announce it as, "William Fox presents William Farnum," and be assured you have two names that will draw. Of course you will augment this pulling power by mentioning the story and author as the writer is also very well known: Louis Tracy's "Wings Of The Morning." Then you have three names in the cast that have drawing power in most places; Louise Lovely, Hershall Mayall and Frank Elliott. For lobby, foyer and stage decorations a tropical display suggestive of two on a desert isle is very appropriate.

"DAWN"

(BLACKTON-PATHE)

Readers of Story Will Appreciate Picture

THOSE that know the appealing theme of the story, "Dawn," by Eleanor Porter, will no doubt be drawn to the theatre to see J. Stuart Blackton's screen version. And they will enjoy the picture beyond question. But if your regular clientile like the real big stuff with a tremendous punch, this will not register very heavily with your audience.

The cutting, editing or scenario is apparently most to blame for this, although there are very few directors who are peculiarly fitted to produce the sort of a picture that this story seemed to demand. And, although the theme is appealing, it is not broad enough in general to intensely interest the average audience.

But while the picture will not score as a particularly big production in many localities it should generally satisfy as a good picture. Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer interpret their roles nicely and the photography is very good, while the sets and exteriors are appropriate. The producer aimed high but did not quite hit the bullseye, called masterpiece.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and quite pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released November 23.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Dawn," the novel by Eleanor H. Porter, has been filmed by J. Stuart Blackton for Pathe and will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

Sylvia Bremer and Robert Gordon have the leading roles. The youth had been refused by the army on account of his eyes being weak and from then on he noticed that each succeeding day seemed more foggy and he feared he would lose the sight entirely.

He was in love with Dorothy Parkman, the town belle and heiress but he heard her make a remark once that she just couldn't bear to even look at a blind person. It was then that his sufferings became acute as he realized that he might soon become an object of rity to everyone and possibly be scorned by the girl whom he loved so dearly.

The girl, unknown to the youth, persuaded her wealthy father to engage an eye specialist for him but the operation was not successful and he was absolutely blind. But during his convalescence he fell in love with the nurse whom he never saw.

And the nurse, under an assumed name, was his youthful sweetheart, Dorothy. She showed a tender devotion which he could not withstand and he bitterly compared the sweet characteristics of the nurse to the cold-heartedness of his former sweetheart, little knowing that they were one and the same.

When the discovery came to him that they were one and the same girl, through a chance careless remark of a friend, he was all broken up over it and became sarcastic toward the girl who truly loved him. But he simply thought it was pity until the truth came out.

He had a very bad opinion of Dorothy as she was with his widowed father so much and they were constantly talking over plans for a building. But when he learned that the building was being erected as a training school for the blind and that he was to be superintendent he saw that his jealousy was groundless and realized that Dorothy loved him with a true and constant love.

PROGRAM READER

Eleanor H. Porter's great novel has been filmed by J. Stuart Blackton and this Pathe picture will be shown at this theatre next week.

Sylvia Beamer and Robert Gordon are the featured players, and they have been surrounded by an excellent cast.

It is not often that a charming story of just this sort finds its way to the screen. It is quite sad at times but the sweet romance and the deep underlying thought combines to create a glowing story of love and achievement.

"Dawn" is the title of the film, which closely follows the book story.

Stricken by blindness in his early youth he feels that he must sacrifice sweetheart because he had once heard her say that she just couldn't bear to even gaze upon a blind person.

And when he became blind he remembered her former remark.

But the girl loved him and who can resist forever the love of a woman like Dorothy Parkman.

And then —

You must see this picture "Dawn" when it is shown here next week.

SUGGESTIONS

Your first good bet after you have booked the picture is to rush to the bookstore and arrange for co-operation. The novel by Eleanor H. Porter is said to have a wide vogue and the book section of any department store should be glad to tie-in with you. A private showing to the clergy and social leaders should secure many recommendations for the film as the subject matter would please them. J. Stuart Blackton has a name well known to the fans and his name should be used on all announcements. Sylvia Breamer's photographs and cuts should be displayed wherever possible.

"THE BLUE BANDANNA"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Breezy Role for Desmond in Western

WILLIAM DESMOND has a role in his newest release, "The Blue Bandanna," which brings out his good-natured personality—a personality that has been somewhat subordinated of late so that he might display his versatility in serious offerings.

"The Blue Bandanna" scores in a modest way. It doesn't offer any pretentions in the shape of originality or the execution of the familiar idea from which it is moulded. Rather does it please because of its humorous characterization and the human touches conveyed by the director and the star. Mr. Desmond appears as a tenderfoot who journeys to the West for his health. And before he returns with his heart functioning properly you will look upon him routing villainy as expressed by stage-coach robbers and clearing up the good name of the ex-convict, the father of the "only" girl. Not much to it is there? But the simple story is fortified with a wealth of humorous high lights which are brought forward emphatically by the star.

It is an average Western as far as action is concerned. Russell Simpson gives a life like portrayal as a Western farmer and Jean Acker makes a personable daughter. The farmhands are not so genuine.—Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William Desmond, the popular Western star, comes to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ——— in his newest photoplay entitled "The Blue Bandanna." This picture is a romantic drama enacted against Western backgrounds. It generates a full size quota of action which is depicted in the shape of hard riding, and stage-coach robberies, Mr. Desmond plays the role of Jerry Jerome, a young New York millionaire, who, when he discovers that his overworked nerves are strained to the breaking point, goes West for his health. Coincident with Jerry's arrival at Jim Yancy's farm, a series of mysterious stage robberies are inaugurated, and in attempting to solve these and capture the bandits Jerry frames a fake hold-up, which leads to his being suspected of the crimes.

Of course his reason for meddling in the affair is Yancy's daughter, Ruth, who not only captures his heart but puts him through a course of domestic sprouts by making him the "maid" of all work at the farmhouse. The boys at the ranch dub him "Lizzie" but Jerry turns loose on his tormentors and evens the account. When he discovers that Yancy is an ex-convict who has reformed, but who is blackmailed into assisting in the hold-ups, he captures the bandit who is holding exposure over Yancy's head. This is an exciting Western and it gives the star a role appropriate to his dynamic personality. The picture is well punctuated with humorous high-lights and the romance carries an appeal. Mr. Desmond is supported by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

Jerry Jerome was ordered West for his health and arriving in the "wild woolly" he decided to hang up his hat in Jim Yancy's home. He didn't care much about performing the domestic duties on the ranch but it pleased Ruth Yancy. And he would willingly do anything to oblige her. Now the stage was being held up frequently by a man who wore a blue bandanna and when Jerry found this disguise hidden in Yancy's barn he was a trifle worried. How he discovered the bandit—who wasn't Yancy—although the old man knew a lot about the robberies, how he turned the tables on the real criminal, how he won the girl, are events which compose a sure-fire melodrama—a melodrama that carries action and suspense in every scene. It all happens in "The Blue Bandanna," William Desmond's newest picture which comes to this theatre next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The William Desmond pictures don't vary enough to make any extra exploitation so it would be best to concentrate upon the star himself and emphasize his interesting personality. Make mention that no actor on the screen surpasses him in the delineation of Western roles. Make use of the title in catch lines, teasers, and in newspaper exploitation. Mention that the spectator will see an old-fashioned stage-coach robbery and the thrills that go with it. Tell that Mr. Desmond can always be depended upon to furnish good entertainment. If you go in for atmosphere you might dress your ushers in cowboy regalia with blue bandannas for their neckwear. Emphasize that it is a rollicking story of the West with the star shining to splendid advantage. Mention that Russell Simpson is also in the cast. There is no better character actor on the screen.

CATCH LINES

He was an Eastern tenderfoot, but he carried a hefty punch in his right arm. See William Desmond in "The Blue Bandanna," a picture of adventure and thrills.

———

See the good-natured William Desmond in the colorful Western, "The Blue Bandanna." You will be thrilled with a stage-coach robbery and amused with ranch life.

———

He came West for his health and found it. And he also found the most wonderful girl in the world. See William Desmond in "The Blue Bandanna."

"FIGHTING CRESSY"

(J. D. HAMPTON-PATHE)

Blanche Sweet Scores in Harte Story

"FIGHTING CRESSY," Jesse Hampton's adaptation of Bret Harte's story, "Cressy," is mostly a study in character sketches but so well are they interpreted that the lack of action is hardly noticeable The story is not compact enough to keep the spectator at close attention, which leads us to state that it could be told in five reels rather than six. The result would be more satisfying since it would tend to make the action more spontaneous. Bret Harte cannot be excelled in drawing Western characterization and if his action occasionally falters when given screen expression his figures are always interesting enough to sustain the story.

The plot of "Fighting Cressy" has to do with a feud carried on by two old settlers over the boundary line of their property. Romance enters to scatter sunshine when Cressy, the daughter, of one of the pioneers, loses her heart to a member of the rival camp. Before the climax is reached you are greeted with picturesque scenes in which Cressy is the dominant figure. You catch the glamour of the early days of California, days of '49. These are the scenes — charged as they are with quaint humor and atmosphere, pathos and poetry, that embrace you and lift you from your environment.

Blanche Sweet in the title role gives an exquisite performance — one which is filled with charm and feeling. She can humanize a Bret Harte heroine better than any other actress on the screen. Her absence from the camera until recently has brought depth to her intepretative ability. She makes Cressy an unforgettable figure. A splendid cast has been assembled to interpret the remaining characters. Russell Simpson again demonstrates his ability to enact a lifelike portrayal. Others include Edward Peil, Pell Trenton and Frank Lanning.— Length, 6 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

Supervised by Jesse D. Hampton.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Fighting Cressy," Blanche Sweet's newest film production, which comes to the ——— threatre beginning ———, is an adaptation of Bret Harte's virile story, "Cressy." It is a tale of the pioneer days of the West where men and women lived according to their own code of morals. Its chief character is Cressy, the daughter of Hiram McKinstry, who had migrated from Kentucky in his search for gold. The father thought the world of the girl yet in his worship of her he found time to carry on a feud with Old Man Harrison — a feud which had arisen over the boundary line of their property.

Cressy, being the prettiest girl of the community, attracts the attention of John Ford, the school master, whose sole object in winning her is to add her name to his list of conquests. But she does not respond to his attentions inasmuch as she has fallen in love with one of Harrison's henchmen, Joe Masters. Whenever this young man would attempt to display his affection for her she coldly shows him his place. And this is done when he saves her from degradation at the hands of Ford. A time comes when the feud reaches the danger point and Joe is shot by one of the McKinstry men. Cressy hides him in the barn and successfully holds it until her father arrives. And he is not brought out until the feud is ended. It could not be maintained with two members of the rival factions in love.

Bret Harte has painted the pioneer West in his familiar way. The story is vital and vivid with all the Hartean ingredients. His skill at plot and characterization is emphasized here to a marked degree. The story is embellished with picturesque locations and faithful atmosphere. Miss Sweet makes Cressy an unforgettable character because of the depth of feeling and understanding she puts into the portrayal. She is ably assisted by Russell Simpson and others.

PROGRAM READER

You all know Bret Harte—you all know that he stands supreme as the best story teller of the West that ever lived. He has done a great deal for pictures for he has brought us into intimate contact with a people who will never fade from memory—a people who lived and loved and fought and drank in the days of the pioneer West. Manager ——— takes great pleasure in presenting at the ——— beginning ——— an adaptation of his stirring tale, "Cressy," entitled "Fighting Cressy," with Blanche Sweet in the title role. Enough to state that it is one of the most entertaining pictures of the early days of California that has ever been produced. Miss Sweet is an ideal Bret Harte heroine. Somehow she makes the lovable character unforgettable. You will see her the central figure of a vivid and vital tale. And you will leave thoroughly entertained.

Star's Admirers Should Enthuse Over This

HERE we have Anita Stewart in a role where she rises from sordid surroundings and wins fame as a theatrical star in a single night. And it is an ideal part for her. Conway Tearle registers strongly in an appealing role. This drama has its locale in London and is very well directed.

It is well mounted in every respect and convincingly realistic The cast in support of Miss Stewart and Mr. Tearle is well balanced and capable. This is an excellent story and cleverly adapted from the stage success, and the screen version possesses the intrinsic worth to completely satisfy any kind of an audience and Miss Stewart's admirers will enthuse over this one.

When a scene shifter drops a pot of paint upon the stage and she cries, "Mind the Paint," the idea is put into a song and the little chorus girl is allowed to sing it, springing into immediate fame. Directed by Wilfred North.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Anita Stewart is the star in the screen version of sir Arthur Wing Pinero's great stage success, "Mind The Paint Girl" which is due for a ——— days run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is a First National Attraction and Conway Tearle is Miss Stewart's leading man.

Lily Upiohn was born and brought up in what is practically known as the slum district of London and after the death of her father she secures a position in the chorus at the big Pandora Theatre.

One day when the composer was seeking in vain for a theme in a new song which he thought essential to the show's success a scene painter accidently drops a pot of paint down from his scaffolding. Lily screamed, "Mind The Paint."

It was this that gave the composer his inspiration and he wrote the song entitled "Mind The Paint." and Lily was allowed to sing it and became famouse overnight as the "Mind The Paint Girl."

The real heart interest in the story is where a fine army officer resigns from the army rather than go away with his comrades. He wanted to be near Lily the star while waiting for her to become his wife. She was now known as Lily "Parradell" and her mother tried hard to assume the aristocratic attitude toward the world.

When Lily is courted by Lord Francombe the former army officer, her old sweetheart, discovers them together and this is the big scene of the play and is described as tremendously impressing in the screen version also.

PROGRAM READER

She was born and brought up by poor parents in the slum district of London.

And this girl won fame in a single night and became the star of the famous Pandora Theatre.

A composer was nearly driven to distraction when he realized that his show needed a new song to enliven it and he couldn't think of a single idea.

And then the inspiration came like a flash. It happened when the scene painter dropped a pot of paint from his scaffold and it splashed the stage.

A little chorus girl cried, "Mind the paint." And "Mind The Paint" was the name of the big song success that he immediately wrote. This same little chorus girl sang the song and was made in a single evening.

It is the fact that she was soon ardently courted by two fine youths that make this story interesting.

The screen version of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's great stage success, "Mind The Paint Girl." is coming to this theatre next week.

It is a First National Attraction and Anita Stewart is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature you should dwell strongly upon the fact that it is the screen version of the stage success by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero and that it is another First National Attraction with Anita Stewart as the star. Mention also that Conway Tearle is her leading man and you have a galaxy of names that are sure box office pullers. Stunt advertising may be indulged in by dressing a pretty girl in overalls and sending her about town with a brush and a pot of paint. No sign or placard is necessary. When they see the announcements elsewhere they will know what the title "Mind The Paint Girl" means. It's a sort of a "teaser" tie-in that will arouse curiosity.

CATCH LINES

With one leap she covered the long distance from sordid surroundings to stardom overnight.

———

She had to choose between two ardent lovers. And when she rendered her decision they were both disappointed.

"THE BELOVED CHEATER"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Excellently Developed Story of Original Theme

LEW CODY is the central figure in this feature an interesting study of the "he-vamp" at his favorite recreation, the "hunting" of the feminine sex. The role fits him exactly. This fact and a highly original and quite probable story, except for an incident or two, is responsible for a production which should register as entertainment with any audience.

The producers had a ticklish subject to handle, since allowing any suggestion of sensuosness to creep in, would have been fatal to its entertainment value. It is to the credit of Director Wm. Christy Cabanne, Mr. Cody and the capable supporting cast that this slip has not been made.

Mr. Cody depicts a somewhat familiar type of the modern male. He contracts the "love making" habit, learns all the rules of the game and can be said to be a grand success at it.

There is no attempt to point a moral. The philanderer doesn't reform. He just "lets one get by," perhaps on the theory that losing one "bird" from his "bag" isn't of any great importance when one is such a successful "hunter."

The production has been beautifully staged, the direction is characteristic of Cabanne and the photography is excellent.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Beloved Cheater," pronounced one of the most unique photoplays of the season, comes to the ———— for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The production boasts of a theme which is entirely different than any picture heretofore presented, and it is in this that it is especially recommended. There is a world of entertainment promised in the fundamental idea of the story, that of incidents in the life of two very unusual people, one a wealthy bachelor who makes love to all women just for the satisfaction of winning their regard, much as a hunter likes to stalk difficult game or the fisherman angle for the most elusive of fish, and a prudish young girl who denies her fiance kisses because she thinks the custom "disgusting."

The picture is a close view of the wooing of the professional lover, a philanderer who courts like an artist. There is nothing sensuous or suggestive in his way of making women care for him.

He knows all the little weaknesses of the feminine sex and plays upon them as a violinist might upon the strings of his instrument.

What happens when the girl of the story enters his life makes an interesting picture. Especially so since there is not the usual conventional ending in sight from the first sequence. Debonair Lew Cody has the role of the philanderer and plays it so well that he may be likened to a male Theda Bara. There is a strong supporting cast and the picture has been given a sumptuous production, big sets and beautiful clothes being a part of every scene. Wm. Christy Cabanne directed with skill and foresight since not a single sequence is offensive.

PROGRAM READER

You who have claimed that there was nothing new in the plots of photoplays must needs see "The Beloved Cheater," which arrives at this theatre beginning ————, for at last something different has been found, a story which stands in a class by itself both in point of theme and in the characters around which the incidents of the plot are woven. In the man of the story, we all know many a prototype in real life, a bachelor of his own choosing, who has reached the age of discretion and experience, wise in the ways of women, unscrupulous in his affairs with women, yet with all retaining a code of morals which releases him from the role of the common philanderer or the roue, since he "hunts" with the fine discrimination of the sportsman, caring more for chase than the game. In the woman we have equally as unique a type.

What happens when they meet is interesting and novel. There is no attempt to point a moral in this picture. Rather is it a story which you might view in real life if the roofs of the houses of this city were taken off and you were permitted to see the innermost lives of some men and some women. The end of the drama is not to be foreseen. There is no maudlin sentiment expressed. It is life-like and real, a great picture enacted by a great cast, one which has been able to handle so delicate a subject without the suggestion of cheapness or sensuousness creeping in.

CATCH LINES

"His specialty was the ladies—this debonair, handsome chap of mature years and wide experience. He kept a record of his conquests, a sort of 'notching of the gun stock' like the bad men of a Western novel."

The chink put on his slippers and for a moment the thought came that it might be pleasant to have this wonderful, charming woman to perform the task, but the momentary weakness passed and he sagely observed to himself as he watched the Chinaman at work: "Practically the same service with no obligations."

"He smiled and talked his way into the innermost soul of every woman who interested him. None were immune. It was a way he had, born of long experience in the art of playing at love and a willingness to cheat in what he paid for that which he received."

(UNIVERSAL)

Not Enough Action for Carey Here

HARRY CAREY has become such a capable interpreter of Western action that whenever this element is allowed to lose its spontaneity and vigor his pictures lose that punch which characterizes them. It may be that having a hand in writing his latest Cheyenne Harry story he lost his perspective insofar as measuring out a plethora of actionful scenes. He has provided himself more of a humorous study than what is usually his allotment. The theme itself is hoary with age—it being the familiar argument that the way to a woman's heart is through applying cave-man methods.

Cheyenne Harry has returned from Chicago without accomplishing any satisfaction from the cattle king that the latter intends to reimburse him for stealing his property. He had been humiliated by the magnate's daughter and her guests, who thinking he was some sort of savage, had behaved outrageously at the dinner table. A far-fetched scene and one that doesn't ring true. Harry becomes an outlaw after stealing the cattle king's payroll and his debt is squared when he kidnaps the daughter who has journeyed West on a hunting expedition.

Most of the action is centered upon Harry's methods in taming the spirited girl. And it becomes quite monotonous especially when you wait anxiously for some old-fashioned Harry Carey "fireworks" which are rather belated in their arrival. The story is framed against some picturesque backgrounds. Kathleen O'Connor is the girl in the case and Barney Sherry plays the cattle king, Jack Ford, who is also one of the authors, directed the feature.—Length 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Harry Carey, the popular Western actor in Universal pictures, will be seen again at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest photoplay entitled "The Gun-Fightin' Gentleman." Special interest is attached to the offering in that the star, in collaberation with Jack Ford, wrote the story. This is not his first attempt in turning out his own material. In fact he has contributed a number of "Cheyenne Harry" stories, and since he interprets this character he is always able to furnish himself an interesting role. Mr. Ford, who directed the feature, needs no introduction. His work has long been a source of admiration to those who follow the Western type of photoplay. He never fails to instill a rapid amount of action, which is always enacted against picturesque backgrounds.

"The Gun-Fightin' Gentleman" tells the story of Cheyenne Harry, whose property is in danger of being stolen from him by John Merritt, the Chicago cattle king. When Harry discovers the way things are going he journeys to the Western metropolis and boards the lion in his den. Inasmuch as he has arrived just in time for dinner Merritt's guests proceed to embarrass him with their idea of a cowboy's table manners. Provoked by their attitude he leaves and with the satisfaction that he will get even with Merritt. The opportunity presents itself when he writes him a letter informing him that he has robbed the pay-roll of the ranch and sends a receipt for the amount on account. So Harry is forced to become an outlaw. And full payment is exacted when he kidnaps Merritt's daughter, Helen, and compels her to love him. She hates him at first, but his forceful character awakens a deep response in her heart.

PROGRAM READER

Harry Carey, the Western actor, will appear at this theatre in the near future in a photoplay which he wrote in collaboration with his director, Jack Ford, entitled "The Gun-Fightin' Gentleman." He is Cheyenne Harry again, and it is his object to fight for his property which has been stolen from him by the cattle king, John Merritt. Getting no satisfaction from his ranch, Harry journeys to Chicago to board the lion in his den. He arrives just in time for dinner and the guest is made an object of ridicule by the magnate's daughter and her friends. Provoked by their display of "manners" and obtaining no satisfaction from Merritt, he returns to the ranch and becomes an outlaw. And he eventually exacts payment in full for his stolen property. How he does it is told in a series of exciting incidents—incidents which are enacted against picturesque backgrounds. See Harry Carey in "The Gun-Fightin' Gentleman"—It is an interesting picture.

CATCH LINES

"MALE AND FEMALE"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Lavish and Spectacular Production

THAT Cecile B. De Mille has proven himself one of the foremost directors on the screen has long been recognized. It looks as if he has excelled himself with "Male and Female," an adaptation of Sir James M. Barries's play, "The Admirable Crichton." There may be those who will find fault that the original title has been changed but if they know the British playwright they will appreciate the fact that he cannot be done successfully on the screen. So "Male and Female" is Cecil B. De Mille's achievement any way you look at it. True he has incorporated Barrie's underlying thought that English life is divided by sharp contrasts — that equality does not figure in it except in moments of extremity. And when stressful events are over things are as they were in the beginning.

Master and mistress become the servants and the butler and maid preside when all are cast upon a Crusoe island in the South Seas. Remarkably thrilling is this wreck and the suspensive moments contained in the scene are intermingled with flashes of humor, thanks to Theodore Roberts' keen sense of characterization. The butler who had recognized his position with supreme modesty becomes a domineering lord. The island scenes are not too long, so progressive and interesting is the director's action.

It is a remarkable picture, this "Male and Female." The story is well told, the acting is of a superior order despite the fact that most of the players do not suggest Britishers, and it is produced with a lavish disregard of expense. It is rich in details and atmosphere and realistic strokes and there is a story interest that keeps one fascinated.— Length, 9 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Cecil B. DeMille, famous for his long string of artistic motion picture successes, is declared to have excelled all his previous efforts in "Male and Female," his newest Paramount-Artcraft picture which will come to the ——— theatre beginning ———. This is an adaptation by Jeanie MacPherson of Sir James M. Barrie's celebrated play, "The Admirable Crichton." The story relates the thrilling experience of a super-intelligent English butler, Crichton. A mere menial in his own land, he becomes the man of the hour when his master's yachting party is wrecked on a desert island. He rules the fortunes of the group and wins the heart of his master's beautiful daughter, only to refuse her for a little serving maid.

The brief outline of the story does not do justice to this sumptuous production, nor to its wealth of dramatic action. It carries a beautiful theme, the working out of which stamps Mr. DeMille as a master director. Despite the lavish scale upon which the picture is screened, the inimitable Barrie humor and his whimsical touches are apparent throughout. Thomas Meighan has the leading role and other prominent players in the cast are Gloria Swanson, Lila Lee, Theodore Roberts, Bebe Daniels, Raymond Hatton and Guy Oliver. No effort was spared by Mr. DeMille to make "Male and Female" a faithful reproduction in every respect.

SUGGESTIONS

Superlative praises can be sung about this picture—the latest from the DeMille factory. Inasmuch as your patrons recognize this director's artistry providing you presented his previous pictures, they will flock to see his latest achievement. It would be well to state in emphatic terms that it is an adaptation of Sir James M. Barrie's celebrated play, "The Admirable Crichton," which was one of the most successful contributions to the stage. Play up the author in all your exploitation—then follow his name with the director's. Mention the remarkable array of talent—the cast including the "wonder man," Thomas Meighan, who will be remembered for his performance in "The Miracle Man," Gloria Swanson, Lila Lee, Theodore Roberts and others. Emphasize the beautiful theme. Bring out the lavishness and the spectacular appeal of the production. Treat in it a dignified manner and use your circular letter campaign here. Publicize it far in advance.

CATCH LINES

"Male and Female," the adaptation of Sir James M. Barrie's celebrated play, "The Admirable Crichton," is unquestionably the finest picture yet produced by the master director, Cecil B. DeMille. It is dramatic, luxurious and spectacular.

"VICTORY"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

An Absorbing Heavy Calibre Drama

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S screen version of Joseph Conrad's great novel is a decidedly distinctive and unique offering. It is of heavy calibre and quite away from the usual run. In fact, this appears to be so absorbing, intense, and weirdly tragic in spots, that it will thoroughly grip the adult minds but is no picture for children to witness, or for the unsophisticated to view.

Besides brilliant direction this production is splendidly mounted and has an exceptional cast. Lou Chaney's characterization is compelling and Seena Owen, Jack Holt and Wallace Beery are excellent in their respective roles.

A young man absorbs the teachings of his father and becoming bitter against the world, the son voluntarily exiles himself on an island, determined to cultivate a contempt for pity and become devoid of sympathy. On a visit to the mainland however he breaks his vow when he rescues a young girl and takes her to his island where they maintain purely a platonic friendship.

Three scoundrels visit the island and it is then that the young man awakens and declares that he is now convinced that the two greatest enterprises in life are to love and to kill.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing. Workers, big puller and entirely pleasing.— Lenght, 5 reels.— Released November 30.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Maurice Tourneur's latest production is a screen version of Joseph Conrad's novel, "Victory," and will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This Paramount-Artcraft picture is described as a gripping photoplay and is portrayed by a special cast which includes Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Lou Chaney and Wallace Beery.

Joseph Conrad's story shows a young man who tries to follow his father's teachings in life, but it happens that his learned father was very bitter against the world and advocated a contempt for pity and that a person should never allow himself to be swayed by sympathy.

When the son voluntarily exiles himself upon an island fully determined to cultivate this hardness of heart his plans are all upset when he rescues a girl who was being pursued on the mainland and brings her to his island.

While the great friendship which sprang up between them was purely platonic the girl grew to love the man and was piqued at his apparent neglect.

It is at this time that three great scoundrels land upon the island with the sole intention of robbing the man and carrying the girl away. This trio formed one of the most unique criminal groups in existence and stopped at nothing to accomplish their objects. They were of the adventurous kind and murder meant nothing to them.

This condition of affairs aroused the man of the island and roused him from his lethargy. When he saw one of the brutes embracing his girl he began to see red for the first time and forgot all his father's teachings.

He declares to the girl that he is now awakened and is convinced that the two greatest enterprises in life are to love and to kill. And the villainous trio is summarily eliminated, leaving the hero and his sweetheart in each other's arms, the only living beings on the island.

PROGRAM READER

"I am now firmly convinced that the two greatest enterprises in life are to love and to kill," declared Axel Heyst.

And within one short hour the villainous trio was no more and he was alone with his sweetheart on the island.

Joseph Conrad is a great author and writes novels that grip and thrill.

And his great book, "Victory," has been screened as a Paramount-Artcraft picture by Maurice Tourneur, the master director.

The cast is a special array of screen artists including Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Lou Chaney and Wallace Beery.

When "Victory" comes to this theatre next week we urgently request you not to miss it. It is a heavy dramatic offering, bordering on melodramatic romance and one of the most gripping stories you ever saw on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this one you will find that many angles of exploitation are open to you. But do not neglect the author. This is the first one of Joseph Conrad's stories ever screened, and his stories have a wide following. Let them know that it is not a war story and mention the members of the cast as often as possible, especially Jack Holt, Wallace Beery, Seena Owen and Lou Chaney. And then the fact that Maurice Tourneur produced it and it is a Paramount-Artcraft, will assuredly pull them in. If you have a good opening the word of mouth advertising afterwards should assure you of an increasing attendance, as it is novel and tremendously impressive.

Do You Want To Lose Your Foreign Market?

EVERY man has a right to his political sympathies; but when facts line up to show that his own vital interests are unjustly assailed, the wise man forgets politics, lays aside theories, and rolls up his sleeves to fight the battle of self preservation.

Gentlemen of the motion picture industry, here are some hard, irrefutable facts which call for instant action more vigorous and persistent than any you have ever made in common cause, for never has your industry as a whole been so seriously threatened.

This appeal is made without thought of personal benefit, in the belief that in the great rush of affairs few of us have had time to give full consideration to this subject, and therefore do not realize how desperately our interests are at stake.

A full knowledge of conditions can lead only to the conclusion that unless the Peace Treaty is immediately accepted by the United States Senate without reservations that will require further negotiations — for the least delay will be fatal — the American picture industry will lose millions of dollars now, and the bulk of its European export trade for all time.

THIS European export trade is vital to our business. When I tell you that ONE New York concern alone did over three million dollars worth of business in Europe in 1918 — at a time when only half the market was open to us and shipping and licensing conditions were exceedingly difficult — you may get a hint of what the American business as a whole would amount to under favorable conditions. And we have never had such an opportunity to exploit our goods. During the war film production in Europe ceased, and American pictures were introduced and became popular where they otherwise would never have been shown. Europeans became "educated" to our advanced methods of production, and there is now a general demand for our pictures in preference to their own. But we are rapidly losing the marvellous advantage. Native production is on again with an unprecedented rush, and showing rapid improvement in quality.

All Europe has gone amusement mad. Theaters are packed as never before and in France, England and Germany, new picture houses of the finest type are springing up like mushrooms. Berlin alone reports five new theaters finished, one of them the largest in the world.

In the meantime American pictures are virtually barred from the markets!

And the reason is the ruinous rate of foreign exchange!

On this account, Germany has placed an embargo against the importation of American films, and, along with at least two other governments, has issued a rescript forbidding payment of monies abroad for anything other than vital necessities. Italy also has a strict embargo against American films.

France, Italy and the various Balkan formations, badly as they need our pictures, cannot buy them without going broke. Our export film business has virtually ceased, and a prolonged delay in its revival will deliver this vast market permanently to European producers. Make no mistake about these statements. As the owner of over two hundred expensive American productions,

An Appeal to Patriotism, Profits and Plain Common Sense

I have been in constant dollar to dollar contact with every phase of the developments. My partner and I have been going back and forth to Europe like commuters for the last three years. We know painfully whereof we speak.

I HAVE discussed the general situation with big men of affairs. They are all agreed that the holding up of the Peace Treaty is responsible for the decline in foreign exchange, and that the only remedy would be the extension of credits, which cannot be attempted until this country allays the economic unrest at home and abroad by the ratification of the treaty. Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip, a finance expert of international reputation, told me that the Central Powers could only recover through the reestablishment of trade with us, and this trade cannot be resumed until the Peace Treaty is accepted and subsequent loans and credits extended to raise and stabilize the rate of exchange. George E. Roberts, Vice-President of the National City bank, discussing the slump in values of all classes of remittances caused by the delay in accepting the Treaty which will provide a basis for placing large foreign credits here, said, "Trade balances are running so heavily in favor of the United States that other peoples cannot find the means of making payments. Trade cannot go on under such conditions. Our exports must decline or our imports increase until the situation comes into balance unless we are willing to aid by making loans," etc., etc.

THE Senate alone can save this situation, which, aside from its larger effects upon suffering millions in war wrecked lands, spells ruinous loss of income to the film industry here, and possibly the end of its progress toward bigger and better things.

Wake the Senate up. Make it cease kicking the treaty back and forth between political goal posts.

Immediately following the treaty defeat, foreign exchange broke to the lowest records in all history. The pound sterling fell to $3.99, the French franc to 10c, the Italian lire to 7¾c. This means in round numbers that there are now $4.00 in a pound that used to be worth $4.87; 10c to a franc formerly worth 20c; 7¾c to a lire formerly worth 20c and 2c to a mark formerly worth 24c! It means that Germany must pay 110 marks for every 10 marks worth of goods she buys — that France must pay $2.00 for every dollar's worth she buys, that Italy must pay $6.00 in Italian money for a $2.00 bushel of American wheat! How can non-essentials like films fit into a scheme like this? You don't have to be a Republican or a Democrat to see that such disintegration of values must raise the exchange embargo on exports and lower the tariff against imports, and that America's wonderful opportunity to control the world's markets is being relentlessly ruined.

When the Edge bill designed to finance this country's foreign trade came up recently in Congress, it was put off till the new session as a "matter of small importance."

I do not believe it possible, but if perchance there should be a smug few who, having their own distribution in certain parts of Europe, figure this awful condition as being to their advantage, let them be warned by the broader aspects of the case; Europe is confronted with financial panic unless she gets credits at once, and a rising exchange that will enable her to purchase essential raw materials. We need the help of each and every one, no matter how great or how small.

REMEMBER that foreign made pictures have never had an American distribution, while the enormous foreign distribution of our films has enabled us to spend on our productions sums that would wipe a foreign concern out of business. This superiority must cease; our standards must decline and our profits disappear unless this utterly unnecessary condition, created by selfish politicians, is speedily corrected. Forget mere opinions if you have them and look the facts squarely in the face. Your business is in the balance — your living threatened. Do your part. Write and wire the Senators from your State and Congressmen from your district. Do it now — today — there is no time to lose. Tell them you want the Peace Treaty accepted without ruinous reservations immediately.

Let the voice of the mighty motion picture industry be heard in Washington! Make it your business to say something. They will hear you and heed you if you speak, for they dare not slight the "movie"—the mightiest weapon of publicity and education in all the world.

A tremendous drama and melodrama combined; a story embracing the characters, the thrills; the overpowering grip and fascination of "The Lone Wolf" and "False Faces."

The wily, all-knowing, all-seeing Lone Wolf himself.

A crafty, desperate and overwhelmingly ingenious enemy and rival—opponents always at each other's throats!

A drama enacted from the interior splendors of Buckingham Palace to the mysterious depths of London's "Limehouse," the scene of "Broken Blossoms," and more vividly pictured by a great American author.

And a new, fascinating, beautiful girl —the Lone Wolf's daughter!

The LONE WOLF'S

A famed crook's daughter redeemed by acts of inconceivable courage and loyalty.

Gowns that, in richness and beauty, will establish the new fashions of the season for millions of women who see this production.

A production even richer in color, in settings and in scenic splendors than J. Parker Read Jr's. other world-famed Louise Glaum success, "Sahara."

A great title suggesting hundreds of exploitation possibilities; a star now one of the feminine "Big Three" of the screen; a story packed to the last "frame" with dollar showmanship that J. Parker Read Jr. knows so well; made with no regard to cost and simultaneously appearing as a serial in a great national magazine followed by book publication.

"NOT FOR SALE"

Let this be every Theatre's challenge to the distributor-monopolists who are AFRAID of the open market.

Distributor-monopolists would like to own or control the Motion Picture Theatres, and the reason is plain:

With their own theatres, they can be sure of a "market" for their films. They don't have to make good pictures, because they don't have to sell them. Any kind of film can be forced into the controlled houses.

Now, the minute a distributor seeks to control the market, it means that he is afraid of competition. It means that he has lost confidence in his own product. It means that he realizes that theatres looking for the best film offerings are going elsewhere to buy.

Independent producers of known standing, leaders in their fields, master artists of the screen, are already selling their best offerings direct to theatres everywhere, and a supply of good pictures is assured that will exceed the needs of the theatres.

With this supply assured from independent sources, the distributor-monopolists will see their own sales dwindling. Instead of meeting this competition by getting a better product to sell, they are going to try to force their inferior product on the theatres.

That's what the long-term contract is for—that's why the distributor-monopolists want to buy the control of your house.

TELL THEM YOUR THEATRE IS "NOT FOR SALE," and that you won't sign long-term contracts. TELL THEM TO TALK PICTURES—that's all you're interested in—and you'll buy if they have the goods.

That's what the independent producers are offering you—GOOD PICTURES, AND YOUR FREEDOM TO DO BUSINESS YOUR WAY.

The distributor-monopolists won't talk pictures, and want to own your business.

"NOT FOR SALE" on those terms, gentlemen.

SUPERIOR BRAINS

You have been taught to believe that the captains of Finance, Commerce, and Industry have attained the heights of power by virtue of "Superior Brains." Did you ever stop to consider that the railroads continued to run after the deaths of Harriman and Hill? That the banks continued to function after the elder Morgan departed this life? That the steel industry did not fall into chaos with the demise of Frick and Carnegie; and that if as a result of some terrible calamity every capitalist in the country suddenly died, industry would not cease operations for one day? The reason the great industrial and financial Magnates of the past were powerful, and the present crop of money Wizards are now at the helms, is because they learned one great lesson:—the way to acquire wealth is to

CLEVELAND SAID:

"'Eyes Of Youth" marks distinct advance movie development. 'Eyes Of Youth' with Clara Kim Young is the unusual film visible at the Strand and Orpheum theatres this week. At a private sho g my first impression was that everybody connected with the making of this production not only knew his busi s but intelligently profited by the experience of all that has preceded it in motion picture production."

NEW YORK SAID:

"'Eyes Of Youth' is the kind of a photo-play that is dear to the hearts of many. It offers suc a variety and intensity of histrionic moments to its actress and is so steeped in 'heart interest' sweetened b a happy ending, that it is simply irresistible. Miss Young has been missed and if her next picture s as far away from the present picture as her last, she will be missed more because of her performance i 'Eyes Of Youth.' When she undertook 'Eyes of Youth' she promised to do something better than e had ever done for a long time and she has fulfilled her promise. One is bound to feel the force of performance in her multiple role." N. Y. Times.

"'Eyes Of Youth,' screen version of the play by Max Marcin and Charles Guernon, leading attract at the Rivoli this week. Miss Young called upon to play gamut of human emotions that are theatrica rich. Her work, notably the dope fiend in third episode, lighted with histrionic glow, proving plainly that future screen impersonations should be constantly tinged with character, for which she possesses that scre finesse and technique to give cinema life to type characterizations." N. Y. American.

"Clara Kimball Young Scores in New Vehicle. This photo play, 'Eyes Of Youth,' with Clara Kimb Young as its star will precipitate a run on any box office and satisfy those exacting film fans whose mone worth is not obtained unless thrills are supplemented with pulchritude. . . . Miss Young me every requirement with impressive results. . . . Her acting in a scene of a woman of the streets was reward with applause that could not be mistaken for anything else than a spontaneous tribute to a portrayal that w highly artistic. The Rumor

A combination of directors and producers quite as impressive as that of D. W. Griffith, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford is reported from Los Angeles. The principals are Thomas H. Ince. Maurice Tourneur, Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett and George Loane Tucker. These directors are about as well known as any six screen stars, which, incidentally, is evidence of the happily increasing tendency of the public to recognize the work of the man behind the camera as well as that of the player in front.

Ince pictures, of course, as associated with the names of William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton, and now, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, are among the most popular in the country. Mack Sennett's comedy productions are known wherever there are screens. Among the super productions produced by Mr. Sennett, are "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and "Mickey." Maurice Tourneur is widely known through "The Whip," "Sporting Life," "Woman," "The White Heather," and "The Life Line." Among Mr. Neilan's recent works are "Three Men and a Girl," with Marguerite Clark; "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet, and "Daddy Long Legs," with Mary Pickford, Allan Dwan was Douglas Fairbanks' director for "Mr. Fix-It," "He Comes Up Smiling," and he was also responsible for "Cheating Cheaters," with Clara Kimball Young, and "Sahara" with Louise Glaum.

Like the United Artists, the new combination will begin production immediately on the expiration of the present contracts.

A supplementary report is that a certain big distributing organization is backing the combination financially. Each of the directors will produce independently, but their pictures will be distributed through their own central organization.

A burglar—a blackjack blow in the dark, and Peter Schuyler, wealthy social scion and clubman, wandered forth from his palatial home, with brain clouded and identity lost.

A new world claimed him. Prankish Fate played with him. The soft, well groomed hands became calloused; the broadcloth and patent leather of the gentleman was replaced by the corduroy and cowhide of the lumberjack.

Romance came to soften Fate's follies and the new world was bright until another dastard's blow sent him back in mind and body to the world he had left behind.

Instead of ending here, this delightful and unusual photoplay story really just begins. Surprise follows surprise and the interest mounts higher every minute until there comes a crashing, satisfying climax that passes the picture into memory as a great achievement for its star and another prideful accomplishment for the producer, Vitagraph.

An Industrial Crisis

THE extreme low levels reached last week in foreign exchange give sharp emphasis to a situation which, for this business at least, has arrived at a crisis.

The pound sterling declined below four dollars; francs were down to a trifle over half value.

At this exorbitant exchange rate Europe, with its credit sadly limited, will pay only for the dire necessities of life or for the raw materials with which to make these necessities. Amusements are out of the question.

As a consequence the exportation of American film to Europe is practically at a standstill. Italy and the Central powers have declared an outright embargo on American shipments; valuable contracts are held up.

There are two horns to this very serious dilemma; one is the immediate loss of the important European market; the other is the future loss.

During the war the loss of the continental market was a heavy blow to the American producers. Today the decline in English exchange and the possible closing of that one remaining open market make the situation decidedly worse.

BUT the future gives a still darker outlook. Today it is cheaper to make films at home than to buy the American product. European production needs just this practical spur and wants it. So a protraction of this present situation will find pictures under way in Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Scandinavia, on a scale sufficient to compete seriously with the American picture, if not to all but exclude it.

Can the American producer afford this heavy loss, heavy anyway it is regarded?

We assume he is seriously studying this stiff problem and yet it is characteristic of the business here to disregard or underrate or shy at the really big matters.

There is much that may be done, even if it is far from the power of one American business to regulate a big international difficulty.

And it would seem that immediate and joint action is called for through the National Association of the Industry.

The situation is simply this:

Europe will not import films until Europe has sufficient credit and American banks will not make sufficient loans to Europe until the grave unrest and uncertainty there are corrected by a Treaty of Peace.

THIS matter is not a question of the welfare of either political party or its leaders. It is not a matter of political belief upon the part of the individual American business man. It is a matter of this American business man's own business, its salvation, and collectively the business salvation and security of America. That is what is hanging in the balance.

Speaking as one American business man, we feel that the time has fully come when the business interests of this country, harried as they are on all hands, have a supreme right to demand in their own and the interest of the American public, instant, decisive and full security.

We want a Treaty of Peace. Apparently we can have one that need not go back to Versailles for a protracted discussion by all the signature nations.

Let's have it!

Let this one American business raise its voice and demand from Congress action where action is possible, and where it is obviously imperative.

This is, at least, a straight business matter, at least a film business matter, and surely no other matter more important is facing right now the joint interests of this industry.

Speaking Editorially:

An Industrial Crisis

Summing It Up

WE want to say a final word about the producer-owned theatre and its relation to this industry.

The producer-owned theatre is only potentially a menace — and then only to the producer who owns it.

It is a menace if the producer who owns it runs exclusively in it his own make of pictures — a menace to him.

If he runs it as any independent theatre is run, booking freely those pictures best suited to its clientele then the matter of ownership is an entirely different matter.

We do not for one moment believe that any producer will ever hitch up a fleet of theatres to his studios exclusively and thereby force this very large and settled investment to share the risks from which production is inseparable.

And believing that no business man in his right mind would ever make such a move we can only regard the producer-owned theatre as a bugaboo and nothing more.

It will have an effect upon the exhibitor.

It will have no effect upon the independent producer.

It is, of course, a fact that several big producers are buying theatres in key cities.

And it is probably a fact that one big reason they have made this move is because some exhibitors have "closed" up some cities and forced the producer to this move by forcing down rental prices below the point of producer profit.

But what does this mean?

Will this ownership of key theatres keep other producers out of these cities.

Not at all. Possibly for the immediate present but if continued it will simply result in other theatres being built.

We are in, in fact, for probably the biggest and best theatre building era this business has ever seen.

So we repeat:

There is nothing for the independent exhibitor to fear: there is nothing for the independent producer to fear.

And we also repeat, from a previous editorial what is an eternal truth in this business:

"Good pictures will always get good theatres; and good theatres will always get good pictures."

Wm. A. Johnston

Steady Growth!

¶ We dropped into the Circulation Manager's office the other day and saw some interesting figures. The summary for September and October was on his desk, together with the circulation reports for the first three weeks in November.

We learned that for the month of September the total of subscription renewals and new subscriptions to Motion Picture News reached six hundred. The week of September 1st showed one hundred and one subscriptions and renewals; September 9th, eighty-one; September 15th, one hundred and twenty-two; September 22nd, one hundred and eighty-two; September 29th, one hundred and fourteen.

We learned that during the month of October the renewals and subscriptions totalled three hundred and seventy-nine. We learned that the first three weeks of November have shown totals of seventy-two, seventy-five, and forty-seven.

And we wondered —

Why don't some of you advertising managers drop in on the Circulation Manager some day just as we did?

The door is always open. The books are not a mystery. The correspondence is yours for the asking. We'll turn you loose and let you dig away to your heart's content.

Come on! The Circulation Manager invites you. We urge you! Call around and see for yourself that —

Fuel Pinch Faces Picture Theatres

Closing Ordered in Kansas City, Omaha and Small Towns; Optimism Felt Generally However, and Every Effort is Being Made to Keep Amusement Houses Open

THE full seriousness of the coal shortage now being felt throughout the county has made itself evident in the past few days, without however making it apparent that amusements in general or motion picture theatres in particular will suffer to the wide extent that prevailed during the war time stringency.

Last minute reports from our correspondents indicated that only in a few scattered cities where conditions were unusually severe, had theatres been ordered shut down. Kansas City, Mo., Omaha, Neb. and Vincennes, Ind. were the only centers where a complete closing had taken place.

Indications are that so far as possible officials in every section will lend their efforts toward keeping open theatres and motion picture houses. In Chicago and throughout Illinois this has been officially done by classifying such buildings as public institutions which are given preferential supplies of light and heat.

Electric Displays Curtailed

Broadway's Great White Way has not been darkened, nor is it believed, a pall of gloom will be cast over it. The coal saving effected by shutting off the electric signs is said to be negligible. Theatre magnates on the other hand urge that such a move with its consequent drop in business, would be an expensive project to the Government in the light of the loss that would be experienced in war taxes.

In Chicago and Indianapolis, however, the Regional Coal Committees have ordered the shutting off of electric signs, though the theatres are permitted to operate. Denver is also lightless. Our Indianapolis correspondent wires:

"Only effect of coal shortage is shutting off of all electric signs. Managers planning to heat with oil stoves and produce own electricity with gasoline-propelled dynamo manufactured by local concern in event heat and light utilities run out of fuel. Only city in state where theatres closed so far is Vincennes in heart of coal region.

"Officials at Columbus, Indiana, urge citizens to attend movies evenings to save fuel in homes."

In Chicago an order was about to be issued to close theatres the night of December 2d. This was forestalled by a committee of amusement men. L. H. Mason, Chicago representative of the NEWS telegraphed December 2d:

"Theatres, schools, churches classed temporarily as public institutions by Chicago Regional Coal Committee. Will be supplied with light, heat despite coal famine. Other interests not listed in Garfield priority groupings get only enough fuel to keep plants from freezing. Will cease operation immediately all electric signs and display lighting. Allied Amusement Association, Maurice A. Choynski, president, met and named committee Aaron Jones, Nathan Ascher, Harry Kidding, Harry Powers, to protect interests and engaged Levy Mayer as counsel. Succeeded in preventing order to close theatres tonight or without 24 hours' notice."

To date theatres in the northwest have not had any intimation that they would be forced to close, though our correspondent advises that some in the more outlying sections may face difficulty in remaining open, not because of a closing order, but through inability to obtain coal. He wires:

"There is no immediate prospects of Minneapolis movie theatres being forced to close their doors because of fuel shortage. In some outlaying parts of northwest this may be necessary but not in larger cities, is belief of coal men. W. H. Groverman, Regional representative of Fuel Administration, is releasing coal to non-essential industries but declares that observance of strictest conservation of available fuel will probably obviate necessity of closing schools, libraries, churches and so on. Policy of economy aided by normal winter, it is hoped, will take Minneapolis through without loss of theatres."

Eastern Situation

Theatre and picture men of New York have already taken steps to prevent closing of theatres along the Eastern seaboard.

Following the receipt of advices from Kansas City and Omaha indicating that the motion picture theatres and legitimate theatres had been closed owing to the fuel shortage, President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion-Picture Industry designated the following committee to handle the situation:

Marcus Loew (Loew Enterprises), chairman; B. S. Moss (Moss Theatres); Gabriel L. Hess (Goldwyn Pictures Corporation); Walter Hayes of Buffalo (Strand Theatre interests); Sydney S. Cohen (president New York State Exhibitors' League); Oscar A. Price (President United Artists); William Brandt (President Brooklyn Exhibitors' League); Ralph Kohn (Famous Players-Lasky Corporation); Albert Lowe (Paragon Laboratories); Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the N. A. M. P. I.

A committee consisting of Oscar A. Price, Felix Feist and Frederick H. Elliott, left December 2d for Washington to confer with Bryce Clagett, Secretary of the Railroad Administration and with the other officials of that department.

The closing in Kansas City was most unfortunate, inasmuch as theatres had been doing a record-breaking business. Our correspondent advised as following on the shut-down:

"All theatres closed midnight Sunday night until further notice by local fuel administration acting under National organization, very little coal coming in city after arrival of two days' supply on way, two days' supply here now, Kansas City theatres also closed big run Sunday night."

How Other Cities Fare

Cleveland houses are unaffected, and throughout Ohio the fuel shortage has not been felt, according to advices from the NEWS' correspondent. Cincinnati branches report no trouble. In St. Louis, however, the situation is more serious, though it has not reached an alarming stage. "Theatres have been taken off the essential list" wires our correspondent. "Majority of houses have three or four weeks' coal supply on hand, however, and will be permitted to remain open as long as they can. Will be no interference by Fuel Administration."

"Coke is plentiful and theatres may use that as substitute until situation is relieved, so it is unlikely St. Louis houses will be closed" he concludes.

Approximately one-third of the smaller theatres in Iowa and Nebraska are closed now, according to A. H. Blank, owner of the First National franchise in that district. He further reports that unless the situation improves within a few days theatres in his entire territory will be compelled to close.

Omaha theatres have been operating intermittently since November 26th without heat supply. A number of neighborhood and downtown theatres have closed until the situation is relieved.

Des Moines, last Sunday, was entirely without heat in the business districts with the single exception of drug stores, which were permitted to remain open for prescription purposes. Mr. Blank states that the Des Moines theatres reopened on Monday, but that they were likely to close again at any moment.

DEATH STALKS PARTY

Two of Universal-Smithsonian Expedition Killed

TRAGEDY overtook the Universal Film-Smithsonian Institute expedition in Engo Forest, Belgian Congo, when a railroad wreck killed two.

According to cable dispatches, the dead are William Stowell, Los Angeles, a Universal director, and Dr. Joseph R. Armstrong, medical director and business manager of the expedition.

Pliny Horne, photographer; Henry M. Kohler, photographer, and Edward M. Thierry, newspaper correspondent, were injured.

Percentage? Varying Angles on the Question Raised By William A. Johnston's Editorial

First the Producer's Angle:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

WHEN a man makes a point as strong and important as you made in your editorial on "percentage" I feel impelled to congratulate him.

Time will prove the wisdom of your logic and the inevitable will come to pass—pictures will be booked exclusively on sharing terms exactly as theatrical attractions are now played.

The success of the theatrical business has always depended upon the producer, who is imaginative, creative and progressive. Whereas, in the great generality of cases, theatres are owned, controlled or managed by realty corporations, holding companies, estates or wealthy people and seldom lend a helping hand in the production of dramas, operas, comedies or other attractions intended to keep their establishments open to the public. Nor could they create anything even if they were so inclined. Because the system employed in piling up fortunes and the art of creating something for the theatre are as different as wine and water.

They may be kindred but both require different means, methods, systems, arts, sciences or formulaes to bring into being.

To continue profitable the motion picture inductry must follow the theatrical business and give the producers and authors a just share of the earnings of their productions.

Sharing contracts (percentage) will do this, but nothing short of actual participation in the exploitation and box office receipts will do it.

If you can bring producers to understand that it is actually more profitable to them to make one exceptionally good photoplay in future where they have been making six in the past, and then spend some of their wasted energy exploiting that exceptional photoplay, sending it out with advance agents, treasurers and musical scores to play on sharing terms only, you will not only render an invaluable service to the industry but remove the cause of an evil that is consuming a wonderfully lucrative business—over production of mediocre subjects that should have no place in a program.

More power to the Waterman or the Underwood that answers the lash of your dictation.

Sincerely yours,
ROBT. W. PRIEST,
President.

Then a Scorcher from Siefert:

Dayton, Ohio, Nov. 24, 1919.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I AM greatly surprised at the editorial published in your paper November 15th, "Precentage Bookings Coming." The exhibitors have just gone the period of high film rentals imposed by the producers. In many cases rentals have been raised as high as one thousand per cent and for the year just passed the financial reports of the big producers showed a tremendous profit. In one instance when I was in New York, one producer told me practically that his company netted over one million dollars for the past year and the producers were financed by the exhibitors' deposits. In other words this producer earned one million dollars on the exhibitor's money. Look back through the financial reports of all the big producers and show me one that has not made a tremendous profit on the year's output, say nothing about the year just started with doubled film rentals and in many a case tripled.

The cost of producing has not increased as great as the film rentals. Now has this big trust the nerve to come out and tell the exhibitors that they must share receipts of the house? Has the day arrived when the exhibitor's investment will be turned over to the producer without any consideration? It is not a fact that the producer is now possessed of millions of dollars of the exhibitor's money used for producing which is never returned only in pictures and for which the exhibitor receives not even a receipt much less interest? Besides financing the producer through this method, the exhibitors take all the risk such as existing weather conditions and other unforeseen local conditions. The producer is almost in every instance gauranteed his profit, while the exhibitor is left to take the chance. It is my opinion that the distributors and producers have gone far enough with dictating policy to the exhibitors, because the exhibitors in the past have stood for almost anything, does not signify that he will continue to be the goat.

Yours very truly,
JOHN F. SIEFERT.

From Tom Saxe, of Milwaukee, Comes the Following Interview:

"THE percentage basis of doing business is coming on as an inevitable era in the motion picture field—and I am sorry."

Tom Saxe, Milwaukee and Wisconsin showman who is both a distributor of First National attractions and a pioneer exhibitor, thus meets the situation prophesized in percentage discussions.

"I am opposed to the percentage plan because primarily I believe it will be the very axe that is going to kill the goose that's laying the golden egg of the picture business. In the first place it will give the producer a right to have some say in if not to dictate the prices of admission. Just as the great theatrical producers set the price of admission for their attraction, so the creators of pictures would feel they could exercise some authority in naming the prices for their attractions.

"Any far sighted showman will see that this will drive away the very people that after all make the motion picture. The masses are the foundation upon which the business has been built, but the masses will not remain true if pictures are put upon a scale of higher admission. It might succeed in a few houses catering to high class audiences but the average theatre is built upon mass patronage, and few houses in the country could withstand the shock of an advanced scale.

"Although I earnestly believe this is coming to pass and expect some day to probably sell First National Pictures on that basis, still I regret it. I would personally much rather buy a picture outright, and do the gambling on it myself than have a string of theatres to share the risks and profits.

"If a producer is given a good fair price for his picture he should be satisfied to let the theatre earn what money it can on the attraction. I do not believe that it would ever be possible to equalize the burdens of the different theatres, for overhead expense would naturally play a large part. There are some theatres which have an enormous overhead—my Alhambra is one—and another theatre less pretentious is spared this expense. How would the producer equalize that in setting his percentage basis?

"It's certainly an unfair proposition for the first run exhibitor. The producer may make a seemingly desirable offer but the first run manager is always going to get the short end of it. Putting over the initial run the exhibitor, dictated to by the producer, will spend a great deal of money in advertising which will do him no particular good but which will be materially helpful in aiding the producer to sell to smaller exhibitors in the neighboring theatres.

"With the new regime will come the day of the specialized attration house I am convinced. By this I mean that just as theatrical magnates have a string of theaters throughout the country, so large distributors will have theatres and instead of each booking at random, there will be individual theatres.

"Although I see the percentage day coming, I cannot bring myself to welcome it as the best development for the business."

And Then Another Letter:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

MY steam valve is again ready to pop so here goes: I read your editorial in the issue of November 15th, about the producer and distributor only getting ten per cent of the gross receipts with interest. For the Lord's sake tell me who is getting service for ten per cent of their gross?

My service costs me thirty per cent of my gross receipts and in many instances fifty per cent and if I would listen to a lot of four flushers who come along and tell me what to do and what I can make by running their pictures, it would cost me a hundred and fifty per cent.

W. A. Johnston Editorial Brings Straight Talk From Many Quarters

One of these fellows came in to see me the other day and had the brazen nerve to tell me that if I booked a two reeler he had, it would bring me in a $100.00 a day. If he had such a production and could prove it, I would give him $50.00 for it and that would leave me fifty profit which is more than I ever made in one day —yet.

Now Mr. Johnston if you really think there is anyone getting service for ten per cent tell me where these guys are located for I want to move to that part of the country.

If the producers and distributors are only getting what you say they are, then somebody is getting service terribly cheap to make up for those of us who are paying thirty per cent and more.

Everybody is howling about higher rentals. If they expect by so doing to get everybody to raise their price, that is just where they are fooled. The Exchanges say that people expect to pay more for their shows; that everything else is up, etc. That is just where the producers are wrong. Because everything else is up is one big reason why the pictures should stay right where they are.

Is there not such a thing as admission prices going too high and diverting the minds of the public to other amusements such as dancing, skating, etc.?

You know a wise man once said: "There is a time when patience ceases to be a virtue."

Now then if the producers want to raise their prices fifty or a hundred per cent, the thing for the exhibitor to do is to let them keep their pictures, and buy of a firm who doesn't think his stuff is worth so much.

No one concern can do all the business and there are producers who believe in the motto of "live and let live." I have never purchased service of a firm yet that I couldn't get along without. No one ought to get it into his head that he has to have a certain brand of pictures or a certain service.

The small town guy pays more in proportion for his service than the man in the city. I know of houses in Akron, Canton, Youngstown that pay $15.00 or $20.00 for films that we pay $5.00 for. They have twenty or thirty times as many people to draw from and two or three times as many seats. The city houses get the films when they are new and we get them six or eight months later when they are all scratched with two or three hundred feet gone from each reel. Who is paying the most in proportion?

Of course I know who sets the prices. The chairwarmers and mahogony desk fellows right there in your big city. They think all towns are as big as New York is. What do they know about conditions here in Ohio or in Palestine? Why don't they leave the matter of making prices up to their local men in the territory who know the conditions?

I claim that $300.00 is cheaper for a picture in the large city than $10.00 is to me for the reason that the big city house can run it all the week, save six days express, six days paper, get in a Sunday showing and run the film over about five times each day. We are not allowed to run on Sunday, and Sunday is equal to about three days, so I'm told. Doesn't all this make a big difference?

Another thing I want to mention. You are always howling longer runs. I can't run a picture more than one day for about eight out of every ten of my patrons come every night and they certainly aren't going to see the same picture twice.

If I was to try running a picture more than one day, next year at this time I wouldn't have enough to buy a sapsucker lunch, much less a dinner.

"Fewer and better pictures." They may be fewer but are they going to be any better? And they say bigger. They are big enough now. Let them stay as they are and keep the price where it is and we will all be gainers. People as a rule do not want too much. I have found the hour and half show suits the majority. People are satisfied with a five reel feature, a two or one reel comedy and a News reel.

For illustration. On Monday I run a two reel comedy, a two reel Western and a news weekly and that is my biggest day outside of Saturday.

I reading the McVoy letter, I agree with him in keeping a standard price. I have never changed my price but once and was sorry for it before I had run the picture half through. It was about the punkest thing I had seen for a long time, and right there I said: "No more of that for me." So far I have kept my word.

I find fault with McVoy when he says he has booked pictures for more than he could afford to pay. No man can do that and stay in business long.

And speaking of the way some exchanges do business, as McVoy did, I want to say that I have had my experience too. The way to do with a firm which won't treat you white is to let it alone.

I am doing business with some firms who I think are the finest people in the business, and I do not hesitate to mention them. They are Triangle, Metro, Select, Vitagraph. I have never had any trouble with any of these firms. Their film is always in good condition and arrives in plenty of time.

I claim that when an exhibitor is treated badly by an exchange, the thing to do is to write the trade paper and expose them and then they will mend their ways. The exchanges need the exhibitors just as badly as the exhibitors need the exchanges.

When a firm does not give good service, quit them. They often violate their contracts.

When the exhibitor signs a contract, the exchange has his money and is not supposed to send out junk—stuff that will not run through a machine, that pulls apart, making it necessary to stop and re-thread. People get disgusted when that happens and go out swearing that they never will come back again, all on account of an exchange sending out rotten shows. And yet in spite of these conditions the producers want to boost the prices. It might be all right to raise the price in the big city where they are open at eight or nine o'clock in the morning and run twelve or fourteen hours a day but not where it is only possible to get in three or four hours as we do here.

In closing let me say that I hope some good fore sighted man gets at the bottom of the waste of this business and thereby saves the thousands of dollars we all might get some benefit from.

Yours for the better,

C. E. LEININGER.

WIRE BRIEFS FROM THE COAST

IT is rumored Walter Greene and Frederick Gage have purchased the serial "Son of Tarzan," production of which has just been begun by National Film Corporation, and in addition "The Kentucky Colonel," the Hall Room Boys Comedies. No confirmation of these deals could be obtained at the New York offices of the films involved.

Harry Schwalbe, Bruce Johnson of Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco, and Dave Howells are in Los Angeles on First National business.

Options are held by Eastern capitalists for the site for a third big theatre in San Francisco. Definite plans will be announced next week.

Edgar Lewis has arrived to film "Sherry" and "Lahoma," for distribution through Pathe. He brought his staff but will engage players on the Coast.

Pictures vs. Theatres

Eugene Roth, of San Francisco, and Charles Williams, of Providence, Comment on Editorial By William J. Johnston

EUGENE ROTH, the prominent San Francisco exhibitor, has come to bat with a letter on William A. Johnston's recent editorial, "Pictures and Profits" that is well worth reading by every film man. Mr. Roth discusses present conditions with cool impartiality and presents a warning that many — both exhibitors and producers — can heed.

Charles Williams, manager of the Strand, Providence, R. I., is another interesting contributor to the discussion started by this editorial.

The communication from Mr. Roth follows:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

YOUR timely article appearing in the last issue of the "Motion Picture News," entitled "Pictures and Theatres"— should and must be carefully and intelligently read and analyzed by every exhibitor in the industry and should have the serious consideration of the producer and the distributor as well.

We cannot get away from the fact that pictures are nothing without theatres, and theatres are nothing without pictures. With this absolute knowledge we must face all problems during the evolution of our industry.

The application of strict commercial lines is imminent. After all, it may be well for the present perplexing problems to confront us now. Perhaps all elements of the industry have been gliding along too smoothly on the wave of prosperity, and not enough consideration or attention have been given to our destinies.

The time has come, however, for the true awakening. All factions must be determined to meet the situation squarely and fairly, and the opportunity you, Mr. Johnston, have given to the trade to openly discuss same through the medium of the "Motion Picture News" is indeed very commendable. Personally, I have watched carefully the progress of the industry, and have been aware for sometime of the trend we are drifting to, and frankly admit its seriousness. But I do not consider it alarming to a degree of calamity. I think that the producer and the exhibitor have the mental capacity and the sound business judgment to steer the ship to a safe anchorage.

In the meantime, several groups are forming combinations in one form or another, which is all right providing that they do not exceed the limit, and by this I mean to the point of freezing out one or the other. If exhibitors form chains, or collective groups, for booking purposes to protect their interests in securing the quality of pictures demanded for their respective theatres well and good, but if on the other hand, these combinations are conceived for the sole purpose of buying a dollar product for fifty cents, then I say it is all wrong. For in that event the producer instead of progressing and making fewer and better pictures, will be compelled to meet the prices they are forced to sell their pictures for, and consequently will make a cheaper product, and a cheaper product will have a tendency to cheapen, and of course, weaken our industry. We, the exhibitors, must remember that hundreds of millions of dollars are being invested by the producers, and they, too, have their internal problems that are serious and costly. Heavy demands made upon them by stars on the one hand, the directors on the other hand, plus the almost exorbitant prices demanded by playwrights, and as such are entitled to a consistent profit on their product, but in this, as in all big industries, we have a class that are always just riding along — at times lucky and again out of luck — and this element is the "Little Disturber," who spends his time retarding and upsetting honest methods.

THE exhibitor must use his best judgment and select the "wheat from the chaff," and if combinations must be formed, it is up to the exhibitor to choose wisely, and therein lies his danger. If, on the other hand, the producers succeed in forming powerful combinations and attempt to dictate and make such demands on the exhibitors that the said exhibitors find it impossible to meet, then the real power of the exhibitors will exert itself in a most surprising manner, because we know that the production of pictures can never be controlled, and as you, Mr. Johnston, have stated, and very wisely so, "YOU CANNOT CONTROL BRAINS."

Personally, I see no danger in the producer entering the exhibition field. I rather welcome same, and in some instances there are reasons why he should. First of all, he is entitled to have proper representation in every district, and if for one reason or another he finds himself shut out of any territory — whether it be for a combination formed against him (which I admit is bad), or because the exhibitor in that territory hasn't faith in his product — he has a just right to enter the field and place his efforts before that community, and thereby it will give him an interesting angle that perhaps he has never fully understood, or appreciated.

WE must admit that pleasing an exhibitor in selling pictures is one thing, and pleasing the public is quite another. The only difference is the exhibitor can sometimes be sold, but not so with the public. They not alone insist upon a good picture, but demand all that goes with same in the treatment and the environment of the theatre, and theatres are not made in a night. Owners and Managers of theatres have overcome many local problems in the management of their theatres, and have found the necessity of giving the public what it wants, as well as catering to those wants most delicately.

Therefore, I fully concur that the good theatres have nothing to fear.

The exhibitors problem, is consistency — cater, cleanly to the public, be fair with them, keep the motion picture industry in its own class, forget the two and three dollar top prices, and above all, give the public a good round entertainment for the masses and the classes alike, and we must not lose sight of the fact that there is a limit to the admission price. Let the other fellow plunge and trifle with the public, and it is only a question of a short time that the sane businesslike exhibitor will come into his own.

I don't believe that we will be able at this time to stop, or curb the ambitions of those desiring to form a combination, or to enter into pools or profit-sharing arrangements, because of the determination of those already starting same, is launched, and for those involved, it is hoped that they will be benefited financially as well as having solved their immediate problems, but there need be no FEAR on the part of any of the elements of the industry as long as honest principal and sincere purpose is adhered to.

Mr Williams' letter follows:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

COMMENTING on your editorial "Pictures and Theatres," the writer does not like to act as though he was a pessimist, but there are a few things that must be considered and eliminated before the moving picture industry can reach a basis of safety, fair dealing and profit. The principal thing, of course, is to bring about a better method of equitable dealings, between exhibitors, exchange managers and producers. To do this, it seems to the writer, is almost an impossible step, for the main reason, that the majority or at least a great many of the predominating factors, in each of the three branches, lack the principle of fair dealing. It was stated to the writer a short time ago, by a man well known in the theatrical business, that he knows for a fact, at a convention of exchange managers they were told by their "big chief" that in the foundation of all their dealings with exhibitors they must bear in mind that exhibitors were liars and crooks. This sounds like a drastic statement for exchange managers to build their sales arguments from, but nevertheless there is a great deal of truth in this tho' camoflaged by the word "politics," the phrase that they use in "slipping over a deal" as they call it on the exhibitor. This of course, applies to the little independents with one or two houses. The exchange and producing heads say they are compelled to do this as it is the treatment they receive from the syndicates controlling numbers of houses. But the writer makes the prediction that if within the next two years this terrific evil is not stopped, that you will find the business going "sky-larking" for all three factions. The entire foundation of our industry is threatened by this type of men that do not know the principle of fair dealing.

It seems almost an impossible idea to organize exhibitors into an efficient body, for the reason that producers and exchange men, themselves, are interested in so many of the houses in large cities, that any move made by exhibitors is known and forestalled in any manner that may present itself.

REFERRING to producers seeking an outlet through their own houses, this is entirely wrong, for no big business can reap the benefits from any interlocking chain, unless the links are free, or, in other words, the managers in different localities are allowed to run the houses according to their own judgment, and, of course, the producers will not do this. Again the argument for this is unfair dealing — claiming the syndicate owners drive them to this method. It does seem to the writer that all three factors are getting away from the great fundamental basis of success — namely the buying public or patron, and you know the results and don't forget that the public to-day knows perhaps more than a great many of the so-called "shining lights" of the three factions. There are something like seventy-five periodicals in which the public or a movie patron can get about every angle of the game, and believe me, they follow it.

Getting back to one of my above first statements. Equity and fair dealing must be eventually the basis in which to put this business on a legitimate plan, and the writer believes now there are but two ways to accomplish this, first, by a general commission of picked men from the three factions, and then in each locality of say five or ten towns, with a grievance committee consisting of five men, the chairman to be an exhibitor, the other four to consist equally of exhibitors and exchangemen. Of course, this is just a skeleton outline, but the writer does honestly believe that with these two referred-to committees and combinations, property selected a great deal of the evil could be eliminated and at least from this we could perhaps advance or improve the idea.

Why not get some ideas from each of the factions and see what they think of something along this line, because the writer believes you have started something and for heavens sake let's keep driving until we have reached some saner method of conducting this business.

More power to you,
Strand Theatre,
CHAS. H. WILLIAMS.

THE FILM SALESMAN'S EASY LIFE

"WHAT does a motion picture salesman have to do except go to town, see the proprietors of the picture houses, sell them his pictures and go gleefully on his way?

That is the style of question that may suggest itself to the uninitiated.

A profiteer worrying about his income tax, a working man trying to estimate his next demands, haven't any more on their minds than the motion picture salesman who is really alert to his work.

If you don't believe it read this genuine letter of an actual experience that was sent in by a First National salesman in Kentucky and Tennessee territory to Lee L. Goldberg, manager of the Louisville exchange. The salesman was writing from the heart:

"Enclosed find blanket contract for ten features and a deposit check.

"I trust you will be able to approve this as it represents as hard a day's work as I have ever experienced since I began selling films. It was literally sold on the jump. I was with him from 8.30 A. M. until 6 P. M. without stopping for dinner. I followed him on foot from the store to his office; in his auto all over town. Made the trip to the top of the mountain at the reservoir three times. Stood in mud ankle deep and roasted by the furnaces in the pumping station on the river. Helped install dough troughs in his new bakery and finally wrote some notices for the newspapers. This is no exaggeration. I never tried to talk to so busy a man, and yet some fellow wrote in one of our trade journals 'not to try to interview an exhibitor when his mind is occupied.' Some sarcasm."

Dupont Interests Band With Goldwyn

Enormous Financial Power of Famous Powder Family Will Further Great Goldwyn Plans; Announcement Follows Many Rumors of Duponts Entering the Industry

Culmination of the long seeries of rumors connecting the DuPont interests with varying interests in the motion picture industry, came December 2 with an announcement that the big powder people are now associated with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporations. The negotiations completed, will, it is said, give Goldwyn the most extensive resources of any picture producing and distributing company in the world.

The Associated Interests

The new interests now associated with the Goldwyn organization are represented by H. F. Dupont, Vice-president of the Dupont Powder Company; Eugene E. Dupont; W. W. Laird, of Laird & Company of Wilmington; R. R. M. Carpenter, Vice-president of the Dupont Powder Company; C. C. Kurtz, Vice-president of the Wilmington Trust Company; E. V. R. Thayer, President of the Chase National Bank of New York; Duncan A. Holmes, Vice-president of the Chase Securities Corporation; William Topkis, George T. Bissel, G. W. Davison, Vice-president of the Central Union Trust Company of New York; Macmillan Hoopes and Abbot M. Wittenberg, a member of H. Content & Company. These men will be actively identified with the business of the Goldwyn Corporation and will act on the directorate in addition to the present Board of Directors.

This identification of large financial and industrial interests with a motion picture organization is a recognition of this important industry as a stable development of modern business life, and is looked on by observers as one of the most far-reaching industrial developments of recent years. Besides enlarging the scope of the Goldwyn organization, it takes the entire film-producing industry from the realm of mere amusement and places it among the solid industries of the day.

The new development in the Goldwyn company is marked by an increase of capital stock to an authorized amount of 1,000,000 shares, of which 450,000 will be outstanding. This enlargement of resources is looked upon as a prelude to a period of expansion and development unprecedented in the history of the industry. Goldwyn will have virtually no limitations placed upon its plans for a more intensive development of the photoplay itself in its various elements and for a cultivation of a more extensive system of distribution.

During the summer, the Goldwyn company announced a reorganization which included among the directors Lee and J. J. Shubert, the Woods and Selwyn theatrical interests, controlling more than half of the stage productions made in the United States. These interests are now reserving for Goldwyn pictures the production rights on all the plays which they have produced or intend to produce in the future.

With greatly multiplied facilities for production and distribution, the plans of the Goldwyn organization to place its product in every quarter of the globe assume wider scope. A national advertising campaign in newspapers, magazines and on billboards is now in full swing. It is distinguished from other campaigns by the fact that over 80 per cent of the advertising is tied up with a definite exhibitor.

When the Goldwyn company was formed in 1916 by Samuel Goldwyn, the corporation contracted for the exclusive service of several stars of world renown. Others have been added since then, and the roster now includes Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Will Rogers and Jack Pickford. It is understood that other stars of the first magnitude are shortly to be featured under the Goldwyn banner.

Among the authors who are now writing exclusively for Goldwyn are Booth Tarkington who has created especially for Goldwyn screen productions a new boy character, Edgar, who will soon be seen in a series of 12 comedies; Octavus Roy Cohen whose first two stories for Goldwyn are now ready for picturization; Rex Beach and the authors who have combined under the leadership of Mr. Beach to form Eminent Authors, Inc., an organization of famous American authors, affiliated with Goldwyn. They are Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Leroy Scott and Gouverneur Morris.

The first few Eminent Authors pictures have been made and will soon be distributed. The first of these is the famous "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes. In process of production are "Dangerous Days," by Mary Roberts Rinehart; "Tower of Ivory," by Gertrude Atherton; "Partners of the Night," by Leroy Scott; and a powerful Basil King picture, ultra-modern in subject. The Leroy Scott picture is the first Eminent Authors production to be made in the east.

The new eastern Goldwyn studio is expected to be ready in six months to take care of the large number of productions which are to be added. Since the purchase of the studios at Culver City, the property there has been enlarged and the equipment increased. Last week, additional ground was purchased so that the Goldwyn gates now enclose 50 acres of studio property. The grouping is recognized as the largest of its kind in the world.

Well known directors who are working with Goldwyn are Reginald Barker, Victor L. Schertzinger, Frank Lloyd, Harry Beaumont and Clarence G. Badger.

RUMOR DENIED

Hayakawa Will Continue in Robertson-Cole Releases

WHILE Robertson-Cole Company is not in the habit of denying rumors one in particular has been so persistently circulated of late that an emphatic denial seems essential. In many quarters representatives of the company have heard unfounded statements to the effect that Sessue Hayakawa was no longer producing pictures for release by Robertson-Cole.

"I am very glad to be able to deny that rumor in the most emphatic terms," stated William J. Connery, Vice-President and General Manager of Haworth Pictures Corporation, who is in New York this week on a business trip. "The Haworth contract with Robertson-Cole has a long time to run. The relations of Sessue Hayakawa, the Haworth Company, and Robertson-Cole have always been most cordial and pleasant and Hayakawa will continue making pictures for release by Robertson-Cole."

Favorable Action on Mail Matter Bill Affecting Pictures

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is in receipt of advices from its Washington representative to the effect that the Senate Post Office Committee has acted favorably upon the Steenerson Bill, known as H. R. 6951, which authorizes the return to the sender, or the forwarding of undeliverable second, third and fourth class mail matter.

Congressman Halvor Steenerson of Minnesota, who originally introduced the bill in the house, explained the bill in debate as follows:

"There are two kinds of mail matter contemplated in the bill. The first is fourth-class matter of a perishable nature and of obvious value. It may be forwarded to another Post Office or, if undeliverable, returned to the sender, charged with the forwarding or return postage.

It is obvious that under its first provision this bill will be of great benefit to motion picture companies. It is thought that its eventual enactment into law is assured by the action of the Committee on Post Offices.

Costly Improvements in Miller's Los Angeles Theatre

Roy Miller, manager of Miller's Theatre, Ninth and Main streets, Los Angeles, has made $15,000 improvements in this house, and will re-open it November 29th. New equipment includes pipe organ, redecoration of the theatre, rearrangement of seating, and a decided improvement in lobby effect.

The reopening bill's feature will be the initial Realart release, Mary Miles Minter, in "Anne of Green Gables." Mr. Miller has arranged with Miss Minter to make personal appearances on the opening day.

"English Dalliance Keeps Door Shut"

FROM Lewis Roach, President of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, comes further commendation of the points made by William A. Johnston in his reply to an article by G. A. Atkinson, associate editor of the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly, the English Publication. Both the reply and the article instigating it appeared in the November 1 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Atkinson challenged the open mindedness of American producers as regarded a foreign product, while Mr. Johnston strongly arrayed himself on the other side of the fence.

Mr. Roach's letter follows:

I have read with great interest the article headed "The American Picture Door is Open — Walk in," in the Motion Picture News and perhaps you will allow me to express my entire agreement with the views which Mr. Johnston expresses.

I may say that when I left England I had a definite mission to ascertain for one of the leading English trade papers whether there was any truth in the prevailing report that the American market had decided to boycott all foreign films. It was never my opinion that this was the case and I am pleased to say that the observations I have made over here confirm my opinion absolutely. Before I left London I interviewed the heads of the principal British producing houses and in most cases I was told that it was no use to bother about selling British films in America as this was quite impossible. In other cases the terms which I was offered were such as to make business quite impossible and I must say that the British producer is himself responsible to a very large extent for the fact that his productions are not sold to any extent in America and other countries.

I will give you the instance of one producing house in England which is making pictures of a very high level of merit, one of which would undoubtedly make a great success in America. This firm has appointed as export agent a concern of which none of the members understand any language but their own. This, of course, does not affect the American sales, but it accounts for the lack of sales in other countries. This firm of export agents asked me when I interviewed them whether I could buy a film after reading the synopsis and they said this was the only way they could do business with America. They could not consider sending a show copy, and when I asked them how they proposed to dispose of their American rights they said they would either sell on synopsis or wait until an American buyer came along. American buyers are not very plentiful in London, and it is therefore probable that none of this firm's productions will ever be seen in the United States, but this will not hinder the firm in question from complaining bitterly in the press that America does not give the British producer a fair chance.

During the whole time I have been in the moving picture business in Europe (about ten years) I have considered that the British methods of foreign exploitation of pictures have been very bad. There has been no attempt to secure regular sales of British productions in this country, and when this is contrasted with the efficient and aggressive methods adopted by American producers in the early days it is not difficult to see why the American product has the biggest sale and why consequently the American standard of production is the highest in the world. I remember that even in the early days American producers shipped show copies and negatives to their agents in Europe regularly every week. When the agent found it impossible to make big sales the producer did not wrangle, but invited the co-operation of the agent in assisting him to make pictures that were more suitable for the European market. I do not think there is one British producing concern that has made a systematic effort to secure regular sales in this manner in America. There have been sporadic attempts to sell British pictures, but the methods employed have been the wrong ones, and there has been no continuity of purpose. I know I am going to be told by other Britishers that Mr. Northam came here to New York and spent several months trying to sell British pictures without much result, and Mr. Northam himself has done little since his return to England but complain bitterly of the lack of attention which he got over here.

When I asked a prominent American film man why it was that Mr. Northam was so unsuccessful he replied somewhat as follows: "This gentleman came over and settled down quietly in a hotel and sent out nice gilt-edged invitation cards to American buyers to attend trade shows at a theatre which he leased for that purpose. These trade shows were not for the most part timed to suit the convenience of the majority of buyers and there was no individual appeal and none of the vigorous exploitation methods to which we are accustomed in this country." I do not know, of course, if this correctly represents what happened, but I can quite well believe that British films are not sold over here because they have not been properly advertised by the sellers.

Since my arrival here I have written to all the British producing concerns renewing my offer to endeavor to prove to them by results that the American market is not closed to foreign productions. Up to the present moment of writing I have not received any replies, and to sum up I would like to say that I believe that the reasons for the non-success of British productions over here are:

1. That the producers generally are so distrustful as to be unwilling to send a show copy, let alone a negative out of their country.

2. That there has never been any serious attempt to advertise British pictures in accordance with American methods.

FIGHTING H. C. of L.

First National Man Named to Commission in the South

COL. FRED LEVY, president of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, has been appointed Chairman of the Kentucky Commission on the Cost of Living by Gov. Black. The Commission was created by Gov. Black to make a study of the conditions that are of such keen importance to every citizen. Col. Levy succeeds former Mayor Head, of Louisville, who found he could not give proper attention to his duties. Col. Levy has served as Colonel on the staffs of three Governors of Kentucky.

A POINTED REPLY

(A copy of Mr. Roach's reply directed to Mr. Atkinson, which does not mince words, and which presents questions, the answers to which cannot but place direct responsibility where it belongs, for whatever dalliance may be attributed to the American film industry in its treatment of the British product is presented.)

Mr. Atkinson's article in the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly of September 25th is very interesting and I quite agree with him that there must be reciprocity. Mr. Atkinson asks how far the question of reciprocity has advanced in the last three years and rightly says that it has not advaced one inch, but I cannot help thinking that in the matter of apportioning the blame for this, Mr. Atkinson is putting the boot on the wrong leg. Will Mr. Atkinson furnish an answer to the following questions:

1 — How many British manufacturers have appointed selling agents in the United States?

2 — How many British manufacturers have regularly sent show copies to be viewed by American buyers?

3 — How many British manufacturers have absolutely and resolutely declined ever to send a negative out of their own country?

4 — How many British manufacturers have said that if American buyers desire their films they must either buy them in London or buy on synopsis?

5 — Whether Mr. Atkinson or any British buyer would like to buy his American films on synopsis?

6 — How many British manufacturers have said that they can only grant their American agency on the condition that the agent guarantees to take the whole of their output for twelve months paying cash in advance in London?

7 — Whether British manufacturers have ever considered the possibilities of the States Right market in America?

8 — Whether Mr. Northam tried to sell films on this plan when he was in this country?

If Mr. Atkinson can furnish truthful answers to these questions and still say with his hand on his heart that the American buyer is to blame for the lack of opportunity for British productions in the United States I shall have nothing more to say.

I am trembling in anticipation of Mr. Northam's forthcoming page or half page of wrath as the result of my temerity in questioning his repeated assertion that British films will not sell over here because they are British, but having gone so far I might as well be killed for a sheep as for a lamb, and will tell Mr. Northam "right here" (as they

Tax Relief Soon for Canadians

Reel Tax Will be Abolished in 1920 Theatre Men are Told; Censor Scandals are Brought up

THEATRE Association officials of Canada held an important interview with Sir Henry Drayton, Federal Minister of Finance, at Ottawa, the Canadian capital, on November 21st, to ask for the abolishment of the Canadian reel tax and to discuss the possibility of Federal censorship as a successor to individual censorship in the various provinces as at present. The representatives of the exhibitors gained a promise that reel tax, which has been particularly cruel to the many small exhibitors, would be abolished in 1920 and there were some interesting disclosures in connection with censor matters.

The charge was made before Sir Henry Drayton by a representative of the largest exhibitor organization in Canada that the censors for the Province of Quebec were guilty of condemning pictures so that they would be appealed, in which case they would be reconsidered by the same board and passed in consideration of a certain fee. It was also charged by a Montreal official that delivery of films from the censor's office had been hastened as a result of special consideration on the part of the man desiring immediate use of the pictures in question. The men making these statements were urged to lay their information before Sir Lomer Gouin, the Premier of the Province of Quebec. It was asserted that three out of every 10 pictures are condemned by the Quebec censors and the loss through the rejection of these films is passed along to the exhibitors in the shape of increased film rentals.

Reference was made to the possibility of Dominion censorship, but it was pointed out by Sir Henry Drayton that this matter was outside of the control of the Federal authorities but he considered that it would be proper for the various Provincial censor boards to arrange to approve or reject a picture following the decision of one of the boards. In other words, approval of a feature by one of the boards should mean its acceptance by all others. He had had no idea of the extensive manner in which pictures were being rejected by the censors.

Representing the Canadian Motion-Picture Exhibitors' Association were Mr. A. Rosenbloom of Lachine, Quebec, and Mr. Legrove, secretary, of Montreal. Messrs. Brady and Scott, Toronto, represented the Motion-Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, while Mr. George Graham represented the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Robert Breadner represented the Inland Revenue Department.

Authors Discuss Censorship Evil

At Meeting of the Authors League of America Various Phases of Question Receive Attention

ACCORDING to a report recently received from the Goldwyn Pictures, 125 members of the Authors League of America assembled in a private motion picture theatre at Wurlitzer Hall last Tuesday to discuss motion picture censorship and determine whether the freedom of the press and of the writer is involved in State legislation for State censorship. Bills have been introduced in 28 states, and censorship is in evidence in cities like Chicago and Kansas City. The most severe censorship of pictures is in the State of Pennsylvania.

Rex Beach, as president of the Authors League, was chairman of the meeting. Mr. Beach appealed to the authors' sense of humor. The deeper he delved into the mysteries of State censorship, the more absurd he had found it. He asked the audience to judge for themselves from typical reels which were exhibited and the sections indicated that had been deleted by censors of Pennsylvania.

Gabriel Hess, chairman of the censorship committee of the motion-picture industry, pointed out among other things that the State of New York had recently decided that the motion picture in its new reels was a publicity medium. It must, therefore, be classed with newspapers and the freedom of the press and freedom of speech is involved with the freedom of the motion pictures.

Miss Mary Gray Peck, during the course of her remarks, cited the instances of several films to prove that a bad film could not be made good by cutting out the scenes depicting evil. Such censorship only made a bad picture worse, as well as leaving a great deal to the imagination. Evil is shown in the films as a contrast to good just as it always has been in melodrama. Without that contrast the triumph of virtue has no significance.

Edward D. Martin of the National Board of Review, spoke of the freedom of the motion picture in its relation to the foreign-born elements in America. According to the Goldwyn report, Mr. Martin declared "that these people were beginning to feel that the freedom they came to America for could not be found and that if the freedom of the motion picture is destroyed that would be conclusive proof that freedom of speech and freedom of thought is ended in America."

say in this country) that he is talking a lot of arrant piffle. Nobody is more sorry than I am that Mr. Northam did not have a more successful time over here, as I think that Mr. Northam is a very agreeable and pleasant gentleman, but I am told that his methods were not sufficiently aggressive for this country and that his activities stopped short at giving trade shows at times which were inconvenient to the majority of buyers. This may not be true. I was not here so I cannot say, but I do not think Mr. Northam ever thought about the states right market and I do not think he went in for that extensive advertising which is undoubtedly necessary to secure sales for pictures. I must tell you that I have approached the leading British producers offering to try to sell their pictures over here on a basis by which they risk nothing. I have asked them to send show copies against cash guarantees. I have offered to protect their interests in every imaginable way. I have offered to cooperate with them if they will come just half way and scrap some of the stupid business conditions which appear to be their fetish. Up to the moment of writing I have received no replies. May be some are on the way. Anyway I have not yet given up hope and if necessary will write again until such time as I get a reply of some kind.

Mr. Atkinson says that the present attitude of the American buyer is equivalent to a declaration of war. Let me say that the distrustful attitude of the British producer to the American agent is equivalent to an open insult. British manufacturers generally would employ their time much more profitably in taking some real steps to have their films properly marketed in the United States than by holding themselves up for the sympathy of the misinformed readers of the lay press. In other words they would be well advised to cut the cattle and come to the horses. Personally, if I were a British manufacturer I would prefer to get well earned money for my films than unearned sympathy for misfortunes of my own creation. Has it dawned on the British manufacturer who has now another grievance, namely that he has to wait about eighteen months before he can release his productions, that it is possible to release a film in the United States in two months after the showing? Does he realize that he can get some money almost immediately from this country for his films and if he does realize it will he still refuse to release his films in a foreign country before he releases them in his own in case any of the copies find their way back to England before his release date? You see I anticipate the objections because I am so painfully familiar with them.

I should like to assure readers of the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly that there are some honest firms in this country just as there are some honest ones in London and it does not require a magnifying glass to find them.

I bow my head in anticipation of the torrent of abuse that is going to fall upon me and whilst making deep apologies to anyone whose feelings I may have hurt I will repeat that it is possible to sell British films in America and half the battle will be won when the producers stop talking and start doing something.

When will they start? I should like to see it happen in my lifetime.

Theatre Owners of West Picture Center Hold Annual Dinner

An annual dinner dance of members of the Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles was held at a local cafe on November 26th, which was attended by about 200 theatre owners, exchange men and friends. A program composed of a vaudeville act by Flanagan and Edwards, of the Hallroom Comedies, Will Rogers, Goldwyn star, and Arthur Brick, salesman of Triangle exchange added to the pleasures of the evening. S. L. Rothapfel made a short talk on the future of theatre mens' business and a handsome silver automobile luncheon set was presented to the retiring president, Frank A. McDonald, by the members as an appreciation of his services during his tenure of office.

Herman Bosley, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, presided at the dinner dance party. Following the program, a jazz band furnished music for dancing

Selznick Wins Point in Equity Tilt

Judge Hand Orders Either Injunctjon Against Equity for Pendency of Fight Over Clara K. Young or Bond For $25,000 on Each Picture; Equity Supplies Surety

JUDGE Learned Hand, District Court of the Southern District of New York, on December 1 handed down a decision ordering the Equity Pictures Corporation to file bond of $25,000 for "Eyes of Youth" and a similar amount for each picture made by Clara Kimball Young for distribution by Equity, together with interest from the date of completion of the negative or negatives until decision on the pending suit was handed down. The alternative was issuance of an order restraining Equity from release of such pictures until settlement of the controversy in the courts.

Equity furnished the bond in required amount. The C. K. Y. Corporation on the other hand filed surety to the amount of $1,000, the sum to cover the nominal court costs in event of an adverse decision.

Substance of Decision

The extract from the court order ot particular moment follows:

Ordered, That unless the plaintiff (Equity) within two days after the entry and service of this order and of the undertaking of the defendants hereinafter provided for, file herein an undertaking with a surety company as surety, conditioned for the payment to defendant C. K. Y. Film Corporation of the sum of $25,000, with interest, from the date of completion of the negative or negatives and sample positive print of the motion picture, entitled "Eyes of Youth," if it shall be finally determined herein that plaintiff is not entitled to release, distribute, exhibit or exploit said motion picture until payment of said sum to said defendant, the plaintiff, its officers, agents, servants and employees and each of them, be and they hereby thereupon are enjoined and restrained during the pendency of this suit, from distributing, exhibiting or otherwise exploiting said motion picture entitled "Eyes of Youth."

When Clara Kimball Young made her contract of settlement with Selznick and the C. K. Y. Film Corporation in June of this year, published statements declared that she agreed as a term of that contract and a condition of her release from her previous contract of employment with the C. K. Y. Film Corporation, that she would pay C. K. Y. Film Corporation $25,000 upon the completion and before delivery and release of each of the next 10 motion pictures in which she should appear. She further agreed in order to secure the payment of these sums to the C. K. Y. Film Corporation that no such picture would be released or exhibited until the money due thereon had been paid and that C. K. Y. Film Corporation should have a lien on each picture made by her on her own account for the sum of $25,000 with the right upon default to sell same at public sale.

Later events are described as follows:

"Clara Kimball Young made a contract with Fine Arts Film Corporation which had just been incorporated, a capitalization of one thousand dollars ($1,000) by a former associate of her attorney, under which she agreed to make ten pictures for that corporation at a compensation to equal two-thirds of the net profits of the corporation, such compensation to be payable after the completion of the third, sixth and tenth pictures; the corporation meanwhile in its discretion to loan to her moneys for her living expenses which it could deduct from her compensation. Fine Arts Film Corporation then made a contract with Equity Pictures Corporation whereby it agreed to sell to the latter ten Clara Kimball Young pictures at $150,000 per picture. One-half of the stock of the Equity Company was issued in the name of Harry Garson, who was Miss Young's personal representative."

Lewis J. Selznick and C. K. Y. Film Corporation have repeatedly announced to the trade their rights under that contract.

About a month ago Equity Pictures Corporation started suit against Mr. Selznick, C. K. Y. Film Corporation and Select Pictures Corporation, seeking to restrain them from issuing such advertisements and announcements. The Equity company's motion for a preliminary injunction was denied by Judge Knox. The C. K. Y. Film Corporation, Select and Mr. Selznick had meanwhile filed a counter suit alleging a conspiracy between Miss Young, the Fine Arts and the Equity Pictures Corporation to deprive Mr. Selznick and the C. K. Y. Film Corporation of the fruits of their settlement contract with Miss Young, among other things setting forth the facts above stated. Upon these facts Mr. Selznick and the associated companies made a motion for an injunction to restrain Equity Pictures Corporation from releasing, distributing, delivering or exploiting Miss Young's pictures until the sum of $25,000 due on each of such pictures had been paid. This motion was argued two weeks ago before Judge Hand and decision rendered as above stated. This decision means that the Equity Pictures Corporation must put up a satisfactory surety company bond for $25,000 on account of "The Eyes of Youth," and must put up a similar bond upon the release of every subsequent Clara Kimball Young pictures which it seeks to distribute during the pendency of the suit. It is expected that the case will be heard in January.

AN OPEN MARKET!

Such is Aim of Producers Ass'n.; Executives Named

PERSISTENT rumors are abroad on the Coast that the recently organized Producers Association, comprised of prominent directors, will distribute their product through United Artists exchanges.

It is definitely known the producers and artists will work co-operatively for the upbuilding of an open market direct to the exhibitor, starting on the basis of the individual picture plan.

The policy adopted provides for future expansion to add additional producers to the association. Feeling is strong against chain theatres projects, and every endeavor will be made to stimulate individual theatre ownership, with the promise to the houses of an open market policy.

It is definitely stated that Ben Schulberg and Walter Greene are not allied with the producers, though the story has been heard that Sol Lessor is.

Last advices state the official name of the body will be Associated Producers. Thomas H. Ince has been elected General Manager and Mack Sennett, Treasurer.

International Trade Conference Attend Capitol Performance

On Saturday evening, November 22d, there assembled at the Capitol Theatre members of the International Trade Conference, representing France, Great Britain, Italy, Belgium and the United States. The delegates, said to number about 200 in all, included some of the most prominent men in the world of labor, finance and manufacture, according to reports.

The special program arranged for the distinguished audience included a concert of an international character by Pryor's band; a picture, entitled "Industrial Democracy in America—Partners in Prosperity and Dividends of Contentment," which is a product of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; "The Undercurrent," said to be the most striking anti-Bolshevik photoplay of the year; and a screen presentation of some of the delegates' activities during their American visit.

Permanent Headquarters Found for Select's London Office

The first big step in the establishment of Select Pictures, Ltd., of England, was taken last week when the London office acquired a long term lease on the three top floors of Lloyd's Bank Building in the heart of the London business district.

A brief outline of the transaction was reported to the Home Office by cable from Maxwell Milder, vice-president of Select Pictures, Ltd., of London. Architects are now busy on plans which will transform the space in Lloyd's Bank Building into the most spacious and elaborate motion-picture offices in Great Britain.

The new offices will be used as the Home Office of Select Pictures, Ltd., for England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

New England Uplifters Debate

State Committee on Pictures and Film Men of Boston Discuss State Censorship

MEMBERS of the Massachusetts State Committee on motion pictures and representatives of the motion-picture industry in Greater Boston engaged in a spirited discussion on the subject of uplifting the standard of the type pictures shown in the State of Massachusetts, in Boston last week.

The main disagreement is over the drawing up of a bill by the State Committee — it is charged, unknown to the members of the motion-picture industry—providing for the examination and licensing of motion-picture films by the State Board of Labor Industries. Declaring their opposition to State censorship the members of the committee of representatives of the motion-picture industry, contend that the bill in effect provided for the State censorship that they have been combating. Local option on this subject, however, is and will be heartily welcomed by the members of the industry.

Edward A. Golden, who controls a major portion of the distribution of the films exhibited in New England, declared that the men are unalterably opposed to the State censorship, and he felt constrained to withdraw his name from the committee.

There has been considerable comment as to the make-up of the State Committee of Massachusetts on motion pictures. It seems, this committee is composed principally of social workers bent on correcting evils, which they say everybody recognizes as existing in the showing of motion pictures in the Bay State. Endeavoring to be successful in their work, they called members of the film industry in Boston to join their number. These men, strictly business men of the motion-picture industry, ever looking forward to the interests of the public of Boston, affirming that they, too, wished to do everything possible to uplift the standard of the motion-picture industry in this State, accepted membership on the State committee.

Film Men's Grievances Probed

Los Angeles Film Exchange Men's Board of Trade Elects Officers and will Take up Complaints

THE annual election of officers of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Men's Board of Trade was held Tuesday, November 25th, when Maurice Wolf was named President; Joe Goldberg, Vice-President, and A. P. Michael Narlian was elected to succeed himself as Secretary and Treasurer.

The new president has been manager of the Los Angeles Golden Exchange for the past five years, coming to Los Angeles from Denver, where he served as manager for World, following an important position in Salt Lake. Previous, Wolf was identified with the Chicago World Exchange after conducting theatres in Texas and was special representative for two years of Metro franchise holders in Canada.

Joe Goldberg is manager of the Los Angeles Consolidated Film Corporation Exchange and has been identified with Los Angeles and San Francisco exchanges for the past five years, where he has risen from the rank of shipping clerk to his present position.

The re-election of Mr. Narlian as secretary and treasurer bespeaks the appreciation of the Board of Trade of his past years service.

In formulating plans for the coming year's activities, the Board of Trade decided to expand its usefulness by the addition of a Grievance Committee, which will take up complaints of both the exhibitors and exchange men and work out a method of disposal that will be satisfactory and beneficial to all parties concerned. In view of the fact that every exchange of Los Angeles is a member of the Board of Trade, and working in co-operation with each other, it is believed this new feature will prove more effectively advantages of the organization.

Boston Playhouses Shift Owners

Three Large Theatres in Vicinity of New England City Recently Have Changed Hands

THREE theatres in the immediate vicinity of Greater Boston, two exclusive motion-pictures houses, and one formerly a strictly stock playhouse, have changed hands during the past week.

A. H. Mailey, owner of the Brighton Theatre, Brighton, has sold his playhouse to Scott & Harding, theatrical men of Boston. The Brighton Theatre has a seating capacity of more than 500 persons, and it will be the policy of the new managers to show strictly high-class productions.

The Fellsway Theatre, situated on the Fellsway, Medford, Mass., was purchased from Lane & Plumber former owners and managers, by E. J. Kellar of Gardiner, Me. Kellar has had considerable experience in the managing of theatres in Maine, and he intends to run strictly Paramount-Artcraft pictures in his new house which seats 600.

Perhaps the most interesting transaction of the three taking place during the past week in the Hub is the purchase of the Central Square Theatre, Lynn, Mass. The Central Square was formerly an exclusive stock company house, showing the highest class of stock that could be booked in the East.

Frankel & Rothberg, the new owners will inaugurate a new policy of continuous performances from forenoon to evening.

THIS AND THAT

Herman Stern has been kept so busy the past few months as manager of the Pittsburg office of Universal that it was impossible for him to find time to pay a visit to New York for even a day's duration. At last he made the "riffle," so to speak, and is now in New York for a week's stay. He did not go there on "pleasure bent," however, but to take up some very important matters with Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Berman.

Ray R. Kelsall, manager for the Johnson Company, has devised a new way of advertising and attracting attention on Film Row. He places a Powers Excelite, with Mazda equipment in the back of the store and when it begins to get dark, he turns on the works. Those who pass by on foot or in a machine, look at the place to see where the extra light comes from. He sold one Excelite, so far on this account.

Manager C. A. Taylor of the Pathe exchange in Buffalo is one of those men in the industry who believes in doing things different all the time. The result is that Taylor is constantly adding to his office force in an effort to keep up with his record business. The latest "stunt" which "Buck" has introduced is an attractive "Holiday Greeting" card which he will mail out during the Yuletide season to exhibitors in his territory and which sales representatives in their various districts will personally sign.

The Priscilla Theatre, Cleveland, a prominent downtown vaudeville house which has always featured big photoplay productions in connection with the vaudeville program, has discontinued its feature policy, and instead is showing five short reels of film. The picture program consists of two reels of comedy, one of news events, one of pictograph and one of travelogue. Manager Mack Carrig says that people who come to see a vaudeville show do not want to sit through a long feature.

The Pawtucket Amusement Company has been formed at Providence, R. I., with a capital of $100,000 for the purpose of conducting a moving picture playhouse. The incorporators are Ira Marcus, Archie O. Joslin and James Harris.

Harold B. Crow, a former Toronto newspaperman and a Y. M. C. A. official for several years, has become associated with Pathescope of Canada, Limited, at Toronto. Crow recently returned from France where he served as a Y. M. C. A. officer.

Ace Barry, who until recently was exploit manager for the Select Pictures agency in Cleveland, Ohio, is now on the staff personnel of the Famous Players-Lasky Films of Boston.

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

A. G. Spencer of Metro Picture Service, Chicago, and director of Michigan Avenue's popular pre-release theatre, the Playhouse, has sold the lease of the World Theatre to the Henrici Restaurant Company, and the latter company is already at work changing the theatre into a restaurant. While operating the World Theatre, Mr. Spencer had the unique distinction of running the lowest price downtown house, the World, and the highest price downtown picture theatre, the Playhouse, at the same time.

D. Padoor, manager of the Merit Film Exchange, is a happy man—business great, and reports that all their pictures, which include the Lone Star Series, featuring Harry Meyers, and two-reel westerns, and Slippery Slim Comedies and Broncho Billy westerns, are all going over big.

Miss Mirriam Sawyer, widely known as one of Chicago's livest newspaper women, has joined the publicity staff of the American Film Company and it is understood will specialize on newspaper and trade press publicity for the "Flying A" features. Miss Sawyer recently resigned as publicity and advertising "man" for the Ascher Brothers Circuit of Theatres, after making an enviable reputation for herself in this work.

B. W. Beadell, Chicago manager for Select, wore a broad smile on Thanksgiving Day, for he had something to be proud of as well as thankful for, in the fact that all rental and collection records in this district have been broken in the last few weeks. Mr. Beadell modestly gives the credit for this showing to his aggressive and hard-working staff, but is, nevertheless, wearing the smile that won't come off.

Here's one that dynamic director of publicity Smith, for the Select in the Chicago district, vouches for. He informs all comers that one of the eight-inch toy balloons used in the exploitation of Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl" traveled from the roof of the Consumer's building, Chicago, clear across Lake Michigan to Hammond, Indiana, and was there picked up by Miss Edna Borchardt. Some traveling, even for a publicity balloon.

Excavation work for the $1,100,000 theatre which Balaban & Katz are constructing on Cottage Grove Avenue, near 63d street, Chicago, is practically completed and by holiday time the walls are expected to be rising above the ground. The Tivoli has been selected as the name of this new house.

Harry Corbett, for several years manager of the Harper Theatre, widely known to the trade as an able salesman and executive, has joined the staff of the Universal Film Corporation, and will direct his attention to selling the Stage Woman's War Relief Series.

Max Levy who is Chicago manager for Robertson-Cole.

Carl Laemmle and his brother-in-law, Abe Stern, stopped over in Chicago on their way to New York from French Lick Springs, where they have been vacationing. Mr. Laemmle is enthusiastic over the results the Chicago office is getting as well as over the future prospects in this district.

Al Brand, who is engaged in the exploitation of the Universal six-reel educational picture, "Heads Win," and Harry Levy, manager of the industrial department, were also visiting the Chicago office of Universal this week.

Carl Harthill, the well-known manager of the Beehive Chicago Exchange, reports that their bookings on the "Red Viper" are phenomenal, passing his fondest expectations. The picture continues its run at the Star Theatre, in Chicago's loop, to packed houses at every performance.

W. H. Hill, the Chicago territory exploitation man for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is full of brand new ideas for their forthcoming releases and is firing broadsides of ammunition into the hands of the exhibitors in this section.

Joseph Roderick, district manager for the Universal in the Middle West, arrived in Chicago from Des Moines last week, enthused over the records "Blind Husbands" and "The Right to Happiness" are making in his territory. The former is making a record at the Rialto, Des Moines, and the latter played to capacity houses at the Orpheum, Rockford. At the Alhambra, Milwaukee, the nine-reel program of "Blind Husbands" came within $69 of breaking Chaplin's record in "Shoulder Arms," although the latter program was only four reels. Manager Fisher of the Milwaukee house has written to the Chicago office of Universal urging exhibitors to book "Blind Husbands" and asking them to write to him and he will tell them how he put over a $9,000 week with this production.

Sprague Green, the genial rapid-fire old-time salesman covering Indiana for the Beehive Exchange, landed in Chicago last week.

S. L. Barnhard, president of the Capital Film Company, arrived in Chicago from the coast for a one day's conference with C. Eddy Eckels, the general manager of the organization, leaving to spend Thanksgiving with his family in Indiana. Mr. Barnhard reports that his three weeks' sojourn at the studios in California, watching the making of some new productions, convinced him that their forthcoming releases featuring Neal Hart, Al Jennings and Helen Gibson would prove to be the best pictures from all standpoints that his company has placed on the market to date.

The firm of Willis Eckels & Mack have again found it necessary to enlarge not only their quarters but their scope, and have taken over the business of the Theatre Supply Company, and are now equipped to render a 100 per cent service to the exhibitor that covers every known need of the business.

The Linick-Jacoby Enterprises, the firm which has made the Ziegfeld Theatre one of the best known first-run houses in Chicago, opened their new State-Congress vaudeville and picture theatre to crowds which give promise of a great future for this house, more than 5,600 people having passed through the flower-decked lobby before the door closed on the first day.

The policy of the house will be eight acts of vaudeville and a big feature picture each week, the show changing on Mondays. The performances will be continuous from eleven to eleven. "The Illustrious Prince," featuring Sessue Hayakawa, was the opening picture. "The Heart of a Gypsy" is the feature picture for the week of November 24.

"Publicity has its perils no less than war," says Paul Gerard Smith, publicity man for the Select in Chicago territory, who has been putting on a big exploitation campaign for Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl" at the Randolph of Chicago. He was arrested on the roof of the Consumer building while sending off balloons carrying tags entitling the finder to a photograph of Elsie Janis. Frank Cook of the Strand, Milwaukee, beat Mr. Smith's record, however, as he was "pinched" four times while exploiting bombs and sending off balloons to exploit the Janis picture in Milwaukee. They both claimed to have avoided landing behind the bars, however.

Foreign Capital Enters Locally

Arthur Beck Announces Affiliation With London Capitalists; Will be Expansion of Activities

ARTHUR F. BECK announces the affiliation of a group of London capitalists with him in his various motion picture interests. Under new financial and operating plans of which detailed information will shortly be available, there will be a wide extension of the Beck producing activities.

Coincident with the new management it is announced also that Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., has entered into an active alliance with Mr. Beck covering all producing units now in operation and in process of organization.

These announcements concerning the Beck organization are significant because it is claimed they mark the first direct participation of British capital in the production of purely American films and a reversal of the plan so far followed of taking American directors, scenario writers and technical staff men to England for the production of American pictures there.

The Beck units already operating have released plays by Augustus Thomas, Louis Joseph Vance and Charles T. Dazey. All units so far are releasing through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and the Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is understood that practically the same financial interests involved with the Jack London series of stories controlled by C. E. Shurtleff and J. Frank Brockliss are behind the Beck organization.

The new Beck administrative offices are rapidly nearing completion. These occupy one-half the building at 135 West 44th street, directly opposite the Lamb's Club. These offices will house the executive staffs of the various producing units now in operation and to be organized. Those already working are Artco Productions, Inc., Deitrich-Beck, Inc., Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc. The New York offices of the Leah Baird studios will also be included.

Mid-West Independents Meet

Film Exchange Men of St. Louis and Nearby Territories Discuss Betterment Ideas

THE managers of Independent Film Exchanges in St. Louis and territory adjacent to St. Louis, including Southern Illinois, Eastern Missouri and Kansas, held a little get-together meeting there for sociable purposes and to promote, in a way, better understanding and feeling among the State-right buyers.

Various subjects were discussed in the industry, the principal topic developing around the present boundary line for State-right buyers in Southern Illinois, over which there seems to be a great deal of confusion. Springfield, Quincy, Decatur, Paris and all territory south thereof in Southern Illinois are distributed through St. Louis by nearly all the larger exchanges, and it is pretty well conceded that this territory belongs to St. Louis. However, it was conceded by the Independents attending the get-together meeting that the producer in the East, to further the best interests of the Independents in the future in selling Southern Illinois, will include Quincy, Springfield, Decatur, Paris and that territory south, because by so doing they will give the exchange a chance to operate.

It is understood that as a result of the meeting circulars will be mailed by all the independents here to the producers, outlining in detail the advantages of establishing a policy of including the above-mentioned territory in all future film buys.

Meetings will be held from time to time and any subjects tending toward the betterment of the Independent State-right buyers will be given a ready hearing.

Among those present were Frank J. Warren, representing Standard Film Corporation, Kansas City, Mo.; Barney Fagan, Standard Film Corp., St. Louis, Mo.; Sam Werner of the United Film Service, St. Louis, Mo.; S. J. Hanken and R. Blomberg, of the Central Film Co., St. Louis Mo.; Floyd Lewis of the Arrow Film Co, St. Louis, Mo., and Sam Sherman of the Metropole Film Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Gratifying Reports on Progress of Associated Exhibitors, Inc

The formation of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the organization backed financially by the millions of Pathe, is moving along smoothly and meeting every expectation, said Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, in a statement just issued. This is significant in the light of the return to New York of Elmer R. Pearson, who has spent five weeks on the road in the interests of the Associated Exhibitors.

"Mr Pearson's report has been highly gratifying," said Mr. Brunet. "He accomplished everything he set out to do." The most prominent exhibitors in the south and southwest were most enthusiastic over the proposition; they readily realized its possibilities and were signed to Associated Exhibitors contracts.

"I have also received most satisfying reports from Mr. Fred C. Quimby, our director of exchanges, who is touring the central and far west in the interests of the Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Quimby, too, has met with general success.

John S. Robertson, popular Famous Players director, is keeping everybody at the 56th Street studio stepping lively these days. Mr. Robertson spends his recesses hunting "types." At a Brooklyn picture house recently a popular leading man well known to picture fans appeared at his best, so it would seem, since a feminine patron stepped up to the box office on her way out and said: "I'd give any amount to a man who could make my husband look like that hero." The play was "Sacred Silence"—the lead was William Russell. Somebody page Harry Millarde!

Lawrence Weber had his eye on George Irving some time before Mr. Irving signed to direct "The Girl in Waiting." It was easier to keep his eye on George Irving while he was working for another producer, Mr. Weber is finding out, for Mr. Irving moves fast when he is making preparations to "shoot" on a new photo-play.

A few days ago M. P. D. A. headquarters were requested to furnish information regarding the return of Jay Hunt to California. If Mr. Jay's rumored engagement on the coast is authentic, he has not yet announced it on the screen bulletin gracing the wall of M. P. D. A. lodge rooms.

Kenneth Webb, who is obliged to go to Boston to finish the making of his picture starring Alice Brady, made it necessary to stick around New York until after Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Webb recently finished his commission which resulted in a successful photo-play, "The Fear Market."

C. Jay Williams has been suffering the past several weeks with mastoiditis, narrowly escaping a serious operation.

Perry Vekroff a few days ago completed "The Isle of Jewels," serial production, Artco. He has been assigned a feature, on which operations are already under way, directing a Leah Baird photo-drama. Hugh Thompson is to appear in the leading masculine role.

Correction on Releasing Unit for Rivoli Pictorial Scene

In our issue of November 29th, under the caption of "With First-Run Theatres," the punctuating of the listing of the strips making up the Rivoli Pictorial gave Gaumont credit for releasing the special current events number of the authentic German pictures showing the sinking of allied ships by U-boats instead of International.

"Last But Not Least" In Our Admission Series

Four exhibitor written letters short in length but long in facts

THE four letters which follow, each captioned and properly signed, conclude our series of exhibitor written articles on admissions. These articles have proved to be of great interest to all exhibitors and of untold value in shaping their own policies to many. The News wishes to express it's thanks to those who have contributed and to announce that another special series on a subject of interest is being planned for the near future.

For this page next week we will publish a compilation of the important data contained in the series just closing, such as the average price of admission, the percentage of increase, etc. In other words we will boil down for you the facts as they appeared from week to week.

Reports Big Advance

IN your letter you ask if films have advanced. To this question I will state that during the past six months film rental has advanced 50 per cent and in many cases 100 per cent.

Regarding admission prices will state that now we are getting 30 cents for evening and 20 cents for matinee, tax included. Reserved loges for evening at 50 cents. We are not at this time planning on an increase of admission, as we believed our price in accordance with rental at the opening of the Des Moines only several months ago.

Trusting that I have given you the information desired and with best personal wishes,

Yours truly,
A. G. STOLTE,
Manager Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa.

Lick Is Standing Pat

WE have yours of recent date, and regarding the advance in prices beg to advise that we have put same off just as long as we think we possibly can. Undoubtedly the price of films has already materially increased and with the general increase in the price of everything else we presume they are entitled to more money, consequently the increased admission is necessary.

At the present time our prices are 10c., 15c. and 20c., as we have a three-floor house. If we advance our prices we will only advance the price of the lower floor, making it 25c.

Yours very truly,
C. A. LICK,
Manager New Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.

"Classified Pictures"

I WILL endeavor to give you an idea of the reasons that prevail here to warrant the increase. Our regular admission in the Rialto is 25c., including the tax; this was an increase of two cents over and above the old price, and was put into effect to cover a standard price for all pictures shown in this house — in other words we do not raise admissions in the Rialto.

E. J. Myrick

On account of high rentals we are forced to put all of the big pictures in the page at a price of 33c., including tax; this nets us a fair profit on some pictures and on others it does not, therefore this angle is still a gamble, although the public will turn out in greater numbers to see a picture at 33c. than it will to see the same picture at 25c., so there you are. I say let's have "Classified Pictures" and if the public is educated to them it will help to solve the price problem.

H. L. PERCY,
Manager Rialto and Page Theatres, Medford, Oreg.

How Butte Sees It

REPLYING to your kind favor under date of September 13th, relative to advance in admission prices, beg to advise that I, for one am not in favor of advance prices and am endeavoring to hold our prices where they will be in reach of every person in our city.

The film question is one which I feel is bound to be a serious drawback in the coming twelve months, inasmuch as most of the producers have gone out with the intention of getting more for productions which have not maintained the same standard as they have the past season. This, of course, does not include every producer, but the majority of same.

The standard of pictures must eventually be of a higher type, that is of a better educational and amusement value. However, it has been the policy of the distributing organizations to get them out regardless to quality.

I will admit this picture has a wonderful title, and if properly exploited will do a tremendous business on account of its advertising possibilities.

Any good showman knows that this line of conversation is plain, unadulterated bunk. When we step out and say to our people we have a real show, we must back it up, otherwise the box office will suffer considerably.

The picture business, like everything else in this country, is on a side track and steaming ahead sixty miles per hour. If we are not careful we are going to have a wreck, consequently sound business judgment and quality pictures are the ultimate salvation of our game, and theatres must become standardized if they are looking to the future.

With best wishes to you and the NEWS, believe me to be

Sincerely yours,
RIALTO THEATRE,

Washington Manager Has Good Exploitation Idea for Serial

M. J. CLINE, one of the largest theatre owners in Aberdeen, Washington, is the author of a new idea for the exploitation of the serial feature, "The Trail of the Octopus."

Mr. Cline states that he interested the various commercial men in his town to the extent of donating various articles to be given in connection with the showing of the serial in exchange for advertising their wares would receive on the screen.

Mr. Cline states that among the articles donated by the merchants of Aberdeen are a victrola, wrist watch, bicycle and rocker.

SUPERBA

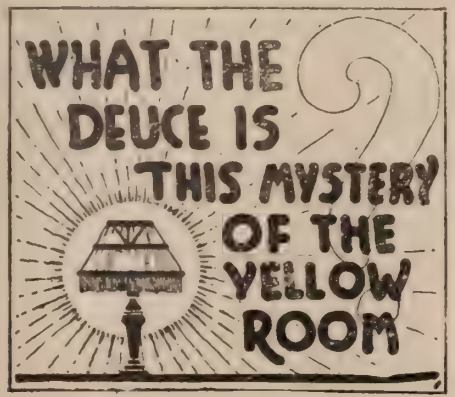
WE call this small, two columns by six inch display on "When Bearcat Went Dry" rather clever. The Superba (San Diego, Cal.), does some very good advertising but rarely have we seen anything which in the space purchased that rated better than this.

There is only one suggestion, we might make about this display and that is that the style of advertising would suggest a humorous subject and we don't think this subject is comedy. However, that in itself isn't such an advertising sin, since this is a case of selling a production on it's title alone no star being featured.

This isn't a hard ad. for even the amateur artist to attempt. If you have been going to see what you could do with the hand drawn idea, this is a good model for your first trial.

Be good but don't be too easy.

THE TOM MOORE exploitation of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" at his Washington Rialto theatre was fully explained in a story on these pages some two weeks ago. Here is one of the teaser advertisements used by Moore prior to the opening and which aroused a lot of curiosity in the Capital city.

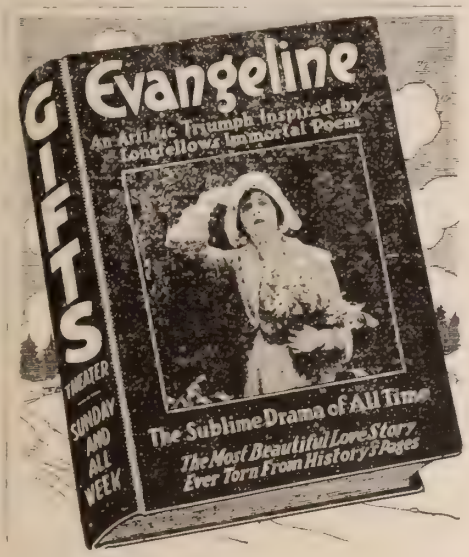


If we had been called upon to pass judgment on this display prior to the opening date of the Chautard feature at the Rialto, we would not have enthused over much about it but since it has been proven that this and other displays like it, were effective we must give the sample shown full credit for being good advertising.

So much for foresight compared to "hind sight." In size this was only two columns by three inches. A number like it were used in the same paper.

Don't do things just because other people do them.

FOR all that the picture version of "Evangeline" was such a noteworthy production, one must recognize that writing a display to advertise it, one which isn't the formula stuff of "adapted from



GIFTS THEATER
SUNDAY AND ALL WEEK
Evangeline
An Artistic Triumph Inspired by Longfellow's Immortal Poem
The Sublime Drama of All Time
The Most Beautiful Love Story Ever Torn From History's Pages

the famous Longfellow poem of the same name," is a pretty hard job. Everyone knows the story and there was nothing to be told.

Gift's theatre of Cincinnati has gotten around this exploitation difficulty by having it's artist draw the picture of a book and on the covers of that bill the attraction. The result is an attractive display which is to be highly complimented.

In size this was three columns by seven inches.

What man has done woman thinks she is qualified to improve upon.

THE Orpheum has adopted the correct angle for advertising Katherine McDonald in "The Thunderbolt" and in addition has secured some mighty good two-color printing. The jagged line across the display, suggestive of the lightning flash, was in red and the rosebud in red shaded with black, the result being a most attractive display, quite above what it would be if only the one color had been used.

In the style it is also quite as commendable. Starting out by calling the star "The American Beauty" the Orpheum has given its claim foundation by the use of a very good face cut of Miss McDonald. The title line is excellent as is the selling talk following. This is quite the best "The Thunderbolt" display we have seen. In size it was five columns by twelve inches.

What has become of the wise guy who predicted the decline of the motion picture?

THIS one by the Rivoli, Denver, on "The Isle of Conquest" is mighty artistic but we doubt if we would have made the display quite so much Norma Talmadge, for all that she is a very popular star. Here are seven different poses of Miss Talmadge and a couple of them don't look so much like her.

We do think that Hyman is correct in billing the star above the title but he should have said something about the fact that this is an adaptation of a rather popular novel. That's what the producers paid a good round sum for the picture rights for, since they didn't get anything so original when it came to actual plot.

If the Rivoli had taken the prominent members of the rather large cast and used their faces in six of the spaces which it has accorded Miss Talmadge it would have been better according to our idea. This display has cost a lot of time in framing and possesses a lot of originality. In design it is more than noteworthy. In selling value we don't think so well of it. The display in it's original was three columns by ten inches including the "sign board" part at the bottom announcing the Isis bills.

Some men's wives are like their sins—sure to find them out.

WE were of the opinion that McCormick had a monopoly on all the good motion picture advertising in Indianapolis, which, however, is herewith proven to be fallacy by this four column twelve-inch display on "A Damsel in Distress," the product of the Ohio Theatre.

From cuts to selling talk this impresses us as very good work. Giving Creighton Hale and Wm. H. Thompson head lines along with June Caprice is good judgment. Both players have a following, especially Hale, who has been signed by D. W. Griffith and can be expected to blossom forth in another "Broken Blossoms" or something equally as artistic.

We have only one suggestion to make and that is that the Ohio didn't boost this story to any great extent, which it could have done. According to all the "hard boils" it was a most entertaining picture, a sure fire audience success that deserves boosting.

M. L. Cash and Joe Reidy are rival press agents. They'd make a great partnership team — Ready Cash.

THIS full page display on "Male and Female" by the Parkway and New Wizard of Baltimore looks suspiciously like as it might be a big producer's cut. Anyway this is the way to advertise this picture so far as space is concerned. However we believe that the theatres might have got more for their money, both in artistry and in selling arguments in the full page.

It is certain that Meighan should be mentioned as the "Admirable Crichton" for his wonderful work in "The Miracle Man" has brought him into unusual prominence. Also Gloria Swanson should be given some billing. More extensive exploitation of the spectacle value of the offering is also advisable and then too Barrie's fame is a big selling angle. Don't forget these points when you play this feature but above all things advertise it in big space.

First run houses report that the feature is breaking all records even those of "The Miracle Man."

The best sermon is the one which goes over our heads and hits the other fellow.

IT is getting to be quite the fashion to bill the better two-reel comedies, especially the Mack Sennett specials which have come through in the past month or so, above the five-reel production.

Sid Grauman started this for "Salome vs. Shenandoah" and he has been quite widely followed by many theatres, among which is the Palace of Wichita, Kansas sponsor for this three-column fifteen inch display.

In fact, if we remember correctly, this is almost a replica of the Grauman ad so far as the cut used illustrating the comedy title is concerned. Anyway it is good and gets instant attention. For selling talk the Palace has used a personal letter idea, the writer purporting to be Ben Turpin. We sort of doubt if the name Turpin means so much to the fans but the Palace has identified him by reference to his eyes and therefore this may be considered good stuff. A bit long and with no particular selling argument for the two pictures advanced, but at least interesting.

We sort of think that if we had been going to frame this one that we would have used some selling talk which would emphasize the fact that this is an all comedy bill, with laughs galore, with some mention on the Bryant Washburn offering of the author and the fact that it is an adaptation of a well-known play. Bradhurst's name means quite a lot. However, you can gamble that this ad sold "Salome vs. Shenandoah" and perhaps that was enough.

Being contented with what we have isn't so hard — It's what we haven't which worries.

HERE is a S. L. Rathapfel display on his first bill as managing director of the California theatre, Los Angeles, a mid week ad on "Almost a Husband." It is interesting to note that it is a modest little two-column, five-inch display, with a quite New York style of advertising pictures tinge about it. Rathapfel is giving the International pictures which show the sinking of ships by German U-boats, a special boost which well he may. We were surprised to see these strips a part of the current events numbers at the Broadway houses with no special mention made of them on the program or no special billing in the advertising. To our mind any theatre has a right to call these strips a real feature. We saw a Metropolitan audience at two theatres sit spell bound as the pictures were projected without music. A drop of a pin could have been heard and when one big ship turned over and raised it's prow high out of the water before the final plunge, a shiver and a gasp went over the house that no drama, no matter how gripping, could have secured from so sophisticated an audience.

How Exhibitors Advertise

Another flood of "heart" titles for pictures is with us.

WELL, release dates are getting so they don't mean much. Here is a display, a nice one too, five columns by 12 inches, which was published in the Jacksonville Times Union of November 16th and as yet we in New York haven't seen the film.

As for the display itself, this one on "The Invisible Bond" has only our highest praise. The Arcade ad man has played up Miss Castle for the things for which she is famous, said a little about the title of the picture and then jumped to Fatty Arbuckle, ending up with orchestra and small numbers mention.

It is getting so we look over every issue of this same Times-Union for specimens of good display's and we usually find them. Some day we are going to take time to write down to Jacksonville and find out what the chap's name is who writes them. Then maybe we'll get acquainted by mail — seeing that there is no possibility of our spending the winter in Florida, at least so long as newspapermen's salaries remain where they are.

A lot of males and females want to see "Male and Female."

PRINTED in yellow, green with blended colorings, this big full-page display in length of the Circle's, Indianapolis, was a handsome thing, possessing almost the qualities of a painting and more than the average photogravure picture. Mr. McCormick chose a scene still from the play

The result is a tumultuous harvest of emotional abandon, a tenderness in poetic beauty, a vision of rampant brutality and ugliness ad thrust in artistic courage one against the other, and eternal truths leap out of the demolishments. Words, could they be made of spun silk and pearl bars, of poison fruit or foul vapors, could never have produced the storm of expression, the electrifying dramatic currents of the Griffith Pantomime."

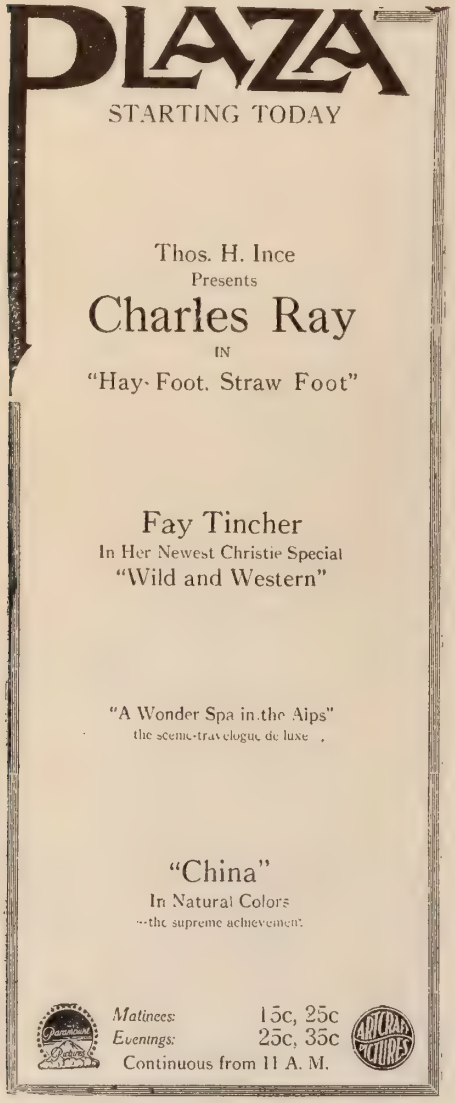
for his cut, that of where the "Chink" carries his goddess back to the loft after her death at the hands of her father. It is a good selection. Nothing could have been more suitable. When it came to selling talk, however, McCormick has chosen to quote Amy Leslie in the Chicago Daily News, when he himself is capable of writing better selling arguments, Miss Leslie has used a lot of nice sounding phrases but which do not say very much about the picture considering the number of adjectives she has utilized to tell people that "Broken Blossoms" is good. Frankly we prefer McCormick to Leslie when it comes to saying something Also we think his name would mean more to Indianapolis if he cared to write over his signature. Please, Mr. McCormick, give us what "Mister Smith says:" instead of what Miss Leslie says, in the future.

The only "bird" talked about last week in film circles was the turkey.

THIS half page on "The Girl from Outside" is one we couldn't find room for in R. E. Pritchard's two-page story last week, so we are using it here. You will note that Pritchard says, "six men loved" and then he shows the five "wags." Mistake? No. Six men did love her and she married one of them but not a "wag." There was an object in view in this announcement of the sixth man. Every person read "six" and then saw five face cuts. He thought Pritchard had made a mistake and curiosity was aroused and the person half sold. The captions used are from the epigramic titles of the film. The selling talk is again Pritchard's first class stuff written in a style that should convince anyone that here was a picture worth seeing. Further discussion of this display is unnecessary. It is good. The best we have seen on this picture. You can not do better than to save it as a model for your own display when you play this picture.

Looking Over the Ads



YOU will have to use your own judgment about calling this one by the Plaza good or bad. It certainly looked very nice on the page, showing up splendidly because of its immense white space, but there rises a question of whether or not some of this space wasn't wasted since there is so very little selling argument used.

At any rate it is a novelty, and a good idea to keep about when something happens so you have neither the time or material to frame something more complicated. This ad could be written, set up and printed in fifteen minutes. Keep it for a model to use some day when you get stuck.

Just because business is extra good don't buy a balloon. Keep your profits for the rainy day.

"MIND The Paint Girl" received good newspaper display at the hands of the Alhambra, Milwaukee, as this display testifies, a full page in depth by four columns wide ad in the Milwaukee Journal.

The Alhambra ad man has rightly put most of his eggs in one basket, that of the star's name and the title. What selling talk he has used refers principally to the Pinero name and does not dwell on the story value of the offering. A very good head cut of Miss Stewart serves to help dress the display and give it proper balance with the top portion portraying the star in her "mind the paint" role. The use of the bill board with the pot of paint and the brushes before it and the paint

HERE is one of Edward L. Hyman's nice artistic little displays, a two-column by four-inch ad on "Fair and Warmer." The managing director of the Rivoli (Denver) has used a scene still of the big merriment scene in the film for his scene cut, given his figures a background in perspective and said: "Mary Allison in 'Fair and Warmer,'" with some appropriate selling talk. That is about all that can be done in this small space and crowding would be fatal to this hand drawn display.

The man who attends his own affairs rarely has time to laugh at the mistakes of others.

A display on "The Better Half" is a little old so far as selecting it for these pages, considering the release date, is concerned, but this one only goes to prove that release dates don't mean so much nowadays, the Palace of Wachita, Kansas, being a house which usually plays "em off the bat."

We consider this display pretty good stuff. The use of a good cut of Zazu Pitts as has been done here, is especially to be recommended. This actress has an appeal that makes itself felt even through the medium of a printed likeness.

In advertising "Uncle Tom Without a Cabin" we would have given this offering a little more billing. Even might have given it the best of the argument in selling talk.

Fisher and his Motto Wins Again

"NEVER do a good thing wrong" is the motto of George Fisher manager of Tom Sax's Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee. And what a chance he had to prove this — a good theatre and a good picture. Fisher put in a high class lobby display that made all others "fade-out" when he played "Blind Husbands" two weeks ago.

He gave his poster artist orders to do his best — get out some real high class one sheet posters of original design. Then he gave instructions to put the title up in lights on the marquee. And last but not least the stage setting. The Alhambra has a good stage for especially designed settings and the wonderful scenes in the production gave Fisher the opportunity to beat his best effort in stage settings. The scene was the top of the high mountain shown in the production and was the spot marked by a post where a man had paid the price for interfering with another man's wife. Fisher had the audience clamoring for the picture soon after this scene was shown.

There is no need to detail further, the accompanying lobby photograph with the lines of people is proof of this effort. Newspaper advertising aided the manager in drawing the crowd and he didn't use it sparingly. "Blind Husbands" is a production according to Fisher that draws with only a little exploitation. "But make your exploitation high-class" he adds.

Using The Classified Columns To Advertise A Picture

A NEW idea in newspaper advertising for motion pictures has just been tried out by the New Grand Central Theatre in St. Louis, with results which probably will cause it to be added to the regular advertising schedule of the show-house. It is the use of the specialized want columns for short lengths of the "teaser type."

Constance Talmadge in "A Temperamental Wife" is the attraction which suggested this type of advertising to William Sievers of the New Grand Central. Among those which were used extensively in connection with attraction were the following:

"Information Wanted As To What Constitutes Temperament In A Wife," "To Exchange—A Temperamental Wife" "Wanted—A Temperamental Wife." "Personal P. B. P. Is Your Wife Temperamental? N. G. C.," etc.

None of the classified columns in any of the newspapers were overlooked, and appropriate lines were written for each. For seven days prior to the opening it was impossible to read the classified sections without encountering one of the "teasers."

Bill boards and straight advertising space were used to back up the "teasers." The newspaper advertisements were unique, most of them being in the form of verse. Among them was the following:

"A peppy play about wives and stenogs.
Teaches girls not to throw their pearls
before hogs,
Proves the way to win a wife is to wait,
And the way to hold hubby — just make a date
With some other innocuous male."

Each advertisement carried at the bottom a brief synopsis of the story told in the picture, an item which connected it closely with every line of the "teasers" which had been used.

The drawing power of such a campaign got a severe test for "A Temperamental Wife" opened a seven days run at the New Grand Central with weather best described as "pouring rain."

Bank in Lobby of the Superba Proves a Boon for Exploitation Purposes

ONE day a chap blew into the office looking for advice on an idea he had in his nut about constructing a theatre. What he wanted to know was what we thought of a theatre built back of a candy store with aisles down each side similar to those which lead you in and out of a cafeteria. He was going to build a house where the street frontage property was pretty expensive and he wanted to divide his investment expense some way. We told him that in the size town in which he proposed building that the idea listened pretty well, never thinking that there existed a theatre similarly constructed. However, this seems to be a fact only the candy store in this instance is a bank.

The Superba Theatre, Raleigh, N. C., is the house to which we refer, having a full-fledged bank located in the lobby.

According to R. G. Allen, owner and proprietor, there was no intention of making it appear that the theatre was so prosperous a bank was needed for its receipts. It happened through circumstances.

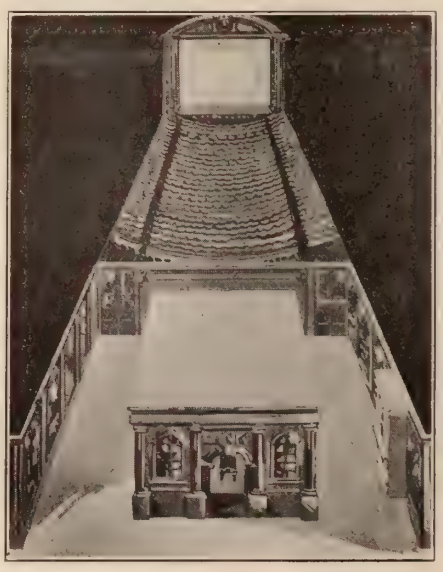
When the theatre was constructed, it was either a case of dismantling the bank or leaving it in the lobby.

"Leave it in the lobby," said Mr. Allen, "some day I'll run across a picture that will call for exploitation with the use of a bank for local color."

The words of the theatre owner proved to be more truth than wit. It wasn't long before "Her Kingdom of Dreams," starring Anita Stewart, was booked at the Superba. Mr. Allen got a glimpse of the picture and noted that most of the action took place in a bank. He gave a whoop of delight and based his exploitation upon this thought.

"This strange combination of circumstances was ideal for me," he states. "The people of Raleigh seemed to get right into the idea and after I counted up the receipts I was really glad the bank was so handy."

As a matter of proof Mr. Allen had a shot of the crowd that showed up early one morning to witness "Her Kingdom of Dreams." The other illustration demonstrates the plan upon which the bank and the theatre cooperate to save store-display space in the growing city of Raleigh.



Ben not Nick Carter Responsible for this Story

WE recently sent out a S. O. S. to small town exhibitors for exploitation ideas to which call E. Ben Carter, manager of the Electric Theatre, Bowning, Missouri, has listened and then hastened to our aid with the following stunt, which we can officially label as O. K. stuff.

When Mr. Carter played "For Husbands Only" featuring Mildred Harris, he mailed a type written letter, suggestive of the feminine sex, to Browning benedicts under a date line from Kansas City, on which the following was inscribed:

Dear Sir:

You will be surprised when you receive this letter, but you'll know the meaning of it in a few days, because I am coming to Browning for your own Special Benefit and believe me, it's going to cost you something too. The last time you saw my husband it cost you something, but you were only too glad to pay it. Now it's my time. I intended to come to Browning about a month ago, but missed my train and had to put it off. Can you arrange to see me about 8 P. M. next Wednesday?

If not, I'll look you up.

Yours truly,

MILDRED.

What happened will be inferred by reading what Mr. Carter said in describing his stunt.

"They were addressed in woman's handwriting, with green ink and stamped with perfectly good two-cent stamps.

"There were some wild women around here for a few days. Some of them were just preparing to start proceedings for a divorce when they got wise to the fact that it was an advertisement from the Electric Theatre. Everyone took the joke in a good humor, as far as I know. Now, they call me Mildred. I have some more Mildred Harris pictures booked and they'll all get a message from Mildred in advance of each showing.

"If this will be of any assistance to other small town exhibitors, in your estimation, all well and good, if not, no harm done."

"Male and Female" Sets New Record at Rivoli

DE MILLE'S "Male and Female" playing week of November 23, at the Rivoli theatre, New York, has broken the record of the house, previously held by "The Miracle Man" by 10,000 admissions and set what can be called the absolute maximum business for the theatre for any week, since at no performance since the opening matinee, Sunday, November 23, has there been a single seat vacant or any standing room available.

This record was hinted at by the writer in last week's issue, in a comment on the unusual matinee business at the show he attended. The record mentioned and those established at all the houses from which we have so far had reports is indicative of what a "clean-up" the feature is to be. Playing at two houses, day and date, in Denver, the Princess and Rialto, the production did capacity for a full week and probably will be brought back.

Judging the Value of Big Exploitation

BOX-OFFICE proof that every cent an exhibitor spends in the cause of exploitation returns to him in proportionately bigger profits has been demonstrated in Boston and vicinity by a number of theatre managers, each of them under a serious exhibitor handicap.

The facts herein told are neither the outcome of a desire on the part of several exhibitors to make history for the motion picture industry nor a sudden outburst of energy on the part of a trade paper scribe. The showmen responsible for this item went about their work in a business-like manner with one objective in view — to make money for themselves. As a guide to other exhibitors their experience should be re-assuring and encouraging. It happens as a coincidence that the three exhibitors were confronted with the same problem, of making a profitable showing on "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian.

The Waldorf Theatre of Boston, located in a mixed district of boarding and rooming houses, manufacturing establishments and sales rooms was under no misapprehension about the location of the theatre. To make good on a big attraction that demands a high rental is the most serious problem of this theatre. Its location demands that the merit of an attraction draw the Boston public away from the line of least resistance and sent them forth on trolley cars and other means of inconvenient conveyance.

L. B. Jones, the manager of the Waldorf, was finally induced to increase his advertising expenditures, being influenced largely by the good results which had attended other theatre's exploitation along similar lines. All the Boston newspapers carried his display advertising and bill boards were widely used. The effect of the exploitation was shown when the theatre was completely sold out on the first Monday despite the fact that the seating capacity is more than 3,500.

Less than fifteen days later "Auction of Souls," played at the Scollay Square Theatre in Boston. Again the question of promotion was discussed. Mr. McGunness, manager of the Scolly Square House, was naturally alarmed at what the cost of the promotion matter would be. Gritting his teeth, he agreed to the expenditure, and in addition arranged an artistic float with cut-outs from a 24-sheet to travel the streets of Boston. The large size o and the high-coloring of the paper gave a startling life-like affect.

Effective float used for the exploitation of "Auction of Souls" at Scollays Square Olympia theatre, Boston

To keep the float constantly on its mission was far from a cheap enterprise. In addition to a liberal use of newspaper display space, thousands of window cards and heralds, was enough to frighten most any exhibitor. However, when receipts were checked it was found that the Scollay Square Theatre, which has enjoyed some wonderful records, had broken all existing box office and attendance figures, had experienced the best business in the history of the theatre.

In Fall River, not far away, exploitation expense came high for Louis M. Boas, manager of the Empire Theatre. Like in a great many other of the smaller cities newspaper space is at a premium and it takes an unqualified exhibit or courage to bravely risk a heavy promotion expense that in some cases is more than his rental for an attraction. Impressing upon the public of Fall River that he had an unusual picture, Mr. Boas raised prices and filled his theatre at every performance. He declared, following the end of his run, that he had turned away more people on account of lack of seating space than those who had seen the production.

It took a great amount of confidence for the Owl Theatre in Lowell, and for Gordon's Olympia in Boston to stand the cost of a big exploitation expense, especially in view of the fact that other theatres had run the attraction and that a great percentage of the eligibles had seen the picture. Yet the former theatre did a capacity business while the Olympia established records.

This is ample proof and especially desirable at the present time to show that exploitation is a profit-making method and that where an attraction merits it, too much promotion regardless of cost is hard to obtain.

A Band and Real Clowns For Exploiting "Jinx"

AMONG the exhibitors who recognized the exploitation possibilities of "Jinx," the Mabel Normand feature in which the effervescent star plays the part of a circus girl, is N. E. Bernower, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Canton, Ohio.

Mr. Bernower's advertising campaign had all the elements which go for complete success and embraced every angle of the game.

It began with cleverly worded display ads. well in advance of the showing and ended during the run with several unique stunts that mark the Strand manager as a live wire and an expert showman.

The accompanying cuts will illustrate how the lobby of the theatre was dressed up for the circus feature's engagement, and how Bernower went out after Canton's stay-at-homes with a band and a crew of "circus clowns."

The band which Bernower engaged for his "circus" was an organization that is a great pride of a Canton high school. It was somewhat small, eight pieces being pressed into service for the "parade," but what it lacked in size it made up in volume and enthusiasm. The high school boys entered into the spirit of the thing with zest and there was quite an argument as to who was to have the honor of being the "clowns" for the Bernower "circus."

The four selected, as will be shown in the cut, made up as the real thing and worked just as hard and with quite as much effectiveness as if they had been engaged by Ringling's.

Bernower also managed to find four big circus banners which he hung up in his lobby.

The band and clowns mounted the truck shown in the illustration Saturday before the show and spent the best part of the day "clowning" and "tooting their heads off" in the interest of "Jinx."

The Alhambra has recently entered the week-run houses, which is an indication that Bernower's publicity methods did not begin and end with the efforts he put forth on "Jinx."

Here it is, the "circus" which the Alhambra engaged for exploitation of "Jinx"

Wineberg Shows "Upstairs and Down" Full Week

MANAGER E. O. Wineberg of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., put over an excellent exploitation campaign for his week's showing of Olive Thomas in "Upstairs and Down." Two weeks before the opening the local Broadway Auditorium housed a big Hallowe'en dance and Mr. Wineberg arranged with promoters to stage an Olive Thomas fox trot as the feature event of the evening. To the prize winners he awarded a handsome Olive Thomas loving cup. A week later the big Peace ball was held in the same municipal hall and again Mr. Wineberg arranged to stage another event, this time an "Upstairs and Down," dancing contest for which he also awarded an attractive loving cup. Inasmuch as one of the editors of a local newspaper was interested in both of these dancing events, the Strand received much publicity gratis.

There were several window displays with large stairs as the central figure and attractive signs drawing attention to the dancing contests and the fact that "Upstairs and Down," was coming to the Strand. One of the local music stores arranged a big window display and also devoted the space on a large hanging sign in front of the store, advertising the fact that "Upstairs and Down," was at the Strand and that the big song hit of the play was on sale in the store. Leo Considine, one of Buffalo's talented vocalists, through an arrangement with the music store, sang "Upstairs and Down," at each performance and inasmuch as this was the first time that solists ever appeared at the Strand, Mr. Considine almost "stopped the show."

Farnum Picture Holds Up For Week Run

ANOTHER box office record is reported for the largest and most beautiful of Akron, Ohio's playhouses, the Strand, managed by J. P. Dunlevy, in the recent engagement of Zane Gray's romance of the West, "The Last of the Duanes" in which William Farnum is starred.

The engagement was for a week, a new policy for the better pictures at the Strand.

Manager Dunlevy adopted the same type of exploitation with "The Last of the Duanes," as he had used with previous Farnum pictures — a campaign which in each case had borne the stamp of success, distinctive cut-outs, effective banners, striking posters and attractive photos were displayed at points of vantage on the exterior of the theatre and in the lobby. This publicity was supplemented by liberal advertisements in the newspapers and wide announcement through the medium of the billboard.

The accompanying cut will illustrate the business the feature drew at the Strand.

Diebel of the Liberty, Youngstown Gives "Checkers" Extra Exploitation

C. W. DIEBEL, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, gave "Checkers" his best efforts in the way of exploitation with gratifying results.

A Publicity Stunt Which Benefits Producer, Star, Newspaper and Exhibitor

A PUBLICITY stunt for exhibitors, stars and distributors which costs nothing for the full page stories and pictorial layouts required to conduct it, and which is so elastic that it can be suited to any theatre or star, has just been launched by Carl M. Saunders, photoplay editor of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Herald to discover what girl in Michigan most closely resembles Katherine MacDonald, termed in the advertising of her first two starring vehicles, "The Thunderbolt" and "The Beauty Market," as the most beautiful woman on the screen.

The prime thought behind the contest is circulation for newspaper. Circulation campaigns depend for success upon the novelty and broadness of appeal in the features used to grip public attention, induce it to read, and then to buy.

The instance of the Grand Rapids Herald is the first of which there is any record wherein a motion picture department has been used as the big factor in a drive for subscriptions and readers.

It gave promise of becoming a big special news feature that would be closely watched throughout the wide territory in which the Herald circulates.

A prize of $25 will be awarded by the Herald to the girl who is chosen as winner of the contest, personal photograph, autographed by Miss MacDonald, will be presented to each of 15 other entrants who rank next in resemblance to the First National star.

For exhibitors who want to use this or a similar idea in behalf of Miss MacDonald or any other feminine star, the chief argument to use with the newspaper selected is the big circulation possibilities to the publication. With the precedent now established by the Herald it is not difficult to prove that there is great circulation value in such a contest.

The rules are simple. All that each entrant has to do is to mail photographs of themselves to the Katherine MacDonald Contest Editor of the paper. There is no entrance fee. There is no pecuniary consideration to run counter to post-office rulings.

The net result of such a contest is a direct benefit to the newspaper, a phenomenal amount of publicity for the star, and a degree of publicity for the exhibitor or theatre that could not be purchased at any price.

The Herald contest will continue for six weeks. The Sunday issue of the Photoplay Department each week will contain a full page layout and story about the competition. A photo of Miss MacDonald will be published in each edition, and surrounding it, for comparative purposes by the readers, will be the photos of the various entrants. It is this publication of the pictures of local girls who feel that they resemble Miss MacDonald that gives the contest a remarkable local news value.

Work on "The Official Chaperon" by Natalie Sumner Lincoln, in which Peggy Hyland will be starred, has been begun at the William Fox studios in Hollywood.

Gladys Leslie, working under the direction of her new director, William J. Humphrey, is making rapid progress on her next Vitagraph feature, "The Midnight Bride."

This shows the crowd which collected to capture "The Perfect Lover" in the contest staged by the News-Bee at the Alhambra (Toledo, Ohio) showing of the film "The Perfect Lover." The arrow shows the location where the impersonator was located when caught

"Perfect Lover" Contest Stirs Toledo, Ohio

OUT at Toledo, Ohio, is a newspaper which is leading all others when it comes to co-operating with the photoplay theatres, with wonderful results accruing both for the paper and the motion picture houses.

The photoplay editor of the News-Bee, the publication to which we refer. is a live wire with a born sense of what is showmanship. The ideas, which are originated to build interest in the feature pictures booked for Toledo and incidentally swell the subscription lists of the News-Bee, are many and varied. Recently the Alhambra Theatre played Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," and the co-operation it received from the News-Bee and the stunt devised and engineered by the photoplay editor and the advertising solicitors for the engagement of the film are an epoch in the picture history of the city.

The special event in "The Perfect Lover" exploitation campaign was a $75 prize offer for the person who would identify a man who was impersonating Eugene O'Brien, the star of the picture.

This stunt was spread all over the News-Bee's pages and included a photograph of the full-length figure of the impersonator with his eyes, nose and mouth masked. The paper told where the "perfect lover" would be at certain times, as is usual in pulling this advertising stunt.

One of the places where the impersonator was scheduled to appear was at a letter box in front of the Toledo post office. This announcement was made after four days of publicity, during which time the "perfect lover" had escaped detection.

Very definite identifying information was given for the post office appearance in the announcement that the man would drop a letter in the mail box between 12 noon and 12.15 P. M. The crowd which collected blockaded the street as will be proven by the accompanying photograph.

Some Good Exploitation For "The Brat"

WAUPUN, Wisconsin, is a town up near the city which Schlitz made famous, that has some reasons for being famous or infamous itself, just which way you want to figure it, in that it is the location of one of Wisconsin's state prisons.

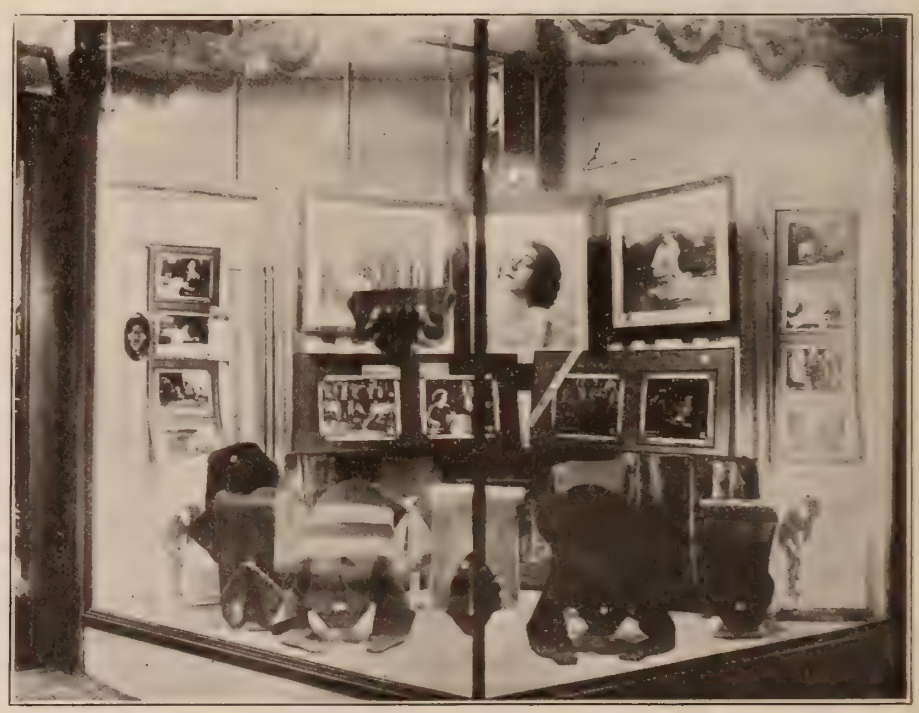
Also because it is the home of the Davison Theatre, a most progressive motion pic ture house which has proven the theory that the small town theatre cannot afford window and lobby displays as unsound.

The accompanying cut will illustrate what the Dawson did for it's engagement of Nazimova, in "The Brat."

As will be remembered "The Brat" wears a tight fitting shabby little sweater in all the scenes up to the time that her benefactor fits her out with new apparel.

Consequently the Davison manager went over to a furnishing goods store and arranged for a combination window display of sweaters and Nazimova in "The Brat" advertising. He secured from the exchange a lot of good scene stills, both the large size and small ones, together with a nice photograph of the star and after mounting each picture in an appropriate manner, used the display for a backing in the store window. The result of his efforts is to be seen in the cut. This is not an expensive stunt and the direct results were extremely beneficial to both the store and the theatre manager.

Every one who passed along the street stopped to inspect the display. The Davison does not neglect a single opportunity to secure extra busIness by unusual exploitation. He believes that it is this sort of publicity which builds patronage for a picture. We do too. If only more small town managers would emulate the Davison, more small town showmen could drive around in buzz buggies if they choose.



Window display which proved an effective advertising medium for the Davison theatre, Waupun, Wis.

Example of the Part Music is Assuming in the Picture Theatre

WITH the development of the motion picture and of motion-picture presentation the industry's affiliation with music seems to be defined clearly as the line of improvement which is to be expected in the progress of the art of presenting programs where the photoplay is a part of the entertainment.

Grand opera selections both vocal and instrumental are established firmly in the larger houses.

Now comes the engagement of recognized musical acts and other musical organizations, a notable example being Pryor's Band at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

However, New York is not alone in developing this end of the motion-picture program. Other cities are keeping pace with the Metropolis and none excel Los Angeles.

A most pretentious musical organization is now in its second weeks' engagement at Tally's Kinema Theatre in the last-named city, where Lardo's Mexican Band of Mexico City, a troupe which ranks with the best of Mexico's musical organizations, has been giving daily concerts that have met with marked approval at the hands of Los Angeles theatregoers.

The Lardo organization is something more than just a band, however. It carries a full company of native dancers and musicians who are familiar with all the Mexican dance steps and Mexican musical instruments. Their program is a varied one and decidedly unique in its character. A complete scenical equipment is carried and the performers appear in stunning native costumes.

After the completion of the Kinema engagement which began on November 10th, the company will move to other cities in its tour of the United States and later will emigrate to Paris for an indefinite engagement. The accompanying photographs will give the reader a small idea of the size and quality of this organization.

The peculiar musical instruments of the Mexicans will be noted in the cuts. The music of Mexico is largely Spanish in character, containing all the fire and rhythm of its mother country. There is also a very good trace of the harmony that characterizes the music of the Latin races.

theatre. On the exterior, banners, cutouts, and other decorative paraphernalia were arranged in most attractive fashion. Above the facade, a fifteen-foot banner, bearing the words "CHECKERS, The Most Famous of Racing Plays," was displayed. Below, Deibel placed a huge cutout of the horse Remorse on the home stretch. On one side of this display a striking cut-cut of the judges' stand was set.

In his lobby display, Diebel used a twenty-four foot banner, numerous smaller ones, posters of all descriptions, and photos of the thrilling scenes in the great drama of the racetrack. The interior of the theatre

California Theatre Re-Opening Under Directorship of Rothapfel Auspicious

IN assuming the directorship of the California Theatre, S. L. Rothapfel brought to Los Angeles a number of features he had heretofore used in connection with his programs at the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand Theatres in New York City. Mr. Rothapfel also caused the theatre to be closed a few days prior to the reopening, and during the interval inaugurated a number of changes which add materially to its charm and attractiveness throughout. The reopening was a very auspicious occasion which brought many prominent people of the film industry into the auditorium of the popular film theatre.

It has been Mr. Rothapfel's intention to symbolize California sunshine, warmth and beauty in the California theatre by slight alterations of lighting effects, and slight changes in the decorative scheme. Previously the front of the theatre was lighted with white spotlights, but under the Rothapfel regime this was changed to an amber hue, typifying California golden sunshine. This same color scheme has been carried on into the foyer and auditorium. The great dome over the foyer and mezzanine promenade well, has been changed to amber by the application of gold leaf, and reflects a warmth to the theatre heretofore absent when this dome was of a blue tint to represent the sky. Throughout the auditorium there has been a liberal use of tapestries which harmonize admirably with the colors of the house decoration scheme.

The mammoth proscenium arch has been altered so as to give the effect of three separate stages, similar to the effect secured by Mr. Rothapfel at the Rialto, New York. The false proscenium has been changed to more effectively make it a part of the stage, and these changes have materially added to the use to which the stage may be put in both the showing of films, and the adding of atmosphere creating features. The grand stairway leading from the stage to the orchestra pit has been done away with in order to make room for the enlargement of the orchestra, the number of men being increased to 40, and a chorus of 12 voices being added to augment the orchestra in certain numbers. The entire program of the reopening bill at the California was carried in Motion-Picture News with "First Run Theatres" Department in the issue of November 22d.

In reopening the theatre Mr. Rothapfel has put into effect a new admission price schedule which has not in any way altered the attendance at the theatre. Prices have been increased, and in all instances the admission includes the war tax. Matinee prices, except Saturday and Sunday are: Lower floor, 30 cents; loges, 50 cents; balcony, 20 cents. Evening and Saturdays and Sunday matinees: Lower floor, 50 cents; loges, 75 cents; balcony, 30 cents. The prices were formerly, 15, 25 and 35 for matinees, and 15, 25, 35 and 50 for evening performances.

reflected the spirit of the play, being attractively dressed with checkered draperies and decorative material tending to create a racetrack atmosphere.

Diebel also utilized all other publicity factors to full advantage, using large space in the newspapers and collaborating with the music stores in a campaign for the sale of the popular song "Checkers" inspired by the spectacular melodrama.

Elaborate Exploitation of "Broken Blossoms" Brings Additional Clientele

THOMAS PROFFITT, manager of the William Penn Theatre, of West Chester, Pa., tells us that he has proven another theory with elaborate exploitation and presentation ideas, with bigger and better pictures, and that is that he can always put over the productions of that calibre under that plan for double his usual run.

It has been the policy of Mr. Proffitt to run two productions a week, and being in the independent field, has been enabled to pick some particularly good ones. Originally his theatre was a three-a-week theatre, and the bigger pictures changed that policy.

When he contracted for Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" he believed that he could extend his usual run of three days to seven, and he determined to try it. He did, and he says he succeeded in doing wonderful business with the production.

Besides giving the production for being one of the most wonderful he has ever had the opportunity of showing to his patrons, he maintains that the extra effort he put into his advertising, his exploitation of the picture, and the presentation he gave the picture in the theatre, was the means of proving his theory that any really big production could play any three or two-a-week theatre for twice the length of their regular runs.

For two weeks prior to the opening of the production he kept plugging at his public, telling them every detail of the production, the cast, and all about the master producer who made it possible. His programs for those weeks always carried display material about the picture, his lobby told of its coming, the newspapers ran extra space in advertising, his bill boards throughout the town and for miles around were utilized in calling to attention "Broken Blossoms."

The presentation of the picture from a standpoint of lobby display and theatre decoration was never before equalled in West Chester, and he created a great deal of comment which brought to his theatre many people who had not been there before. The lobby of the theatre was latticed in the form of a semi-circle and covered with broken blossoms of all colors. The lights of the ceiling were dimmed by the use of Japanese lanterns and through the centre of the lobby he erected a number of artistic valse designed especially for the purpose from which hung flowers galore.

Pictures in black and white cannot in any way give the slightest idea of the beauty the decorations presented. The interior of the theatre was decorated with flowers, palms and blossoms, and incense was burned at different intervals to give the theatre an Oriental atmosphere.

Mr. Proffitt who is conceded to be one of the live-wire exhibitors in Eastern Pennsylvania has now established a policy of increased exploitation and additional decorative presentation for all of his future big pictures.

Theatre War Results In Victory For All Factions

ACCORDING to reports Hazleton, Pa., has been and is the scene of a very merry little theatre war, but which so far has resulted in nothing but gains for all factions concerned.

The rumpus started when the two large houses of the city backed up at the price asked for "Daddy Long Legs" and decided that they could get along without the Pickford picture, which was all right as far as they were concerned, but not just in line with the Exchange man's ideas seeing that he wanted to turn in some money from a Hazleton showing.

The managers of the Campbell and the Feeley house didn't change their minds about prices, and finally the film was placed in the Diamond theatre, seating around 400 and located far out in the residential section.

Then it was that the fun started. A full-page display advertising the Pickford picture was run in all the newspapers and designating the Diamond as the house where the attraction would play.

When a theatre seating one-third of the local maximum capacity pulled a stunt like this the managers of the Campbell and Feeley accepted the challenge. Both booked special attractions for the same dates announced for "Daddy Long Legs" at the Diamond the Campbell booking "The Unpardonable Sin," while Dorothy Phillips in "Heart of Humanity" was the selection of the Feeley management.

The full-page and quarter-page advertisements were used freely by all three of the theatres, and there was not an edition for a week prior to the runs that carried less than a quarter page on each of the attractions. All were clever advertising writers; and the Campbell and Feeley copy made the most of the fact that the Diamond had raised the regular prices to 30 cents for the evening performances and 17 cents for matinees, both including war tax, by emphasizing that both the large theatres would maintain regular prices.

The Diamond got an advantage by obtaining exclusively the card space on the front of all the street cars in town for "Daddy Long Legs." Another innovation started, this one made necessary by the location of the Diamond — was the establishment of a motor bus line from the business section direct to the door of the theatre during the run of the Pickford production. In addition to being an attraction to patrons, it also proved to be the source of much free advertising.

The Diamond then went after the phonograph and music stores for window displays on the records and sheet music copies of "Daddy Long Legs" and "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs." Co-operation of the dealers was obtained but the Campbell coppered this bet by getting "The Unpardonable Sin" music and records featured. They also ran a dead heat on stationery stores in the matter of obtaining displays on the books of each picture, but the Diamond was able to get dry goods stores and grocery markets interested as well as the department stores. One store went so far as to advertise ginghams as fresh as worn by Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs." Prunes and cider became common in store windows, as displays "hooked up" to the Pickford picture.

The biggest thing, however, that was put through was the arrangement of the first Sunday exhibition of a motion picture ever given in Hazleton. The fears of the mayor that the church element would object were overcome and the required official consent obtained. In addition to inviting all the city officials and other dignitaries, every school teacher in the city was included on the invitation list. The invitations were engraved. The Sunday performance was given to an audience that taxed the capacity of the Diamond.

All the city fathers were there, as well as all the school teachers, and a chance remark by one of the latter originated the idea of a matinee every day of the run at 4.15 with a special price of ten cents for school children.

Every theatre in the city felt the increased interest in motion pictures which had been aroused by the extensive warfare advertising of all three of the theatres. On the day the Pickford picture started at the Diamond, S. R. O. signs became as common in the three lobbies as lithographs had been before. At the Diamond the crush almost amounted to a catastrophe. Regular patrons, who had always been able to find a seat whenever they cared to come to the theatre, made strenuous objections to Manager Myers about having to wait in line for two or three hours before they could even get standing room. They acquired some comfort from the extension of the run for a day longer than was originally planned, but more were turned away from the last performance than from the first.

Lynch Enterprises Publish House Organ

THE fourth issue of the very interesting house organ of the S. A. Lynch enterprises, Inc., is just off the press. This publication, which is issued bi-monthly from the Atlanta home office, was started about the middle of September, when L. L. Stewart, formerly of the advertising department of the Triangle Film Corporation in New York, came South to take care of the advertising program of this big theatre-holding organization.

Mr. Stewart is well known as an advertising and publicity man in the film business and the attractiveness of "The Enterprise Square Dealer," which is the name adopted for the organ, is an evidence of his ability to put out successful trade promotion literature. Since its inception there has been a steady and increasing demand for copies of "The Enterprise Square Dealer." The distribution of this organ will be chiefly among the theatre managers and employees of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., but it is being liberally distributed among the officials and employees of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., and the Enterprises Distributing Corporation. It carries quite a number of articles that are helpful to the exhibitor, personal notes and photographs about the employees of the various units of these corporations, and at the same time gives them news of the important happenings at headquarters in Atlanta.

Robertson-Cole Reviews Year

Since the Initial Release One Year Ago, the Company Has Achieved Big Successes in Stars and Out-Put

ON December 15th the Robertson-Cole Company, Division of Films, celebrates its first birthday in the domestic field of operations in the motion picture industry. It marks the close of a year of great expansion and development and the beginning of a new year with the company recognized among the most important of the industry's factors. Not a month in the year has passed without an announcement indicating the continuous growth of the concern, and in the past three months striking announcements have followed each other with a surprising rapidity.

Although the first actual release of Robertson-Cole occurred just a year ago the firm had long been established among the leading importers and exporters of the United States. As bankers and exporters, Robertson-Cole had achieved an enviable reputation with the powerful commercial interests in every part of the world and in the last few years had played an important part in developing the foreign film market for American products.

The initial release of Robertson-Cole in the domestic field was Martin Johnson's famous film, "Cannibals of the South Seas," and since its release on December 15, 1918, it has been played, it is said, in almost every theatre in this country and in South America, Great Britain and Continental Europe. Fifty-two feature pictures, one every week, have been released during the year and without exception they have met with the approval of exhibitors and the public.

In addition to the feature pictures there were eight big specials, seventeen Strand Comedies issued at the rate of one a week, and a second section of the remarkable Johnson pictures, issued under the title of "Captured by Cannibals." Leading the specials, were the Brentwood productions, "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times," "The Other Half" and "Poor Relations." The Maurice Tourneur production, "The Broken Butterfly," released a few weeks ago as a special, is one of the distinctly big pictures of the year, according to early comments. Among the other specials are "Man's Desire" with Lewis Stone, and "What Every Woman Wants."

In the course of the year Sessue Hayakawa has steadily advanced in popularity, until to-day his pictures are featured in more than 5,000 theatres throughout the United States. Bessie Barriscale has scored repeatedly in her feature pictures and she has become a great popular favorite. H. B. Warner, who joined the Robertson-Cole forces last summer, has also steadily increased in popularity, although he was welcomed to the screen by a great host of admirers of his work on the speaking-stage.

"Let's Go!" New Selznick Slogan

This Oft-Quoted Expression Will Be Appropriated and Used in Exploiting Selznick Films

"LET'S GO!"

This simple expression—used unconsciously by almost every man, woman and child at various intervals during the rounds of their daily activities—has been capitalized by Selznick Pictures Corporation as an exhibitor-slogan for the exploitation of Selznick and Select Pictures, according to a Selznick statement just received.

In the future, all advertisements prepared for exhibitor use by the exploitation forces of Select Pictures Corporation will bear the two-word slogan in conspicuous type or lettering over or under the billing of the picture. The psychological effect of the slogan is a matter of established fact. When Mary and Johnnie, picture fans clear through to the core, cast an expectant gaze at the theatre around the corner, it's safe to bet that the expression, "Let's Go!" will hasten the trip to the box office.

In adopting the slogan for Selznick advertising and exploitation the promotion department of Select Pictures Corporation has originated several novel methods for its use, details of which are given in the exhibitors' campaign books issued on specific Selznick and Select releases, it is reported.

Grossman Pictures, Inc., Open Offices in New York City

Grossman Pictures, Inc., with studios at Ithaca, N. Y., have opened New York City offices at 110 West 42d street. The offices will be in charge of T. D. Bonneville, who will handle publicity, advertising and sales for the company. The suite includes a private office for Harry Grossman who, however, will spend a large portion of his time in supervising production at the studios, it is said.

The present productions of the company are the serial "$1,000,000 Reward," featuring Lillian Walker and a feature picture soon to be announced.

Pre-Releases Promise Well for "The Lord Loves the Irish"

"The Lord Loves the Irish," third in J. Warren Kerrigan's series of Robert Brunton productions, and scheduled for release by the Hodkinson organization on December 14th, got off to a successful start, it is said, on Sunday in its pre-release engagements in several of the larger cities.

The Rowland and Clark circuit of Pittsburg put on "The Lord Loves the Irish" at its downtown first-run house. This initial showing on the circuit was followed within a week with engagements at all other Rowland and Clark theatres in Pittsburgh and environs. The Alhambra, Indianapolis, also opened a week's engagement of the latest Kerrigan production and the Alcazar, the big Madison street, Chicago, playhouse, where Mr. Kerrigan is a prime favorite, began a pre-release engagement with an opening day's business that augurs well for a record-breaking run.

Stronger Stories to be Provided for Hallroom Boys Comics

So strong have the Hallroom Boys Comedies been going, according to report, that Jack and Harry Cohn have decided that even better stories for these two reelers must be supplied.

So keen are the Cohns to give only the best service possible with these comedies, that they have organized a complete publicity department, which will lend exchange men and exhibitors every possible aid. All of the accessories needed to put over the series will be forthcoming within a short time, and in every other way will the distribution of the two reelers be augmented.

Sales letters, ideas and suggestions for proper exploitation, all kinds of literature, newspaper electros and mats, as well as regular press service will be provided when the new department gets well under way.

Nov. 30, Release date of "Captain Kidd's Kids," New Lloyd Comedy

With the resounding success of Harold Lloyd's first two-reel comedy, "Bumping into Broadway," still gaining momentum, Pathe announces this week the release of his second effort, "Captain Kidd's Kids," on November 30th. It is a rollicking comedy of the seas, with a full crew of beautiful girls, and with captivating Bebe Daniels leading the female buccaneers. In every way "Captain Kidd's Kids" measures up to the standard set by "Bumping into Broadway." Harry Pollard is chief assistant to Lloyed in his pirating of laughs in "Captain Kidd's Kids."

A full line of special advertising material will accompany the new feature, which wlil include stock slide, stock 22 x 28 of the star, (colored), stock one, three and twenty-four sheets; special one and three and six sheet, special set of lobby display, special slide, and special one, two and three column ad cuts and mats.

Agnes Johnston Adapted Mac-Lean-May Production

"Twenty-Three-And-One-Half-Hours Leave" was not adapted for the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos although by an error MOTION PICTURE NEWS credited them with the adaptation of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story.

Agnes Christine Johnston wrote the scenario for Thos. H. Ince in which he introduced his new team of youthful stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

Miss Johnston formerly wrote the "sunshine" stories for Gladys Hulette at Thanhouser and Pathe and also adapted "Daddy-Long-Legs" for Mary Pickford.

Metro Buys "Fine Feathers"

The forward-moving career of Metro Pictures Corporation these days is just one new play after another. The newest is "Fine Feathers." Announcement is made from the New York offices of the corporation that Metro has purchased the screen rights to the notable drama by Eugene Walter, which will be made into a feature photoplay by Screen Classics, Inc. "Fine Feathers" was strongly recommended to Metro in suggestions submitted by ex-exhibitors from all parts of the country.

Vitagraph Going at Full Speed

Several Fine Offerings Due During December, and Forces Are Busy on Productions for Coming Year

THE close of 1919 finds Vitagraph not only offering several splendid productions during December, but extremely busy on new productions for well into the coming year. All of its stars and special players are busy, and both of Vitagraph's studios at Brooklyn and Hollywood are working overtime not alone to have their new pictures ready on schedule time but in order that the Christmas holidays may be enjoyed.

Alice Joyce has another splendid feature ready for release. It is called "Slaves of Pride," and was adapted by William B. Courtney from a successful novel. George Terwilliger directed it. Miss Joyce is now working on "The Sporting Duchess," which is nearly completed.

Corinne Griffith, whose two recent features, "The Climbers" and "The Tower of Jewels," brought added fame to this clever actress, now has "Human Collateral" awaiting release and has started work on "Deadline at Eleven." The latter is a newspaper story by Ruth Byers, herself a newspaper woman, and has been adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard, a former newspaper editor.

The activities at the Brooklyn studio have been further increased through the arrival of Earle Williams, who had been making his features at the Hollywood studio. He came East especially to play the title role in Winchell Smith's "The Fortune Hunter," which was completed last week. It was directed by Tom Terriss. Jean Paige played opposite Mr. Williams.

Three other Vitagraph special productions, featuring Bessie Love, Gladys Leslie and Anita Stewart respectively, will be released within a few weeks. Miss Love's picture is "Pegeen." This is the last picture made by Miss Love under the direction of Vitagraph. Miss Leslie will be seen in the "Midnight Bride." "The Sins of the Mothers" will be the Anita Stewart feature.

December will also see the presentation of the fifteenth and final chapter of the William Duncan serial, "Smashing Barriers," and the commencement of "The Invisible Hand," the new secret service serial, in which Antonio Moreno plays the part of the hero.

Leonard Returns to New York to Start Work in Serial

The champion will start work about the 1st of December, according to the announcement made by Mr. Hall. Work will be commenced at the Hallmark Studio at 130 West 38th street, where the interiors will be taken. During the course of production the champion will travel from New York to the Coast stopping off at the principal cities where scenes will be taken.

Mr. Hall has not yet announced the director for the Leonard serial. The story is now being written by a well-known magazine writer who is credited with the authorship of one of the first serials ever made.

George Beban Heads Own Co.

Noted Delineator of Italian Characters Begins First Production "One Man in a Million"

GEORGE BEBAN, famous for both his stage and screen interpretations, is the latest star to invade the ranks of those film celebrities who have formed their own individual producing organizations. He has rented a part of the Katherine MacDonald studios, where he is now busily engaged in arranging the preliminaries for staging a series of screen plays of his own composition.

The title of the first production is, "One Man in a Million." In this screen drama Mr. Beban again appears in his popular characterization of the sympathetic Italian, immortalized by his well-known stage play, "The Sign of the Rose."

An all-star cast has been gathered together for the initial production. Miss Helen Jerome Eddy, who received her stage training under David Belasco, and who also has played opposite to Mr. Beban in 12 different screen plays, will also play the leading feminine role in this, as well as the other Beban productions.

George Beban, Jr. (Bob White), the five-year-old son of the star and producer, plays an important role, and runs his father a close race for first honors in the plays.

Other members of the cast include Lloyd T. Whitlock, Dorothy Gumin, George B. Williams, and the former famous Shakespearian actress, Jennie Lee, who has also been associated with Mr. D. W. Griffith.

In selecting his technical staff, Mr. Beban used the same discrimination as governed his choice of players. DeWitte Hagar was selected as production manager. Ross Fisher, formerly camerman, for George Lone Tucker, will turn the crank for the Beban plays. Fred Schaefer was selected for technical director, with Chas. Watt as assistant to the production manager.

No expense is to be spared in making these Beban productions perfect in every detail.

Action in "Return of Tarzan"

Director Harry Revier, a Show Man of Varied Career, Promises Big Results in His New Feature

MR. HARRY REVIER is directing a big production of "The Return of Tarzan," a new adventure of Edgar Rice Burroughs' sensational character fiction, for the Numa Pictures Corporation. With plenty of capital backing him up, Mr. Revier promises the picture-world a finished product of unusual scope and skill. Just now he is in Los Angeles with members of his company; he entrained recently for California where the jungle episodes of his latest picture will be made.

His experience has been along widely diversified trails. For instance, he controlled a string of legitimate theatres in Salt Lake City and in other Idaho, Montana and Utah cities with the present Willard Mack acting as leading man in his stock companies.

He is said to have spent fruitful years in London and Paris in the picture-production field and has been associated with practically all of the prominent producing companies in this country. His work as director of Petrova, Edmund Breese, Dorothy Green and Marie Empress has been attested to in some of the best pictures of their several careers.

In "The Return of Tarzan," Mr. Revier has selected types for the several roles. He is especially pleased with his choice of Gene Pollar for the title role. "He is a big, unspoiled boy," is the way Mr. Revier speaks of him. "Doesn't think he's great, enjoys his work; and my—how he can fight! He wades in and does every fight up to the finish."

Fox May Construct Roof Garden

Garden Under Consideration Would Serve as Resting Spot and Setting Atop of New Building

IN addition to figuring on a permanent airplane landing platform upon the roof of his big new administration and laboratory now nearing completion at Tenth Avenue, 55th to 56th streets, New York, William Fox has under consideration a project for a roof garden to occupy the northwestern corner of the gigantic structure.

Plans for the proposed roof garden have been submitted to Mr. Fox with a view to having that portion of the L-shaped roof concreted in order that a layer of rich soil may be spread and parts of the section sodded. The plans call for gravel walks winding between beds of flowers and clusters of evergreens; the entire section to be enclosed by a boxwood hedge of a height sufficient to screen neighboring roofs from view.

The garden will offer Fox stars working in the East a restful atmosphere between the taking of scenes, and also will make an ideal spot for exterior scenes calling for settings of this sort. William Fried, personal architect for Mr. Fox, who in association with Harrison G. Wiseman of the firm of Carlson & Wiseman, drew the plans for the new building, has reported that the building is fully able to support such a roof garden and has offered his services in perfecting the plans.

"Pierre Le Grand, as the forthcoming Fox production in which William Farnum is to star is temporarily titled, is almost finished.

For the first time on any screen, William Wallace Reid, Jr., son of his dad, star of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, will make his appearance in "The Bear Trap," Will M. Ritchey's picturized version of Byron Morgan's auto race story.

"Terror Island" is the title finally selected for Houdini's second mystery picture for Paramount-Artcraft, filmed under the working title, "Salvage."

M. Selznick Buys "The Woman God Sent" by Sophie Irene Loeb

SOPHIE IRENE LOEB recently completed a scenario, "The Woman God Sent," which has been purchased by Myron Selznick and is slated for early production at the Eastern Selznick studios, under the direction of Larry Trimble. Miss Loeb is the author of numerous novels, short stories and articles which have attained wide popularity.

While telling a big love story, the picture shows what is being done with millions of helpless human lives by the legislatures of the country. It is not a political story, however, but a human, adventurous thrilling romance of a man and a woman, their lives and the lives touched by them.

Miss Loeb has become one of the better known women writers of the day because of her conspicuous grasp of fundamentals and the interesting angles she discloses of the personal and emotional dramas of modern life. "The Woman God Sent" will combine all the dramatic power and humorous appreciation that marks Miss Loeb's work.

Myron Selznick is convinced he has a great picture in the making, and the cast will be selected, it is said, with a view to the highest excellence. The star and cast will be announced later.

The Kinograms News Reel Service Registers Claim of "Beat"

According to a report from the Republic Distributing Corporation, Kinograms demonstrated superior efficiency in "shooting" the views of the Prince's arrival in New York and the subsequent afternoon parade and getting them on the screen in record time. At 12 o'clock, says the report, Kinograms pictured the arrival of his royal highness at Battery Park; then followed the taking of the procession of the royal visitor up Fifth avenue. The parade terminated at 2 o'clock, says the announcement; but "at three o'clock," continues the report, "these pictures were flashed on the screen at the Capitol, Palace, Rivoli and Rialto Theatres. The nearest competitors of Kinograms were beaten by over one hour, although they made special arrangements to get out their prints by making use of independent laboratories."

Boston Theatre Men Make Merry at Jester Club Meeting

Boston Jesters, an organization composed of Moving Picture Theatrical men of Greater Boston, with managers of the Film Exchanges throughout the city as honorary members, held their annual event at the Copley-Plaza Hotel, Boston, on Friday evening, November 14. The big-time started at the stroke of eight bells of the last dog-watch and did not end until the first stroke of the morning watch Saturday morning.

At mid-night, a mock "night-court" opened up, and through the wee small hours of the morning, the tribunal justices metered out fines as fast as a streak of lightning changes its whereabouts, and ranging in size from 25 cents to $25.

"Counterfeit" and "Scarlet Days" Current Ferguson Vehicles

Elsie Ferguson in "Counterfeit" and the D. W. Griffith production, "Scarlet Days," both of which have been shown with signal success at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, are announced as the Paramount-Artcraft feature releases for November 30th.

Into "Counterfeit," which was directed by George Fitzmaurice, Ouida Bergere, who wrote the scenario, is said to have put all the elements that belong in the successful photodrama. Others who aid in maintaining the standard of the cast are Helen Montrose, Charles Kent and Ida Waterman.

In "Scarlet Days," a romance of the days of '49 in California, Mr. Griffith is said to have achieved a picture replete with thrills and dramatic suspense and telling a sweet love story. Full Publicity Helps Promised on Foundation Film

That "The Blindness of Youth" will have complete publicity helps for the exhibitor, is part of the announcement made by Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation which is about to release its initial production to the State-rights buyers. The company believes it has a production that will captivate the most critical, both from the standpoint of story and completeness in fineness of production.

So confident is Mr. Garsson in the future success for the production an additional sum of money has been added to the advertising appropriation. "I am an enthusiast over exploitation aids for the exhibitor in putting over a picture and getting the most out of it from the box-office standpoint," said Mr. Garsson.

Four Metro Features Finished

The Fifth of the Screen Classics Nearly Completed; Cutting and Assembing to be Done Soon

CAMERA work on four of the five Screen Classics, Inc., productions that comprise the second round of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures, has been completed under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director-general at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal. The fifth, "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, will be finished last, it is said, about a week behind the other four, which had the advantage of a week's start.

The first to flash under the finish wire was "The Best of Luck," A. S. Le Vino's adaptation of the famous Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh, Henry Hamilton and Arthur Collins, with an all-star cast. Next was "Should a Woman Tell?" by Finis Fox, featuring Alice Lake and an all-star ensemble. Finishing on the same day were "The Willow Tree," the Cohan and Harris stage play by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes, starring Viola Dana, and "The Walk-Offs," the Morosco stage hit by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, with May Allison in the stellar role.

Jack Holt, Kathryn Adams, Lilie Leslie and Fred Malatesta have the leading roles in "The Best of Luck." Ray C. Smallwood directed the production and Harold Wenstrom photographed it.

"Should a Woman Tell?" is Alice Lake's first vehicle as a featured player under her five-year contract with Metro. Prominent in the cast surrounding her are Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier. John E. Ince directed the production and Sol Polito photographed it.

In "The Willow Tree," a modern story based on a Japanese legend, Miss Dana is supported by Pell Trenton, Edward Connelly and "Jack" Yutaka Abbe. Henry Otto directed "The Willow Tree" and John Arnold did the photographing. Miss Allison in "The Walk-Offs" was directed by Herbert Blache. Prominent in the supporting cast are Emory Johnson, Joseph Kilgour, Darrell Foss, Kathleen Kerrigan and Claire Du Brey.

June Mathis scenarioized "The Right of Way," Bert Lytell's starring vehicle. The director is Jack Dillon. Beatrice Joy, Carmen Phillips and Virginia Caldwell are prominent in the feminine portion of the supporting cast, while strong male roles are in the hands of Frank Currier, T. H. Gibson-Gowland, Henry Harmon, Antrim Short and Graham Pettie.

Taylor Holmes Completes Staff

Knowledge of Exhibitors' Needs Determined Choice of Personnel; Metro to Handle Releases

TAYLOR HOLMES, president of Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., who will star in the screen comedies to be made by his new producing company, announces that he has completed the personnel of his executive staff. The Taylor Holmes productions will be released in the United States and Canada by Metro, but the comedian has his own organization for making picturizations of big Broadway stage comedy successes, the first three of which are to be "Nothing but the Truth" "The Very Idea" and "Nothing but Lies."

Mr. Holmes makes it known that each member of his executive organization was chosen with particular regard for a thoroughgoing knowledge of exhibitors' wants and needs. With himself as president, he is assisted by Paul Turner, the well-known attorney, as vice-president; H. H. Bruener, treasurer; Thomas A. Persons, supervising director in charge of production, and Gus Mohme, director of sales.

"As it is my contention that the exhibitor is the backbone of the industry," said Mr. Holmes, in discussing his new organization, "I, as a producer, am determined to take into consideration first of all the problems and anxieties of the man who runs the picture house."

"NOT in Augustus Thomas' palmiest days of 'punch' drama", says Observer in the Chicago Herald & Examiner, "have I seen the superior of this Eric Stroheim production at the Ziegfeld. Stroheim is, I believe, the author and director. He is certainly the actor. 'BLIND HUSBANDS' treats of the neglected wife and the pitfalls that confront her. The story works up gradually to a dramatic climax of real power. Stroheim himself has a unique role and he acts it so well that you doubt whether he is acting at all. Chas. Pathe Pleased at Findings

Head of House of Pathe Accomplishes Wealth of Things on Second Visit to Country This Year

CHARLES PATHE, head of the international organization that bears his name, sailed for Paris, after six weeks' stay in New York City, during which he transacted an enormous amount of business, looking to the expansion and increased activities of Pathe Exchange, Inc. He was accompanied by Madame Pathe and the Misses Pathe, who enjoyed every minute of their time on this side of the water.

The second visit of Mr. Pathe during the present year was the most important, as it had to do with the plans touching upon every activity of the organization. Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager has been devoting a tremendous amount of energy and a fine enthusiasm to the project of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., announcement of which was recently made. A vast amount of extremely difficult work has been accomplished in a relatively short time, and when Mr. Pathe was about to take his departure, the plan had been matured and absolutely guaranteed in a manner which guarantees the fullest measure of successful operation. Mr. Pathe expressed himself as deeply gratified by the early results and again pledged the resources of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to the highest achievement of the plan.

"I am especially impressed by the phenomenally healthy condition in the industry," said Mr. Pathe, just before his departure. "Exhibitor reports that I have seen from all sections show that a steadily increasing number of persons attend the shows of motion pictures. The first-run houses are playing to capacity and all of the smaller theatres have felt the new impetus. And, looking at these facts from the standpoint other than commercial, I can see that this phase is not merely temporary but indicative of the even broader vogue that will be attained by motion pictures. The building in New York and other portions of the country of magnificent palaces for the cinema is an indication of the increasingly firm foundation upon which this form of amusement now rests. It means, too, that to meet the critical demand, better pictures will have to be made, even admitting that the standard now reached is becoming impressive.

"The demand is not only for skilfully constructed stories dealing with human emotion, but for sympathetic and skilled producers, who can translate these creations to the screen so that they may make an unfailing appeal to the hearts of the beholders. Pathe Exchange, Inc., therefore, has reason to feel proud in the enrolment of such acknowledged masters of the art as Albert Capellani, J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse D. Hampton, Mrs. Sidney Drew, Hobart Henley, Frank Keenan, Leonce Perret, Edwin Carewe and Edgar Lewis, with more in prospect. These are the minds that are putting the humanities into the pictures with a craftsmanship that squares nicely to all of the requirements of art of the drama. The coming year, I believe I am safe in saying, will be more than ever fruitful of achievement.

"I have been most fully impressed by the spirit that pervades the organization in all of its branches. It is a wide-awake achieving American spirit which will make itself felt in every country of the world; and I want to say a word of special commendation of all of the executives in the Home Office and the far-flung exchanges, under the active chieftancy of Mr. Paul Brunet. The business of the organization has increased in a surprising and gratifying fashion."

To Screen "Grumpy," Stage Hit

Robertson–Cole Announces the Acquisition of Drama Which Won Triumphs Here and in Europe

"GRUMPY," the sensational play, which it is said attracted theatre goers in all parts of the world, will soon be filmed. This important announcement to the film world is made this week by officials of Robertson-Cole. It will be a Robertson-Cole special, and one of the most celebrated stars of the day will be seen in the stellar role of "Grumpy," according to the report received.

When Cyril Maude appeared in the American tour of "Grumpy" at Wallick's theatre during the seasons of 1913 and 1914, the average weekly receipts for the two seasons were, according to the Robertson-Cole statement, more than $13,000. In May of 1914, the play was staged in the New theatre, London, and from that time until October of the same year the show is said to have met with unvarying success. In October the war forced Cyril Maude to bring the play back to America. During the following theatrical seasons, the production toured America and was also staged in Australia and New Zealand. It is said that at every place where the play was shown, the receipts realized were very heavy.

Theatrical men in New York have acclaimed "Grumpy" the biggest and best feature of the times. Critics in America like their associates across the ocean declared that every time you saw "Grumpy" you wanted to see it again. Robertson-Cole officials have had a separate scenario staff at work both in New York City and on the coast to secure the best stories in the land. It was no easy task to get "Grumpy" for many of the large producers who saw the merit of the stage success as a film bid high for the Cyril Maude success.

House Organ Published by Minneapolis Simplex Distributor

A recruit has been added to the ranks of Simplex distributors' house organs by the appearance of the "Teco Tattler," a four-page monthly published by the Teco Products Mfg. Co., Simplex Distributors for northern and eastern Iowa and northern and western Wisconsin.

George Feinberg, manager of the foregoing company, is editor-in-chief of this sheet, which, judging from its initial number, should become very popular with the purchasers of theatre equipment in the before-mentioned territory.

The Teco Company derives its name from the words "Theatre Equipment Company," the trade name of their predecessor. Throughout the first number of the Teco Tattler runs a series of interesting facts concerning the Simplex Projector together with well-written descriptions of the numerous other accessories handled by the Teco Company.

Mr. Feinberg together with Mr. Francis, his partner, recently organized the Teco Company. Their headquarters in the Loeb Arcade building is regarded as one of the finest equipped supply houses in the Middle West, while the line of equipment carried by them is as complete as any houses of similar nature in the country.

The number of Simplex Projectors sold through this enterprising house in the past year already reaches close to the three hundred mark, which may be regarded as a fair indication of the future success which this progressive house is bound to achieve.

Producer of "Facts and Follies" Visits Company in Florida

Bernard MacFadden is the producer of the Facts and Follies Series, which is being state righted by the Pioneer. Mr. MacFadden accompanied by his staff of assistants arrived last week at Jacksonville, Fla., where the Facts and Follies Company under command of Director Wray Physioc is busily engaged in keeping two months ahead of release dates, it is said

While in Jacksonville Mr. MacFadden conferred at length with Mr. Physioc, and as a result all details for the completion of the entire series have been worked out.

Wesley Ruggles Tries New Stunt in Picturecraft

A new idea in picturecraft is being tried out by the originator, Wesley Ruggles, one of the youngest directors in the industry, recently added to the Selznick staff to direct the Owen Moore productions.

Mr. Ruggles has designed and constructed a miniature stage, small enough to be set up on his desk, where he figures out the action of every picture in detail before rehearsals begin. He has definite ideas about building a play, and "Perfection in details" is his slogan.

"The important thing is to look out for the small discrepancies, to be natural and consistent," said Mr. Ruggles, "For instance, in working out the action of a story, I positively will not take any character out of the scene unless the plot logically demands that they be removed. I never want it to appear that they had to get out so the play could get on. That is where the miniature set is going to come in handy. I can take time to figure out the action more clearly and carefully, for there must be a reason for every move the characters make."

F. P.-Lasky British Producers to Film Current Drury Lane Drama

Word comes from England that Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., has purchased the screen rights to "The Great Day," the sensational drama now playing at the Drury Lane Theatre. The purchase was made from Arthur Collins, who, including "The Great Day," has produced all of the last twenty-three dramas presented at the Drury Lane. The work of filming will start at the London studio shortly afterwards, or about the first of May.

It is reported that by the terms of the purchase from Mr. Collins, Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., obtains the right to use as much of the original scenery, properties and costumes of the stage production as may be adaptable for the picturization. Mr. Collins, whose genius for realism and spectacular effect is said to be unusual, has also offered to assist the company in every possible way in the adaptation and in the supervision of the screen version.

Arline Pretty Serial Is Called a "Thriller of Thrillers"

According to a report from the Serico Producing Corporation, "A Woman in Grey," starring Arline Pretty and directed by James Vincent, is said to be "an entirely different style of serial than anything ever before attempted in this particular style of screen entertainment." Based on C. N. and A. M. Williamson's greatest mystery novel, the story, revolves itself around one of the most novel and baffling plots ever transferred to the screen.

Walter Richard Hall, who wrote the screen version of "A Woman in Grey," is said to have eclipsed all his previous serial efforts. "His ingenious and death-defying thrills, enacted by both Miss Pretty and Henry Sell, are said to be a veritable sensation in themselves and almost unsurpassable," according to the Serico report.

Producers Security Corp. Here

Ricord Gradwell, President of the Organization, States Purposes of the Recently Incorporated Body

AMONG the new incorporations affiliated with the motion picture industry is to be found The Producers Security Corporation, with general offices at 516 Fifth avenue. Mr. Ricord Gradwell, formerly president of the World Film Corporation, is president of the new organization. In describing the scope and objective of the company Mr. Gradwell says:

"The Producers Security Corporation is primarily a service organization. It is not a producing concern, nor does it distribute motion pictures. It aims to act as an intermediary between the producer and the distributor, and to safeguard the interests of both.

"The producer has generally found that the necessity for detail attention to the distribution contracts has operated to distract his attention from his production work. It is our plan to remove such detail work from the producer entirely.

"The service we will perform will be remunerated for on the percentage basis, and we aim to take the whole detail of management from the hands of the producer from the moment he has finished his production work. We will, if necessary, arrange distribution or sales contracts for him; we will audit the returns from a distributing contract, and we will watch his interests in every way as if they were our own. Publicity and advertising, poster design and all the multitudinous detail, if desired, we shall be glad to handle, and we have an organization that is capable of that. If legal service is required we will furnish that."

Mr. Gradwell's statement further declares that the personnel of the organization has been selected with a view to have only those men in the corporation that will be enabled by virtue of their experience "to carry out the objects of an absolutely square deal for the producer and the distributor. I mention both parties to the relationship because I would not want it understood that our work would be to serve the one at the expense of the other." Mr. F. J. Hawkins, the organizer of the Haworth Picture Corporation, is the secretary. A well known trust company will act as treasurer, Mr. Campbell McCulloch will be in charge of advertising, and Mr. Nathan Vidaver has become the general counsel.

New Serial Offered to Buyers

Burston's Newest Production "The Hawk's Trail" Features Many Notable Players

KNOWN to the trade not only as an independent producer of successful serials, but also a working producer whose independent ideas are sure to produce novelties with each release, Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., announces this week the placing on the State-rights market of his latest serial "The Hawk's Trail," with King Baggot in the main part supported by Rhea Mitchell and Grace Darmond. Claiming the honor of presenting the "first serial de luxe," Producer Burston has given his group of stars notable support in an unusually large cast of principals, as well as a stock company somewhat larger than is common in multi-reel productions. Among the well-known actors selected for their ability to act, which is a Burston hobby, are Harry Lorraine, George Seigman, Carmen Phillips, Stanton Heck, Edna Robinson, Fred Windmere, Sylvia Joslyn, Art Belasco, Carl Stockdale and Leo White.

King Baggot has a particularly sympathetic role, that of Stanton Steele, a scientific criminologist, whose resemblance to an under-world character known as the "Hawk," bestows upon him the same sobriquet. In his attempt to uncover the villainy of one Dugan, played by Harry Lorraine, who wrongly withholds the fortune of the Drake sisters (Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell), the sleuth "Hawk" is seen in many disguises. Master of make-up that he is, King Baggott brings to the various roles that skill in characterization which has made him one of our most notable screen stars as well as one of the best actors on the American stage. The story is said to have that rare element in serials, a plot, and a logical continuity of the same is a necessity because the suspense episode endings depend on plot situations rather than interpolated serial "stunts."

State-rights buying has already opened briskly for "The Hawk's Trail," seven Western States, as well as Eastern, Central and Western Canada having been bid for and disposed of before even the first advertising announcement was made this week.

Goldwyn's Culver City Studio-Area Now Nearly 50 Acres

An important announcement in connection with the progress of motion picture production in the West, and Goldwyn advancement in particular, comes from Vice-President Abraham Lehr of the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, who is in charge of production in California. The firm has just purchased the large tract of land immediately west of the studios extending to First street, and from Washington boulevard to the Redondo car tracks, which makes the total area nearly 50 acres, with a length of half a mile.

The Goldwyn studios are now, according to the reports from the New York office, the biggest and busiest on the Coast, employing 700, with an excess daily average of 300. Eleven permanent structures costing $150,000 have been erected during the present year, making a total of 35 buildings. During the past year there were built Italian, Russian, Southern, Alaskan, Spanish and Western street settings.

"Scenics Beautiful" for Year

Robert Bruce After Long Trip Now Cutting and Titling Twenty Six For Educational

ROBERT C. BRUCE, scenic director for the Educational Films Corporation of America, and producer of the "Scenics Beautiful," has returned after a seven months trip, and is now at the laboratory at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., assembling and titling the twenty-six subjects which were planned before he left New York last April.

"Three thousand miles at five knots an hour" is the way Mr. Bruce describes his trip. Early in the season, he chartered the 35-ton schooner "La Viajera"—and many weeks were spent cruising along the inside channel from Seattle to Skagway. In this territory, Mr. Bruce says he found an abundance of opportunity to film new scenic wonders that had never before been photographed.

In previous years, the "Scenics Beautiful" have been made entirely within the United States. One of the pictures of last season contained a "shot" of the Canadian Selkirks, from a great distance, but this year "trail" stories were made in the heart of these mountains. There is a marked difference in the scenic beauty of the Canadian Northwest, which will add a note of variety to the new series.

Working inland from points along the coast of British Columbia the camera-party penetrated mountain country that has had very little exploration. In the past, coast-wise steamers have made directly for Skagway, and the use of a chartered schooner made it possible to discover wonderful locations which would have otherwise been passed by.

Among other features the new series will include a number of subjects in which wild animals are to be the leading characters. "The Chilcat Cubs" is the title of the first of these animal stories to be completed. Still other novelties will be presented in a number of "canoe" pictures, of which "The Song of the Paddle" is now ready. The first pictures Mr. Bruce has ever offered of life in camp are also scheduled.

One unfortunate accident marred the trip, and cost the life of "Dane II"—the beautiful big dog so long associated with the Bruce pictures.

When the work at Wilkes-Barre is completed, it is possible that Mr. Bruce will make a short trip to Cuba, or the Bahamas. Several subjects are planned that will require tropical settings and this can be done during the winter months. Plans for next season's pictures are now under way and work is to be started as soon as the present new series is disposed of at the laboratory.

Nine Fox Releases for December

The Outstanding Feature of the Fox December Schedule is the Premier Starring Vehicle of Buck Jones

WITH nine releases from Fox Film Corporation for the month of December peculiar interest attaches to the last feature to reach the exhibitor during this period. This production is the first vehicle of the new star, Buck Jones. "The Square Shooter" is the name of Buck's first picture under the Fox banner, and much is expected of it by the producer. It is said that it represents a new type of Western production.

Another notable fact about the Fox releases for December is that only three of these are feature pictures, and each of the three is a Western drama with a male star. None of the female stars of the Fox galaxy is represented in the December releases.

According to the schedule the productions listed are as follows:

"'The Feud,' a vivid story of the early West with Tom Mix as the star, is followed by a Sunshine comedy, 'Back to Nature Girls.' Next comes one of the Bud Fisher animated cartoons 'Iceland.' The second Mutt and Jeff of the month is titled 'Cutting Out His Nonsense.'

"William Russell will be seen in an adaptation of Paul Dickey's popular story 'The Lincoln Highwayman.' Following this comes 'The Roaming Bathtub,' a Sunshine comedy, and the third Mutt and Jeff cartoon, called 'For Bitter or for Werse.'"

It is said that elaborate stage settings have been given the interiors of all the Westerns, and many novel bits of star business have been brought out by Mix, Russell and Jones. Edward J. LeSaint directed Tom Mix in "The Feud," E. T. Flynn guided Mr. Russell through "The Lincoln Highwayman," and Mr. Swickard was the director of Buck Jones in "The Square Shooter."

"The Clodhopper" Recreated For Triangle Release

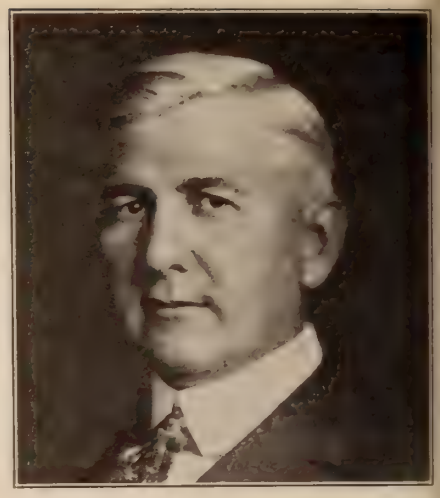
Charles Ray's masterpiece, "The Clodhopper," has been recreated by Triangle and will be released on January 4 through the Keystone Triangle exchange. The photoplay was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, author of "The Flame of the Yukon," and is a Thos. H. Ince production.

In "The Clodhopper" Charles Ray is supported by Margery Wilson, well known to followers of earlier pictures featuring this popular star. The cast includes Charles French, Lydia Knott and Thomas Guise.

President of American Film Goes to Santa Barbara Studios

President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company, Inc., has left for the company's Santa Barbara studios where he expects to remain until the first of the year, giving his personal supervision to Mme. Marguerita Sylva's first "Flying A" production.

Mr. Hutchinson is reported to be enthusiastic over the screen possibilities both of the famous diva and of the popular vehicle that has been selected for her first American motion picture.



Oscar A. Price, United Artists Corporation

Ex-Editor of Collier's Weekly Edits Cosmopolitan Features

William Le Baron, formerly managing editor of Collier's Weekly, author of "Apple Blossoms" and other stage successes, and one of the best known magazine men in the country, has become editor of Cosmopolitan Productions, and will hereafter pronounce the final word on the feature film output of William Randolph Hearst.

While successfully engaged in the publishing business, during which time he was connected with several well-known publications, Mr. Le Baron wrote, at odd moments, for Jesse Lasky, a dozen or more vaudeville sketches. Among these are "The Antique Girl," "The Trained Nurses," "The Little Parisienne" and "The Redheads," the last named being reviewed then and since as one of vaudeville's biggest hits, according to reports.

Collier's Weekly soon after called Mr. Le Baron to its editorial chair and while attracting attention as a magazine editor and developing much promising talent, Mr. Le Baron wrote "Her Regiment," with Victor Herbert, and the farce comedies, "Back to Earth," "I Love You" and "The Very Idea."

Selznick Will Picturize Stage Hits on the Silver Screen

Added significance is placed behind the announcement that Lewis J. Selznick has entered the legitimate producing field in advice from the Selznick offices that the plays presented on Broadway will be adapted to the screen for production in the Selznick Fort Lee studios.

Under this arrangement, motion-picture exhibitors will receive the benefit, it is said, of the public approval and popularity of stage successes, coupled with the extra publicity which is assured in publications throughout the country.

"Bucking the Tiger," a comedy-drama by May Tully and Achmed Abdullah, is the first play which Mr. Selznick will offer behind the footlights. It is scheduled for Broadway presentation early in January and negotiations are now under way for the lease of one of New York's largest and most centrally located theatres.

Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater"

THIS is a tip to first run exhibitors. A word to the wise, as it were. Take a look at "The Beloved Cheater" featuring Lew Cody and see if it doesn't impress you as it does us, a picture that any high class house which is in the market for the unusual attraction, which presents an unusual exploitation angle since it is an unusual story and also which is having something done for it in the way of national advertising, should book.

If you have used any of the pictures in which Lew Cody has appeared you will know that he possesses a very peculiar personality. In the "Beloved Cheater" he has been provided with a role that exactly fits him, which coupled with the original theme and the careful attention to detail given the production, is responsible for an attraction which merits the opening sentences of this service. There is one word which measures this picture. It is "class."

For the patron who claims they are all alike this will be especially entertaining. It is different than any thing we have ever seen and it is mighty good entertainment. It is a feature which has cost a lot of money since big sets like those used in this picture are expensive and since nothing has been spared to provide suitable back grounds for the scenes enacted. In support of Mr. Cody is a capable cast which includes Eileen Percy, Jack Mower, Doris Pawn and Alice Fleming. The photograph is of the highest order and the acting and direction excellent. Big sets are in evidence most of the time with some wonderfully good exteriors showing the home of the hero of the story and other similar great locations.

In its basic idea, this picture takes the not to be denied existence of sex attraction in all men and women who are normal, with two very distinct types, one a man who has played at the game of love so long that it is a habit and who goes about his conquests with the skill of the professional and who loves the "chase" for the sport of hunting and a girl who is the other extreme, being so prudish that she will not allow either sweetheart or relative to kiss her on the plea that it is "disgusting," and allows the two to meet each other with very interesting results.

There is considerable suspense builded by your desire and natural curiosity to know what is going to happen to this modest maiden whose objection to kissing is proven a theory when she is initiated in real osculation by the handsome Cody. For quite a long time she seems in danger of being added to the love making expert's list of victims. In fact you really blame him for allowing her to escape unscathed, since the conquest is so very easy. There is considerable sympathy builded for the role played by Mr. Cody.

Before giving you a synopsis of the story, we wish to assure you that the offering is absolutely without suggestion of sensuousness.

Cody does his lovemaking very much like a "gentleman." He is also a philosophical chap and a charitable one since he does not choose to discard his conquests as the novelty of having secured the affection of each one is dissipated, but carefully preserves their love thereby adding to his "bag" in his season's "hunting."

He also cherishes the memory of each individual since he keeps a trophy, some times a fan or some other bit of feminity in his lavishly furnished rooms.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

BRUCE SANDS is a wealthy bachelor with a natural attraction for the fair sex and in whom there exists a special appeal for them. To his inherent qualifications along these lines, he has added a wide knowledge of how to handle the complex problem of love making. He is besieged by women admirers, has to keep a memorandum of his amours. He lives alone in a handsome home with a Chinese servant.

To this master in the art of making love, comes Kingdon Challoner a friend who wished to be advised in his own wooing of Eulalia Morgan. Kingdon has won her promise of marriage but is denied the usual fiance's rights to kisses.

Sands naturally is in a position to tell Kingdon what to do to secure these rights. He does in some subtitles which infer that the man who wrote them knew something about the way to win a woman himself. The gist of Sands advice is that the lover should adopt more of the cave man tactics. He tells the amateur lover to kiss the girl and ask her afterward. After some argument it is decided that Sands shall be the one to give the first kiss and prove to the unitiated lover, that it can be done with impunity. Here is where the complications begin. Sands' kiss is a new kind and Eulalia likes it. The plan the two men had to make the girl think that it was Kingdon who did the deed, doesn't succeed since Kingdon's kisses aren't the same.

Eulalia finds out that it is Sands who had dissipated her idea that she didn't like kisses and for a time it looks as if Kingdon was to lose out in the matrimonial race. The girl is in a fair way of being compromised when she goes to Sands' home to warn him that Kingdon who thinks his trust in his friend has been violated, is threatening to shoot him, since both Kingdon and the girl's parents follow but the matter is explained satisfactorily

Lew Cody dominates every scene in "The Beloved Cheater" in a role which fits him as if made to order and the girl misunderstands the reason why a previously unidentified girl is living at the Sands' home and is cured of her sudden infatuation while Sands with some evident regrets that he has allowed an opportunity of another conquest to pass, principally because Kingdon was his friend, sits down in an easy chair and allows his Chinese servant to unlace his boots preparatory to substituting slippers while he begins the appropriate bachelor card game of solitaire.

The service brings some regrets to the "Beloved Cheater's" mind which are expressed in a dissolve which shows Eulalia performing the same act. This disturbing thought however lasts only for a moment and as the scene dissolves back to the servant at his labor, the philosophy of the "cheater" is expressed as he remarks that with the servant: "You get practically the same service with no obligations." You leave the "cheater" at his card game perhaps planning another conquest, his conscience clear in that he has lived up to the standard he has set for himself of that somewhat twisted code of morals by which he lives.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

THE advertising angle for this feature is the story, the star, the director and the producer. to be billed in the order named. You will be aided in your exploitation by a national advertising campaign in the form of prize contest offer whose terms are explained in the January issue of the Photoplay Magazine. Of this contest we will tell you more fully later in this article.

This is a picture which we would consider worthy of a good snappy newspaper campaign, in which you include your personal guarantee of the film's pleasing qualities. In framing your display we would use a good cut of Mr. Cody as a basis and build around that with strong selling talk in which a mention is made of all the things called to your attention above as exploitation angles.

At a Glance

Story — The professional love maker demonstrating his skill with an instance recorded where he chooses not to add to his conquests by allowing the fiance of his friend to be further attracted to him.

Star — Lew Cody in a role which exactly fits him.

Support — Eileen Percy, Jack Mower, Doris Pawn, Alice Fleming and other well known players.

Locale — New York City — A handsome apartment and exterior grounds about the homes of the well-to-do and other similar locations.

We would play up the "habit of making love" thought asking a question of the reader whether or not such a habit is not acquired or even hereditary. We would get over the idea that this character played by Mr. Cody is not a sensual one and that be "hunted" for the sport of the "cause" and not because he desired to compromise the fair name of any woman or to ruin the character of any individual. We would suggest that he loved all women and was incapable of being devoted to any particular one. We would play up the magnificence of the production, call attention to the beautiful gowns worn by the feminine characters, the "clothes" of the men, the big sets, pretty exteriors, with a mention of the supporting cast, with particular mention for Miss Percy who has rather a good following and Doris Pawn who promises to be a star herself some day.

As far as lobby displays are concerned this production should be a good subject for a "fashion show" since the general atmosphere leans to clothes. In fact it would be possible to stage the dinner set in every detail including the Chinese servants. A cut of the scene in which the dinner is served is shown in the accompanying "stills."

THE PRIZE CONTEST OFFER

THE producers of "The Beloved Cheater" are running a display ad in the Photoplay Magazine in which is announced $500.00 in prizes for the best love letters from a girl to her sweetheart. This $500.00 is divided into four prizes, the first being $150.00, the second $100.00, the third $85.00 and the last $50.00. The letters are to be mailed to Mr. Cody care of the Robertson-Cole offices.

Now the circulation of this magazine among the dyed in the wool fans is large. A lot of people in your city are going to know about this prize offer even if they do not compete and you have had aroused for you a lot of curiosity.

Our advice would be to pick up this Photoplay ad offer and play it up in your own displays, giving full details, and announcing the dates you will play the picture. If you were to get in on the prize offer yourself by announcing some rewards for the best letters submitted to you, these prize winners later to be forwarded to New York for the main contest, it ought to be a winning idea. Get after this idea well in advance of your showing and play it up strong.

"Amazing Woman" First Release of Republic Corporation

A study of dual personality with many unusual angles of treatment is "The Amazing Woman," produced by Lloyd Carleton Productions, Inc., personally directed by Mr. Carleton, which is announced as the first picture to be released through the new Republic Distributing Corporation.

Spectacles and Gowns Galore are Seen in "The Butterfly Man"

A report from the L. J. Gasnier studios declares that the "The Butterfly Man," starring Lew Cody, includes a number of spectacular scenes for which Directress Ida May Park is responsible.

"A rose cotillon, which will employ the services of four hundred extras, all costumed in the latest mode and in the finest materials by a staff now at work at the Cody plant; ballroom scenes and interiors which exploit the best in the art of studio designer and architect are but three of a number of delightful sets and novelties to be shown in the filmization of the George Barr McCutcheon novel," runs the Gasnier announcement. The gowns of the principals of the tender sex and the atmosphere of feminine delicacy and refinement which Miss Park is said to have contrived to weave about her production, all focus on the major element of the screen clientele—the man.

It is also pointed out there is plenty to entertain the male in "The Butterfly Man." There is the underlying and ever-present motif of the man himself (Lew Cody), who flits from one romance into another, and moreover, the engrossingly human element that Cody introduces is certain to intrigue every male.

A Super-Production Completed by Transatlantic

An interesting announcement comes from the offices of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., to the effect that the producing organization of this company is completing a super-production. The name of the picture is not announced.

Arrangements are being made with one of the conductors of the Metropolitan Opera House to write the music score for this picture and Mr. Roach is more than pleased at the idea of having a real big picture to show to the trade by way of announcing his newly organized company to the public. The picture is said to be a masterpiece and in several of the scenes there are many thousand people appearing.

The Administrative Staff of the Transatlantic has recently issued an announcement to buyers throughout the country that all future productions made by the Transatlantic will be sold exclusively to the state's right trade.

Selznick Besieged With Inquiries on Recently Formed National Picture Theatres, Inc.

SINCE the announcement of the organization and incorporation of National Picture Theatres, Inc., Lewis J. Selznick, the founder of the new co-operative institution, has been besieged on all sides with letters and telegrams from prospective members who hail Mr. Selznick as their leader in a progressive movement that has struck a responsive chord throughout the motion picture industry.

Few enterprises since the birth of the cinema has stirred such widespread interest and aroused the immediate action as has the formation of National Picture Theatres, Inc. Lewis J. Selznick and a corps of assistants and advisors have been busily engaged in answering inquiries concerning the particulars of the organization and in welcoming into National Picture Theatres, Inc., scores of influential exhibitors who see in the new association the protection and sustaining partnership insured by an administration defined and conducted solely for the benefit of exhibitor members.

The rock-bottom popularity of National Picture Theatres, Inc., may be attested by the fact that many hundreds of the country's most prominent showmen have already cast their lots with the organization, and the financial resources and wholehearted moral support of both pioneers and newcomers in the motion picture field are solidly behind and in front of an institution having as its foundation the experience of lofty ideals of Lewis J. Selznick and many other recognized leaders of the industry.

Announcement of the early membership of National Picture Theatres, Inc., will be forthcoming at an early date. Reports from the New York headquarters of the organization point to a list of one thousand with only several weeks having elapsed since the formal announcement of incorporation.

Nathan Ascher, President of Ascher Brothers Enterprises of Chicago, who is this week celebrating the tenth anniversary as ot his advent into pictures, is the first nationally known magnate to be elected one of the vice-presidents and directors of National Pictures. Mr. Ascher, following a careful analysis of the fundamentals and purposes of the organization and his subsequ nt entrance into its membership roll, issued the following statement this week in Chicago:

"In celebrating my tenth anniversary in the motion picture industry, I also am celebrating my active affiliation with National Picture Theatres, Inc., to which I have pledged complete financial and moral support.

"To be associated with Mr. Selznick on a business partnership basis is in my opinion a privilege that no exhibitor will overlook.

"Mr. Selznick has definitely proven his mission in this industry and the esteem and confidence which he is held by everyone, together with his remarkable genius for expansion and progress, is in itself sufficient evidence of the success destined for National Picture Theatres, Inc."

Leah Baird Starts New Picture

"Cynthia of the Minute" said to Give Star Role Well Fitting Her Artistic Talent

MISS LEAH BAIRD has begun work at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J., on her new production "Cynthia of the Minute," a mystery melodrama by Louis Joseph Vance, held by most students of this author's work to be one of the most powerful stories he ever wrote.

The novel is in its third edition and has had a very wide sale. It is the second of the Vance books to which rights for pictorial use have been purchased by Arthur F. Beck, president of Artco Productions, Inc., for W. W. Hodkinson distribution.

Perry Vekroff, who is directing the new play, has been at work with his technical staff for more than two weeks and Miss Baird herself has been engaged on the preliminaries to studio work. Most of the big sets have already been built and actual production is going with a rush.

The character of Cynthia is one eminently suited to Miss Baird — that of a lovable outdoor girl with plenty of fast action to keep her engaged. The play is a swiftly moving melodrama with many of its scenes laid in the haunts of high society, the outdoor aspects of the plot being laid in the vicinity of Key West, Fla., whither Miss Baird and her company are to spend the Christmas holidays.

A strong cast has been selected to aid Miss Baird. That robust character, "The Big Red Man," is to be portrayed by Burr McIntosh, one of the best known author-actors in America, Mr. McIntosh being typically suited to the role and in love with it. He is familiar to the picture public through his appearances in many first class production, both of the speaking and picture stages.

Also included in the cast are Hugh Thompson, Alexander Gaden, Wilfred Lytell, William Welch, John Webb Dillon, Ruby Hoffman and Mrs. Brundage.

"Erstwhile Susan" to be Played in London; Filmed by Realart

The English rights to the stage version of "Erstwhile Susan," filmed by the Realart Pictures, have just been secured by Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the well-known actress, and the piece will shortly be played in London. "Erstwhile Susan" as a stage play by Marion de Forest had a prosperous run, it is said, in New York City and was chosen by Mrs. Fiske as a suitable vehicle for her return to Broadway after a long absence.

F. P.-Lasky Campaign Starts

Many National Periodicals Are Now Carrying Full-Page Ads For the Paramount–Artcraft Pictures

WHAT is claimed and generally recognized to be the most ambitious, a thorough and far-reaching advertising campaign is now being carried on by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and by the first of the year it is expected that it will have succeeded in reaching the millions of motion-picture fans throughout the country.

The national periodicals which are now reported to be carrying full-page Paramount-Artcraft advertising in every issue include the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, Colliers, Christian Herald, American Magazine, Red Book, Motion-Picture Classics, Photoplay, Picture-Play, Motion Picture Magazine, Film Fun, Photo-Play World, Photo-Play Journal, Boys' Magazine, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, American Boy and once every month in Lone Scout, a weekly publication.

In addition to this regular magazine campaign, special full-page advertisements are being run in many of the national magazines, when one of its stories is used as the basis for a new Paramount-Artcraft picture. Recent examples of this are advertisements of "Putting It Over," from the story, "The Village Cut-Up," in Pictorial Review; "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," by Hall Caine, in Hearst's; "The Final Close-Up" and "The Valley of the Giants," by Peter B. Kyne, in Red Book; "The Miracle Man," by Frank L. Packard, in Munsey's; "The Dark Star," by Robert W. Chambers, in Cosmopolitan, and "The Dark Mirror," in McCall's.

With the addition of Pictorial Review to the list of regularly used publications in January and Woman's Home Companion in February, the total circulation gained by the full-page Paramount-Artcraft advertisements run in every issue of these national mediums is said to be over 12,000,000, reaching a public conservatively estimated, it is said, at more than 40,000,000.

Animals Thrill in "Lost City"

Selig Serial For Warner Brothers Said to Contain all Elements That Interest Audiences

IF it is gigantic thrills and sensation that the public has been waiting for, that hunger is soon to be satisfied according to Warner Bros. upon release of the new serial, "The Lost City," a 15 episode serial that is said to be crammed full of the biggest kind of thrills and excitement from start to finish. The story is laid in the African jungles and desert lands and not only employs the strange uncivilized people of this dark continent but nearly all of the ferocious animals which inhabit that country. Lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, alligators, zebras, giraffes, gorillas, etc.; all enter the story affording thrills and excitement, the like of which has never been attempted in a screen production.

The serial, which is near completion, is being produced for the Warner Bros. by William N. Selig, who has been authorized to allow no expenditure to stand in the way of producing a serial that will stand out as the biggest box office attraction up to the present time.

The first eight episodes, which have arrived from California, were screened at a private showing and the result on the screen was said to be a revelation of what sensations are possible with a company of sufficient nerve, the proper story and the unlimited capital to produce it. A few years ago it would have been impossible to obtain players who would take the chances they were compelled to take in this big sensation, and credit in huge quantity must be given, not only to Miss Juanita Hansen and George Chesebro, who play the leading roles of the story, but the entire company for the manner in which they have put the realism into the story.

Press Drive For Pathe Serial

Campaign for "The Adventures of Ruth" to Follow Lines Mapped Out for "Bound and Gagged"

PATHE Exchange, Inc., through Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager, this week announces the launching on December 20th of a national advertising campaign for the exploitation of its forthcoming serial release of December 28th, "The Adventures of Ruth," the first production of Ruth Roland's newly formed company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.

Like the campaign on the George B. Seitz serial, "Bound and Gagged," the one that is projected will be conducted according to the Pathe announcement, through the medium of newspapers and magazines with wide circulation. The benefits derived by exhibitors from this direct-to-the-consumer form of advertising are reported to have surpassed all expectations in the case of this Roland serial. In the case of "The Adventures of Ruth," however, it is reported by Pathe that the plans call for operations on a much larger scale.

The campaign, mapped out, says Pathe, "is designed to cover the communities and homes served by every motion picture theatre in the United States. The Saturday Evening Post and a long list of daily newspapers with the biggest home circulations will carry a series of display advertisements, each specifying "The Adventures of Ruth" as Pathe's next big serial release. In addition to this, the advertisements in each daily paper will carry the names of the theatres showing the serial in each city served by that particular paper."

"In Old Kentucky" Has Musical Score by George W. Benyon

According to a recent announcement from the Louis B. Mayer Productions, Mr. Mayer commissioned George W. Benyon, the composer, to write a complete original score for his presentation of "In Old Kentucky." After three months' work, Mr. Benyon's score has been completed; and at a private showing of the picture for musical critics the score was declared to be a fine achievement. The theme of the score, which is said to be almost operatic in its magnitude, is that of Anita Stewart's song, "In Old Kentucky," which is being published by Watterson, Berlin and Snyder.

"In Old Kentucky," which is a special for road show presentation, will carry its own orchestras to the larger cities, it is reported, assuring a perfect rendition of the complete score. According to the Mayer report, practical arrangements for 12-piece orchestras and smaller units have also been made, so that every theatre throughout the country can have the benefit of all the effort put into the making of this musical accompaniment.

U. S. Navy Establishes a Regular Picture Exchange in New York

The Fox Film Corporation reports that the Morale Division of the United States Navy, through one of its newly-organized departments known as the United States Navy Motion Picture Exchange, will distribute motion-picture films to the ships and naval stations of the entire service. Headquarters for the navy exchange are being established in New York City, according to the report, and Lieutenant Joseph O'Reilly is the officer in charge. By the establishment of this exchange, the Navy will be enabled to conduct its film activities more efficiently, and the supply of pictures will be handled by methods similar to those employed in supplying motion-picture houses.

The Fox report reads in part as follows: "The films are ordered through the Navy exchange in New York and delivered through the regular channels to whatever ship has made the request. A complete and comprehensive set of regulations for the handling of films, their care and their prompt return has been formulated."

The Fox announcement further states that there has already been ordered through the navy exchange a number of the Fox stars, Sunshine Comedies and Mut and Jeff animated cartoons.

Final Touches on United Film

"The Corsican Brothers" Undergoing Cutting and Assembling; Decorative Titles Being Compiled

WORK is now going ahead rapidly on the cutting and assembling of the United Picture Theatres of American feature, "The Corsican Brothers."

Several days ago the negative and sample print arrived from the Coast and work was at once begun to put the picture in proper shape for public presentation. Among many of the details that are now being given attention are the titles which will be decorative and in keeping with the nature of the story. Dustin Farnum, the star of "The Corsican Brothers," has gone on record as saying that this is his finest screen achievement.

No expense was spared, it is said, in making this filmization of Alexandre Dumas' story a noteworthy production. Massive sets were built at the Astra Studios at Glendale, California, for both interior and exterior scenes. Over a thousand people appeared in the Ball Masque scenes in an exceptionally large set built to represent the Paris Grand Opera House, while many of the exteriors were filmed at Santa Catalina Island and are picturesque in the extreme.

Another instance is the fact that much of the silk used in the gowns of Winifred Kingston, the leading lady of the drama, cost fifty dollars a yard before it was made up. It was attention to even details such as this that went a long way toward making "The Corsican Brothers" the stupendous feature that it is.

With the completion of the cutting, titling and assembling, a release date will be assigned to "The Corsican Brothers" by President J. A. Berst of United Picture Theatres of America, and at that time the complete line of advertising and publicity helps, already announced, will be ready for the exhibitors.

Select's Private Sales Soar

Officials Report Record Business For Two Weeks Ending Nov. 30th; Plan Bigger Results to Come

THE private sales drive recently conducted for Select Pictures Corporation by Sam E. Morris, general manager, and Charles R. Rogers, director of sales, has reacted in a surprisingly effective way in many branches on the Select circuit, according to reports from Select Pictures Corporation.

The Select Dallas, Chicago, Buffalo and Seattle offices started the ball a-rolling with territorial sales campaigns that went over fast and sure, it is reported. Managers C. C. Ezell, Ben W. Beadell, A. W. Moses and Hugh Rennie, respective managers of the four offices named, determined to start the holiday season right and demonstrate to Messrs. Morris and Rogers that the momentum gained by the drive inaugurated in New York could be continued with room to spare.

Elsie Janis' first Selznick picture, "A Regular Girl," and Elaine Hammerstein's initial vehicle, "The Country Cousin," have had much to do with the record business for the two weeks ending November 30th. According to Director of Sales Rogers, the productions starring Miss Janis and Miss Hammerstein have proved stellar box-office attractions in all localities.

The Select sales organization is said to be now on the verge of a concerted drive to start the new year with a burst of speed. Many of the Select branch offices have been enlarged and augumented by the addition of well-known motion picture sales representatives. All the forces are united to duplicate, or excel, the splendid sales achievements for the year about to close.

"The Girl from Outside" Booked for All of the Loew Houses

"The Girl From Outside" has received another strong endorsement by being booked as the feature attraction at all of the Loew theatres in Greater New York for the week commencing November 30th. Marcus Loew and his associates were so enthusiastic after viewing Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's production of Mr. Beach's powerfully dramatic story of the North that they immediately placed it on the booking sheet of the chain of theatres that covers every section of the city, it is said.

These bookings follow the successful engagement of "The Girl From Outside" at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it is reported to have played to record business for a week. The following statement was addressed to Goldwyn Distributing Corporation by Edward J. Bowes, vice-president and managing director of the Capitol, in connection with the showing at the Capitol of "The Girl From Outside":

"An absorbing story, graphically told, with pathos and humor skilfully intermingled and all carrying sincerity and unflagging interest."

Wm. McKenna Prepares Musical Score for Carmen Burlesque

The musical setting for Victor Kremer Essanay-Chaplin production, "A Burlesque on Carmen," has been finally completed after several weeks of preparation. McKenna, author of "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly," the musical comedy entitled "The Bride Shop," and many other country-wide successes. The arrangement of the score has been made under the personal direction of L. L. Vosburg, former musical director of "The Wanderer" and who is also responsible for the arrangement of the new "Hitchy-Koo" music.

In order to take care of all requirements of exhibitors, large and small, the Carmen music has been made up in three different forms. It will be available for full orchestra arrangement for big theatres, in piano score form for small houses, and in cue sheet form for theatres using only piano or organ.

Lauds Achievements of the Stage Women's War Relief Society

At a recent dinner of the Stage Women's War Relief Society in the Belmont Hotel, Rachel Crothers, the president of the organization, spoke in enthusiastic terms of the work which the organization had accomplished, and especially praised the way in which the various players, asked by the society to give their services, had responded to that appeal. As a result of this ready co-operation the organization was enabled to turn out an excellent series of picture productions. Speaking of the ready response of the players to calls for their services Rachel Crothers said:

"As a result we have given to the public not only a series of the most beautiful picture productions ever made, but we have made it possible for every woman and child in America to see the greatest stage stars of today in their home town. There is in this series a record of the work and art of some or all of America's greatest stars of today."

Double Role for Miss Brockwell in "Flames of the Flesh"

Gladys Brockwell, it is said, has a double role of much strength in "Flames of the Flesh," a sensational photoplay written by Forest Halsey and Clara Beranger and to be produced by William Fox. Its release is expected early next year.

William Scott, Gladys Brockewll's popular leading man, again plays opposite the star in a role of exceptional power. The remainder of the cast consists of Harry Spingler, Louis Fitzrey, Charles K. French, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Josephine Crowell and Nigel De Brullier. Edward T. Le Saint directed.

"Who's Your Brother?" is Ready for Immediate Release

The Curtiss Pictures Corporation announces that "Who's Your Brother?" is ready for immediate release. Gladden James supports Edith Taliaferro in the latest Curtiss production. The other members of the cast include: E. Coit Albertson, Herbert Fortiers, Frank Burbeck, Paul Panzer, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrison, Edith Stockton and Elizabeth Kennedy.

"The Tong Man" Said to be Among Best of Hayakawa's Features

In "The Tong Man," officials of Robertson-Cole believe they have the sensational film drama of the year. That the Robertson-Cole officials are not the only ones who predict this great feature starring Sessue Hayakawa will be one of the best of the year is best evidenced by the many compliments which it is said the production has received after previews.

The picture which will be released early in December is a rip-snorting Chinese melodrama where excitement plays the principal part. The picture is taken from the book "The Dragon's Daughter" written by Clyde C. Westover. After reviewing his work on the screen in "The Tong Man," the author of the famous book sent the following statement to the officials of the Haworth Studio in California:

"Mr. Hayakawa is ideal in his remarkable characterization of the 'Tong Man,' Miss Eddy is as quaint and dainty as a Narcissus bloom in her interpretation of 'San Chee,' Mr. Robbins is a crafty master of Celestial intrigue, and the other characters all run true to type."

Next DeMille Production to Have a Specially Trained Ballet

Theodore Kosloff, premier male interpretative dancer, is now a member of the De Mille all-star group and, in addition to playing an important role in the next DeMille production, will train a special ballet of 400 girls for the coming DeMille feature, it is said.

According to Kosloff's plans, special arrangements will be made to train all candidates up to the number of 406, entirely without expense to the pupils, it is said. Anticipating the fact that many of the prospective dancers would be otherwise engaged throughout the day, Kosloff has arranged a schedule of evening classes, according to reports, which will permit the student-dancers to continue in other lines of endeavor through the day.

To Direct Distribution of Mayflower Photoplays

John W. McKay, western business manager for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has returned to New York to take up the duties of general manager of distribution for that organization.

Mr. McKay has been in the motion picture industry for a number of years and has served in every branch of the business.

B. B. Staff Engages Edw. Sloman

Edward Sloman has been added to the B. B. Features staff and will direct Bessie Barriscale, in the second production of her new series for Robertson-Cole, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," from the book by Kathleen Norris. Miss Barriscale is now at work on "Beckoning Roads." As soon as this is completed, Miss Barriscale will commence work on "The Luck of Geraldine Laird."

The Coming Revolution in Filmland

By J. D. Williams
Manager, First National Exhibitors' Circuit

LITTLE more than two years ago producers and distributors said that exhibitors were incapable of working together, fighting together and succeeding together.

Within three months the industry will learn the details of an exhibitor cooperative plan which, in magnitude, scope, strength and all 'round effectiveness, will far outrank any similar collective activity by the so-called retail branch of any other business.

The most interesting fact of the moment about this early development is that the entire plan is the result of one already in existence, and which has been in existence for two years. In brief, this parent exhibitor cooperative idea is the bulwark and structure of First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It is the collective force that has literally revolutionized distribution. It is the one thing of which the executive head of a large distributing company but recently said:

"It is the stone wall that prevents us from getting absolute control of exhibitors. Members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit are strongly fortified with the product of a number of high class independent producers and independent stars with an unquestioned box office value. For that reason we cannot club into line for submission to our fast expiring sales plan the large number of important first run theatres they own and operate."

In other words, more than a score of large theatre operators, have demonstrated to the industry, in their two years of cooperative effort through First National, that they can work together in perfect harmony, that they can plan together with absolute accord, and that they can succed together, no matter what efforts the monopolistic producer — distributor and would-be exhibitor concerns make to give them competition, or to discourage their mutual confidence.

There is a real significance for the future of First National's new plans in the current achievement of the cooperating exhibitor members of the Circuit. I refer specifically to our schedule of releases for this month, December and January, and, in retrospect, to those for September and October. It is without parallel in motion picture history. Never before has any distributing company, any producing company, or any combination of the two, offered to exhibitors generally the same consecutive number of releases that are within fifty per cent of being equal in entertainment qualities, star value and box office appeal with the eleven current special feature attractions which the First National has scheduled.

The list reads as though it were a veritable quotation from a book of "Who's Who in Filmland." Consider, separately or in the aggregate, the worth to exhibitors of such a consecutive list as Mary Pickford in "Heart O' The Hills," Charles Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure," Constance Talmadge in "A Virtuous Vamp," Norma

Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds," Katherine MacDonald in "The Beauty Market," Anita Stewart in "Old Kentucky," "The Greatest Question," personally directed by D. W. Griffith, the Curwood-Carver production, "Back To God's Country," the Lehrman comedy, "A Twilight Baby," and others of the same calibre that are being advertised.

Who has made possible this phenomenal array of screen values?

Exhibitors! And through cooperation. Two years ago the trade in its producing and distributing branches, scoffed and ridiculed the idea that exhibitors would work together, or remain together for long.

It has remained for exhibitors, not producers or distributors, to teach the entire industry a lesson in business management and efficiency. And they have done it well. Take the total output of any distributing concern for the last year, and compare it, release by release, with the productions that this group of cooperative exhibitors have encouraged from independent stars and directors and manufacturers, and see how far ahead the exhibitors are in their ability to obtain real quality.

The future is aglow with promise of what exhibitor cooperation will continue to accomplish for worthy independent producers and stars, for the theatre owners, and for the public. I purposely refer to the public, because it is the good solid foundation on which every film structure rests.

Despite its present attainments, First National has no where near approached the maximum accomplishments that are possible for it. Time will show that this statement is correct — in fact, that it is conservative. Despite the fact that its current schedule of releases is the greatest aggregation of quality and talent ever presented consecutively, this great attainment is but a forecast of what is to come.

Revolution is abroad in filmland. Exhibitors are the torch bearers.

In evidence of this is the action of three great exhibitor interests who, this week, in the Home Office of First National Exhibitors' Circuit in New York, signed agreements bringing them closely to the new plan of expansion that has been created, and which is now being put into effect, by the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of the Circuit. The new and greater First National has gone outside its own exhibitor membership, for the first time, to test the correctness and soundness of its proposals for a method of relationship between producers and theatres that is equitable, fair and just to everyone concerned.

Within twenty-four hours after the last minute details of the plan of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee had been completed theatres that have an aggregate valuation of more than ten million dollars were pledged to it.

Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., who owns and operates eight large theatres there and who is building several more, together with Charles E. Whitehurst of Baltimore, who owns six big theatres in that city, listened to the plan, and immediately put their signatures to documents which make them, now, joint owners with Tom Moore, famous as the owner of the celebrated Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C., and of other important theatres, in the First National franchise for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Almost at the same time the Mark Strand Company of New York signed the contracts which include in the new plan its internationally known New York Strand and the new Mark Strand Theatre of Brooklyn.

Before this article can be published there will be many times the foregoing number of important theatre enterprises pledged to the plan conceived by the Exhibors' Defense Committee of First National.

Again — I repeat: Revolution is abroad in filmland, and the exhibitors, this time, are the torch bearers.

State Right Purchases

Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., have purchased the following: The Norwood Dramas, two reelers, from Arrow Film Company for Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina.

Romayne Comedy Company, Los Angeles, Cal., two reelers, for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina. New series of Texas Guinan two reelers and "The Pendleton Round-Up," a two reeler from Bulls-Eye Film Company for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina.

Jeanie Mac Pherson, Who Accomplishes Things

OFFICIAL duty sometimes evolves into a pleasure, which may be implied to mean that interviewing Jeanie Mac Pherson, associated with Cecil B. De Mille as scenario writer and famous for the preparing of the scripts of such great successes as "Old Wives for New," "Don't Change Your Husband" and last but not least Mr. De Mille's current screen offering "Male and Female," has proven a delightful event.

Be it known that the lady with the Scotch name, a Boston dialect, a Back Bay vocabulary and a love for New York which she calls home in spite of the fact that she lived in Los Angeles five years, is a slip of a girl whom you would never pick out as an expert at anything except making a happy home for some good man—that is until you have talked with her a few minutes.

Miss Mac Pherson is delightfully feminine, with a way of making you feel at ease and glad you came. She can talk and she does; about music, drama, the future of the motion picture, how nice it seems to be in New York—in fact everything but about Jeanie Mac Pherson.

She admits that in all of the many scripts that she has prepared for Mr. De Mille, the one for "Male and Female" capped the climax. She thinks she did a good job, so do we and so do some millions of people who have paid their way into the show shops, to witness the scenes she planned and transferred from her brain to paper.

When interviewing anyone from California it is to be expected that they will rave about the "Golden West." But Miss Mac Pherson doesn't. She is plumb exasperated at Los Angeles for lots of things it has and hasn't and prefers New York. If she had her way she would move the studio back East.

Some women talk well and say nothing. Miss Mac Pherson talks well and says a lot. She has ideas—ideas which if we aren't mistaken have contributed materially to the success of the De Mille productions and which will continue to mean much in those being planned for the future.

Conversation drifted around to the future of the screen. Miss Mac Pherson predicts that the ideal feature will soon be the original creation of the trained writer. She expressed regrets that it was necessary to take a standard play or book and pull it to pieces in order to construct picture material from the fragments.

There isn't a question but that Miss Mac Pherson is in love with her work—profession we might better say, since scenario writing of the sort that she does is an art. She is planning big things after she gets back to the De Mille lot which will be the usual five days after leaving New York, the date for her departure being December 15th. In the meantime she is seeing Broadway's shows, one of the things she misses in Los Angeles, giving some time to other Metropolitan gaities, to say nothing concerning nice quiet dinners with congenial friends and in between times is gathering material for the next De Mille picture.

What the production is to be is a studio secret but Miss Mac Pherson intimated that it will rival even "Male and Female" both from point of writing and direction.

Here is hoping that Miss Mac Pherson comes again to New York and that we have the honor of being assigned for the interview. She is a mighty nice little lady to know.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Holiday Drive Winning Support

Universal's Holiday Campaign of Good Cheer Gains Adherents in Halls of the Powers That be

ACCORDING to a recent statement of the Universal Film Company, "By the first of next year, it is estimated, more than sixty million people in the United States will have heard and read of The Universal Holiday Season and will know that the Universal Film Company has backed the greatest national uplift idea ever conceived by a commercial organization." The "Universal Holiday Season" extends from November 15th to the first of next year. During that period the Universal is exploiting its productions in connection with the idea of good cheer, happiness and a Universal holiday season to all.

Nick de Ruiz who plays a Chinese emperor in "Ambition," Dorothy Phillips latest Universal production

As was lately explained in the "News" issue of November 15th.

"The smallest towns and the largest cities have been covered; and the cooperation in this unusual idea has been more than startling. And the campaign is only well started," says the Universal report. "The statement, which can be verified at any time, that governors, mayors, presidents of Chambers of Commerce, ad clubs, state attorneys and newspaper editors have praised and agreed to give their support to this idea, should cause some comment not only from exhibitors of pictures but other producers as well."

Universal further states that the results of this effort one month after the campaign was started was that twelve mayors of cities and towns, the Governor of North Carolina and other public officials sent in their written endorsement of the movement. Among the public officers who are reported to have addressed communications to Universal, commending the movement, are: T. W. Bickett, governor of North Carolina; George L. Baker, mayor of Portland, Oregon; James L. Key, mayor of Atlanta, Ga.; F. R. McNinch, mayor of Charlotte; W. B. Mills, mayor of McCook, Neb.; McClay Hoyne, state's attorney for Cooke County, Ill.; and Rufus C. Holman, chairman of the Oregon-Washington Interstate Bridge Commission.

Once more Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have a comedy vehicle in which they play through two reels of fun. "The Little Deers," which is to be distributed by Goldwyn, is the latest vehicle in which this perfectly matched team of comic artists will sport their talents.

Richard Tucker, one of the most popular of the screen's leading men at the time that he abandoned studio work to accept a commission in the army, has signed a contract to play leads in Goldwyn Pictures.

Burston Film Prepares Big Press Drive for "The Hawk's Trail"

The advertising staff of Burston Films, Inc., is busily engaged in the preparation of an extensive trade paper campaign announcing the early release of "The Hawk's Trail."

The first trade announcement is booked for early release. Press notices of the "different" characters of "The Hawk's Trail" have already aroused keen interest, it is said, among state rights' buyers.

In this connection, it may be stated that the "hardest" territory in the United States has already found purchasers—the section referred to being seven western states. The distribution is in the hands of the W. H. Productions Company, which so successfully handled the recently released Burston-Ford serial, "The Mystery of 13."

Hallmark Announces "The Veiled Marriage" As December Issue

"The Veiled Marriage," written by J. L. Burke, directed by Keanan Buel and starring Anna Lehr, is announced by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark pictures Corporation, as the December release on the Famous Directors Series. The supporting cast includes: Ralph Kellard, John Charles, Dorothy Walters, Frank J. Murdock and William Carr.

Studios for Artcolor Production

C. Lang Cobb, general manager of the Artcolor Pictures Company, Inc., left New York December 3d for Jacksonville, Fla., to negotiate for and install studios for the producing of Artcolor Photo-plays in Natural colors. Suitable quarters for the winter months to accommodate the Artcolor players will also be arranged for by Mr. Cobb.

Special Service Section

Geraldine Farrar in "Flame of the Desert"

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

"THE Flame of the Desert" classes as a spectacle because it has been lavishly mounted in every detail and because as a background the producers have selected the desert with all its trappings around which to film the story.

It is in this department that the feature is above the usual Farrar offering where the story has been subordinate to the star. There is a mystic charm of a desert night to most people even if they have never seen a land of sand in the tropics. Associated with stories laid in a desert locale is the thought of romance, intrigue and flaming passion, which speaks to the primeval instinct that still remains in the human breast. Young and old, rich and poor, educated and uneducated are susceptible to the glamour and mysticism that permeates the atmosphere of the Orient. There is something attractive in the garments worn by the Oriental. People like to witness the clash of wits and perhaps of weapons when the white man meets the Arab. It is this atmosphere which should provide the keynote for exploiting "The Flame of the Desert" after the usual selling of the star's name has been accomplished to your best ability.

In the filming, however, of a spectacular production, individualities have not been lost and Miss Farrar and her actor husband, Lou Tellegen, have many scenes which register their dramatic power at close range. This is wisdom on the part of the producers, since the star's admirers, who are legion, wish to see her in emotional roles.

It is in Egyptian streets surging with native mobs on the eve of a great uprising against the yoke of England that the greater part of this Farrar story is laid. Magnificent scenes of a mystic ritual celebration participated in by thousands of Islamites gives the film color. A thrilling fight in a tomb between two white men and a horde of native insurgents label it as melodrama. The star's mad dash across the flaming Sahara to save her brother and her sweetheart is a highlight that brings the dominant personality of Miss Farrar into prominence. She has the role of Lady Isabel, an English noblewoman, who falls in love with a chieftain of a desert tribe, while yet realizing that the barriers of caste and convention make impossible a happy culmination of her romance. The part permits the famous opera star to rise to dramatic heights which will rank with her best work either on the operatic stage or the screen. In fact it is a role in which she is very much at home, since she has been splendidly cast and the part allows freedom of action as well as emotional possibilities.

In locale the "Flame of the Desert" brings the spectator from the luxury and comforts of London to the splendor of the barbaric Egypt. The dramatic surge of the story is carried along until it culminates in a not-to-be-foreseen climax at the finish of the seven reels.

The cast supporting Miss Farrar is a notable one, which includes Lou Tellegen as the chieftain, Alec B. Francis, Macey Harlem and Kate Lester, besides a host of unidentified character actors who perform the roles of the natives.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

FROM the land of the Nile comes the Egyptian delegation to London for matters of state importance. With the delegation is a noted Arab chieftain, a role played by Lou Tellegen. Lady Isabel, whose father, Alec B. Francis, is connected with the Egyptian embassy, meets the Arab chief and in spite of herself is attracted to him. They meet again and again, each time to find themselves more closely affiliated. Lady Isabel has a brother who possesses a weakness for gambling, and through this weakness becomes involved in financial difficulties.

He is offered a diplomatic post in Egypt and hoping to mend his ways, accepts. Lady Isabel who has tried to keep the boy under her protective influence goes with him and there again meets the Arab chief, who is instrumental in saving her from physical violence when she allows herself to become in danger by driving alone into the native quarters.

The native tribes are seething with sedition against English rule and urged onward by native leaders are planning a revolt. The Arab chief who has been one of the delegation to England is admitted to the secret session of the leaders who are to have charge of the proposed revolution and also is received by the English officials. Here he comes in contact constantly with Lady Isabel and declares his love, to be refused for reasons of caste and pride of race. In the meantime Lady Isabel's brother has found that gambling temptations are abundant in Cairo as well as in England and loses heavily to one of the plotters against his government.

This man accepts the boy's I O U's temporarily but later threatens to expose him unless certain secrets relative to what preparations, if any, are being made for curbing the revolutionary tendencies of the natives.

This the lad refuses to do and in desperation goes to his sister for help. Lady Isabel and her brother then call on the rebel leader in the hope that through the former's influence the matter of the gambling losses may be adjusted.

Two of the impressive scenes from "Flame of the Desert" which give an idea of the magnificence of the production

The producers have succeeded in getting all the mystic atmosphere of the desert into the current Farrar production, "The Flame of the Desert"

Bill Farrar, Tellegen, Story and Production

Both Lady Isabel and her brother are made prisoners, but the Arab chieftain comes to their rescue. He succeeds in freeing Lady Isabel, and while she rides madly across the desert he stays to fight for the life and freedom of the brother. This fight occurs in a tomb on the desert, where the two men hold a stairway against tremendous odds until help arrives.

During the interview, after the capture of Lady Isabel and her brother, the boy is forced to tell that England is aware of the threatened revolution and that the admiralty has dispatched war ships to protect her interests and quell the rebellion.

This information leads the rebel leader to send out the call to arms for the same night instead of a later date, as had been planned.

The revolt, however, fails in its object, Lady Isabel rides back with help for her imprisoned brother and sweetheart and the rebellion is put down before it had fairly started.

Then came a time when England chose to pay tribute to a certain secret service man who had been largely instrumental in furnishing the information which had enabled the government to prepare for the native revolt, by a formal celebration at which noted diplomats were to appear.

Among those present were Lady Isabel, who meets the distinguished Englishman to find him to be her Arab lover. Thus has been removed the barrier to her marriage, and the lovers plight their troth.

ADVERTISING ANGLES FOR THIS FILM

IN spite of the impressiveness of the production itself we still believe that the big exploitation bet is Miss Farrar and Lou Tellegen. We would play them up in the leading roles with the story and the spectacle angle second.

Unless you have worked it to extremes with any Farrar picture, one of the very best exploitation stunts to be had is found in tieing up with music houses for co-operative advertising on Farrar records and the picture. We have published numberless stories of how and where this has been done and the excellent results obtained. The most common plan is to visit the stores which sell Farrar talking-machine records, armed with stills of the picture and other tasty advertising for the star and feature and arrange for a window display combining your material and the store's merchandise. The reports where this has been done all state that the store proprietors are more willing to co-operate and usually are willing to use co-operative newspaper display and contribute to advertising the picture and themselves in other ways.

The Oriental flavor of this picture also offers a further opportunity to tie up with local merchants. Visit your merchants who sell Oriental rugs, tapestries, pottery curios, etc., and arrange for a display of their wares along with similar advertising material to that you have arranged to show in the music-store windows. You will find these merchants quite as willing to go fifty-fifty with you as are the music dealers.

The desert atmosphere of this offering also presents unusual opportunities for stage and lobby decorations, since these sort of pictures lend themselves well to this form of publicity.

For lobby displays we are suggesting that you inspect a cut which the producers prepared in their press-book and which presents some practical and inexpensive ideas along this line. Two palms are to be used at each side of your lobby, with draperies utilized, as you will note in the cut.

Oriental urns and pots with small palms contained may be suspended from the ceiling. If your ticket booth is in the center of the lobby opening, as is shown in the producers' illustration, we would consider following their plan in its entirety. If it isn't you can improvise some other innovations along the same lines. Sand strewn on the floor of your lobby will provide atmosphere if you do not think that it will be carried all over the theatre by the feet of patrons and become a nuisance. A desert canvass for your side walls can be turned out by any good artist in a few hours.

The atmosphere suggested for your lobby can be carried into the auditorium proper if you desire and will add to your presentation.

Stage setting and prologue possibilities will be apparent to you. For a stage setting I suggest an exact replica of the desert scene where Farrar meets Tellegen on the desert at night. A very good picture of this scene will be found in the accompanying panel of stills.

Another excellent stage setting and prologue is one suggested in the press book mentioned. Before a canvass representing an Egyptian mosque at sundown and depicting a Far East ritual service, station a man dressed as an Arab in the mineret. The soft chiming of bells will be the signal for the entrance of costumed Arabs who will prostrate themselves in prayer. After a few minutes interval the assembled company will sing some Oriental ballad, like "The Boudouin's Love Song."

Professional dancers attired in harem costumes may be utilized also in front of this setting or another suitable for such an act.

The Victrola and Farrar records for a concert in your theatre always offer unlimited opportunities for advertising a Farrar film. You will have no trouble of inducing the music dealer to send machine, records and a man to operate to your theatre either for a special performance or for a special number on the program. This medium is not to be despised as an asset for attracting people into the house. Much of the prejudice against the talking machine has passed and people really enjoy a Victrola concert.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY

FOR your newspaper displays use as a basis Miss Farrar and Lou Tillegen with proper display for both their names and the title of the production. Follow with selling talk which will emphasize the story and spectacle value of the offering.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Resumes Work; Engages John Cumberland

It is announced that Mrs. Sidney Drew has resumed her picture work at her studio on 125th street, New York. This gives the answer to the innumerable queries that have arisen since the death of her late husband, as to whether or not Mrs. Drew would continue in the world of filmdom or retire permanently from the amusement field.

Mrs. Drew is now engaged on a series based on Julian Street's "After Thirty." Mrs. Drew, when interrogated about her prospective picture, said: "The story is the sort of thing Mr. Drew and I did before his death, the characters being similar in many respects to Polly and Henry."

John Cumberland has been signed up to appear in the new series. Though Mrs. Drew will not appear in the series, she will soon return to the screen to play dramatic roles. A story written especially for her is now in progress, and as soon as the feature is ready, she will begin work. In accordance with her contract with the Pathe Exchange, Inc. the new series of pictures based upon "After Thirty" will be distributed through that exchange.

Anita Stewart and Edward Jose Have Arrived in Los Angeles

Anita Stewart arrived in Los Angeles from New York last week, laden with a complete collection of Fifth avenue's latest hat and gown creations, and anxious to start production on her new Louis B. Mayer picture, "The Fighting Shepherdess," a First National release.

Originally Anita Stewart intended making this photoplay of Carolyn Lockhart's famous novel in New York, but she changed her plans in favor of California as the locale, because of the more favorable weather conditions there.

Edward Jose has been secured to film "The Fighting Shepherdess." He arrived in Los Angeles simultaneously with Rudolph Cameron, Anita Stewart's husband and manager.

Gladys Brockwell is featured in "Thieves," a William Fox production.

Store Tie-Up for De Mille Film

Displays For "Male and Female" in Drug, Cigar, and Piano Stores in New York Win Public Notice

"MALE AND FEMALE," Cecil S. De Mille's picture version of Sir J. M. Barrie's stage play, "The Admirable Crichton," the first of the works of Barrie to be produced as a motion picture feature, has attracted a great deal of advance attention in the New York theatrical circles. It has already been presented in a number of first-run cities outside of New York, and the reception accorded it in those cities has served still further to whet the appetite of New Yorkers for this new effort of De Mille.

It is to the Exploitation Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that much of the credit for the big success scored, both in New York and other cities, is due.

Under the supervision of Wayland H. Taylor, exploitation representative at the New York Exchange, Greater New York was covered with posters announcing the attraction and the dates. These posters, it is reported, numbered no less than 6,000 and ranged in size from 24 sheets down to one sheets.

Striking displays were arranged in the windows of four of the leading drug etores in the Forty-second Street District. The posters show Gloria Swanson, in the role of Lady Mary Lesenby, in the bath scene which is one of the striking scenes of the picture. They are being used in connection with the display of perfumes and toilet articles. Other tie-ups with numerous piano stores and United Cigar Stores throughout the city were effected, appropriate scenes selected from the photoplay being utilized in each case for the store displays.

Good Cast in "The Sagebrusher"

Author of Story Helps Benjamin B. Hampton, Producer, in Selecting Cast to Portray Characters

"THE SAGEBRUSHER," Benjamin B. Hampton's powerful picturization of Emerson Hough's novel, and the second in his series of Great Authors' productions for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is announced. Mr. Hough, who was in close touch with the producer throughout the filming of the production, had a hand in the selection of players chosen to enact the principal roles entirely by virtue of their fitness to portray the types in the story.

The role of "Sim Gage," is played by Noah Beery. In wonderful contrast to Beery's "Sim Gage" is Marguerite De La Motte in the characterization of Mary Warren, the delicate, refined girl who becomes the wife of Sim, "the dirtiest, laziest man in Montana." Roy Stewart does some very artistic work in his screen career with the role of Dr. Barnes, the romantic lead.

Betty Brice is thoroughly at home with the characterization of Annie Squires, worldly but golden-hearted room-mate of Mary in the city episodes. The three villains of the play are effectively portrayed by Gordon Russell as "Big Aleck," Thomas O'Brien as "Dornewald" and Edwin Wallock as "Friedrich Waldhorn." Arthur Morrison, one of the stars of "Desert Gold," comes forth with another characterization, at once gentle, humorous and powerful, as "Wid Gardner."

Edward Sloman, director of "The Westerners," also held the directorial reins in the production of the second Great Authors' picture.

Merchandise As Pay For Films

Conditions Abroad, Says Sidney Garret, May Force Exporters to Accept Such Return

RETURNING from a several month's trip in Europe, during which he conferred with the principal film distributors of England, and the Continent, Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss Company, in an interview given last week, made the startling prediction that the time is not far distant when exporters will be forced to accept foreign merchandise in return for American pictures.

"With the rates of exchange steadily growing worse, rather than better; with the gold value of the money of the new countries of Europe, such as Czecho-Slovak, almost negligible, and with the failure of the American government to bolster up the foreign money situation, film producers and distributors in this country must be prepared to extend long time credits to the European market," declared Mr. Garrett.

"Even then, in some territories," he continued, "it is not at all unlikely that a new system of payment will have to be arranged — a system whereby foreign merchandise will be accepted in lieu of cash. This is due to the fact that financial conditions are so unstable and chaotic, that the correspondents of American banks in these territories, refuse to guarantee any credits whatever. The proposal to trade merchandise for film was made to me by the principals of some of the largest film organizations abroad."

Conditions in England are bad, Mr. Garrett stated, but are even worse in France. "On the other hand," he continued, "new territories created out of the war, are opening up to the American distributor, but unfortunately they are also more of a liability than an asset, since their money has little cash value at present. For instance, film sold to-day to Czecho-Slovak at $1 a foot, would actually return to the exporter about 10 cents a foot.

"After going over the war-torn territory of these countries, I am satisfied that it is going to be a long time before these conditions can be remedied, and that it is up to us in this country to face this fact, and adjust our affairs accordingly. Regardless of money rates, or anything else, conditions cannot return to normal until theatres are built in which pictures can be shown, and this will not be for a long time to come.

"In the light of these conditions, no time should be lost by the industry in this country in readjusting its methods of dealing with the foreign markets. Only big pictures must be sent abroad, without a serious loss to all interests involved, and arrangements must be made to adapt our operations to the financial requirements of our foreign customers, unless America is to sacrifice the tremendous advantage which it now possesses in the film market of the world."

Tom Terriss Is to Produce Only Super-Features for Vitagraph

According to an announcement from the Vitagraph Company of America, "Tom Terriss, under his new agreement with the Vitagraph is to produce only super-features and is now at work finishing his version of the celebrated stage play, 'The Fortune Hunter,' featuring Earl Williams, which is being made under his own personal supervision and direction."

New Producing Company, the Fay Films, Formed in Milwaukee

The Fay Films Company has been organized and incorporated at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, by Rupert F. Fry, George W. Blackburn and H. E. Moore, all well-known business men of Milwaukee and Chicago. It is planned to keep the company a close corporation, no stock being offered for sale.

The plans for the first year call for twenty-six one-reel comedies, featuring a supposedly new find in the picture field, in the person of Harry Gane. Mr. Gane is said to have considerable fame as a "Mugger" in vaudeville, and his new line of endeavor promises much for the future, according to reports.

Mr. Frank S. Mattison, who as "Putnam Hoover" has served the Bee Hive Film Exchanges as publicity agent, joins the new concern as general manager. For the present, productions are being made in Chicago, but Mr. Fry intends to have his company permanently located on the Coast.

Grossman Announces "$1,000,000 Reward" Release in December

"$1,000,000 Reward," the Grossman Pictures, Inc., serial production, featuring Lillian Walker, will be released the first week in December, according to an announcement by Harry Grossman. It is said that a final view of the film just before it entered into its final stage of production makes the Grossman officials confident that it will rank high among episode pictures and will be fully up to the standard of the other splendid serials which Mr. Grossman has produced.

Wide distribution of the serial is assured by reason of the fact that it has already been purchased, according to the Grossman report, by the leading exchanges in many of the more important territories in the country.

To Have Expert Advice in Producing "The Return of Tarzan"

Harry Revier, who is producing "The Return of Tarzan," for Numa Pictures Corporation, has engaged Franklin B. Coates as a member of the company. It is expected that Mr. Coates will supply valuable advice regarding jungle life and color in the production of the picture; for he is said to have been an explorer and jungle-man. Mr. Coates, it is said, was also one of four men who traveled the Amazon from its source to its mouth, by way of the Huaylor river, as a member of the Captain Besley Expedition in 1914–15.

Title of Constance Talmadge's Next Picture Changed

The title of "At the Barn," Constance Talmadge's third First National picture, from the London comedy of the same name by Anthony Wharton, has been definitely changed to "Two Weeks." "Two Weeks" will be released on January 5th. It is directed by Sidney A. Franklin. Miss Talmadge is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including Conway Tearle, Reginald Mason, George Fawcett and Templer Saxe.

"The Inferior Sex" Gets Extensive Publicity and Advertising

It is reported by the Louis B. Mayer Productions that more than 50,000 inches of publicity, aside from the enormous amount of paid advertising space has been put over in the interest of Mildred Harris Chaplin's first picture under the Louis B. Mayer banner. This picture, "The Inferior Sex," is soon to be released as a First National attraction."

The greater part of the editorial exploitation was through the medium of metropolitan dailies, including some of the largest papers in the country. Fan magazines and rotogravures in Sunday supplements came next.

This space is invaluable to exhibitors and has placed Mildred Harris Chaplin and "The Inferior Sex" squarely in the limelight. Reports from American centers, from the Antipodes, the Orient and Europe show Mrs. Chaplin is enjoying great favor with film fans.

Mae Murray's Vehicle, "The A. B. C. of Love," Issued Dec. 14

Following the success of "Twin Pawns," Mae Murray's last starring vehicle, Pathe announces December 14th as the releasing date of her next feature, "The A. B. C. of Love," written and produced by Leonce Perret.

Reports from the Pathe offices are that "The A. B. C. of Love" is expected to be the greatest success Miss Murray has had to date. It is described as a dramatic romance, and it said to give the star an unusual opportunity to display her comedy talents in a unique manner.

Miss Murray has been surrounded by a strong supporting cast. H. E. Herbert plays opposite Miss Murray. Dorothy Green, the vampire of a great many productions, is seen as the stage siren, and Arthur Donaldson, who had the title role in the original "Prince of Pilsen" company, has an important part.

"Harvest Time for Exhibitors"

Elmer Pearson of Pathe Finds on Trip That Showmen Are Coining Money; Capacity House Rules

WITH the pockets of every farmer, merchant and tradesman in the South and Southwest literally bulging with money, and every bank almost begging their patrons to borrow from them, these sections of the country have gone amusement mad.

This is the report brought back by Elmer R. Pearson, Feature Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who has just returned from a four-weeks' trip, which brought him to Washington, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta.

Not in his many years' experience in the sales department of several motion picture organizations has Mr. Pearson found conditions so generally roseate for exhibitors of screen dramas. The same story is to be found in virtually very city visited by him.

Particularly in the South, and the Southwest, are exhibitors enjoying an unprecedented era of prosperity.

Mr. Pearson returned with optimistic reports regarding the situation, so far as Pathe is concerned. The rapidity of the growth of the Pathe feature department has been keenly noted wherever Mr. Pearson visited, and he was highly complimented by prominent exhibitors on the type of the product being issued by Pathe.

"The Gay Old Dog," Hobart Henley's picture, he asserted, is being acclaimed one of the most satisfying productions of the year.

"Probably the strangest thing I noticed on my trip," said Mr. Pearson, "was the eagerness which the people of the Southwest express for any motion picture that has a Western flavor. They like anything that has a gun or gunplay in it.

"Exhibitors in Oklahoma and other Southwestern States are not keeping up with the times so far as raising the admissions to their theatres. Though their patrons are all rich, almost beyond belief, most exhibitors in the section continue to charge only ten and fifteen cents admission. In several rare instances I find showmen who have the temerity to ask twenty cents.

"The exhibitor apparently is ignoring the wealth of his clients. He is not keeping pace with the times. They buy the best of pictures, but in spite of that continue to charge the same admissions they were getting before the war.

"The box-office receipts of the leading theatres in the towns I visited are amazing. Good showmen are figuratively cleaning up. I visited one manager in the Central West, who declared that any week in which less than $10,000 passed through his box-office, was a decidedly poor week. Some weeks his business touched the $15,000 mark. It isn't so long ago that the biggest seven-day business in one of New York's largest film palaces was not more than $21,000.

"The attendance at most theatres is limited only by their capacity. Such a condition has never before existed in the amusement field. The exhibitor who is taking the fullest advantage of his opportunities to-day is becoming wealthy. The oil industry has nothing on the motion picture exhibiting field in some territories.

"The Harold Lloyd comedies are going over with a wallop. Nearly everyone of the most prominent exhibitors I met on the road were firm in their opinion that the new series of $100,000 two-reel comedies were in a class by themselves."

Pre-Release of Read's Special

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter", Produced by J. Parker Read, Jr., Ready for Pre-Release

IT IS said that J. Parker Read, Jr., has produced an even bigger picture than his popular first Louise Glaum special, "Sahara," in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance, received this week from the Coast by the Hodkinson Corporation and announced for pre-release showings in early December in the larger cities.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" was made under the supervision of Mr. Read himself at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Los Angeles. The scene of the story is laid in London with a panorama of colorings ranging from the magnificence of Buckingham Palace to the mysterious depths of the colorful Limehouse district. Louis Joseph Vance personally built the scenario for Producer Read and both edited and titled "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," being still in California after the completion of this work.

According to reports, Miss Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" had thirty-odd changes of gowns, wraps and costumes; and it is expected that the picture besides all of its dramatic power and appeal will set certain fashion standards for women throughout the country. It will be good news to many screen fans to know that Edwin Stevens, the sardonic, crafty "Baron Alexis" in "Sahara" is the villain of this second Louise Glaum production. "The Lone Wolf" is played by Bertram Grassby, prominent for his many noteworthy characterizations. Thomas Holding also has a part worthy of his talents.

Following its customary policy, the Hodkinson organization is ready to grant periods of extra protection to big pre-release accounts, giving them exclusive and unduplicated showings for long periods in keeping with the high rentals asked for this production.

Prominent in the supporting cast of Willard King Bradley's "Empty Arms," the initial Lester, Park-Edward Whiteside production, starring Gail Kane and featuring Thurston Hall, is Beverly Bruce, the well-known dramatic stock star.

A perview of the first three Mercury Comedies will be held in the New York offices of the Bulls-Eye Film Corp. December first, according to M. L. Coben of the Bulls-Eye Film Corp. The Mercury comedies are two-reel "situation" comedies, featuring Milburn Moranti, formerly leading man with Gale Henry.

'Tis Director's Day Says Neilan

Now in Position to Command Proper Recognition; "Cut and Dried" Type of Film, Out of Date

THE day of the director, according to Marshall Neilan, who recently formed his own independent producing organization, has arrived. Time was when the director was receiving less credit and monetary returns for his work than the leading man who appeared opposite the star. It was for this reason that Mr. Neilan, years ago, deserted the ranks of the director and returned to acting before the camera opposite such stars as Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet, Marguerite Clark and others, biding his time until the director's opportunities began to become evident.

"When the work of the director began to be recognized," said Mr. Neilan, "various players entered this branch of the business. My ambitions were always in this direction and I again took up the work, feeling confident that the time must come when the man at the helm of the producing troupe would come into his own.

"To-day the director is in a position to demand proper recognition. His name has become a big factor in the sale of his goods, which is entirely as it should be. In many cases the limitations which have been placed upon his work in the past are eradicated. True, there are still many instances where the director is handicapped with ancient stipulations, but producers are rapidly beginning to realize that if a man is competent and is placed in charge of certain work, he must be allowed to obtain results without outside instructions and interference. If he is not competent, he should not be entrusted with this important work.

"The really big successes in motion pictures are not those that have been ground out like clock-work but those that have been produced with ample time, concentration and facilities.

"A time-worn phrase in this industry is 'fewer and better pictures.' At last producers are really beginning to realize the real meaning of this. Let us have more producing companies with less work to do if necessary, but let each producer realize that the really big money-maker cannot be ground out and that he individually must work in accordance with the new order of things. There is, and perhaps always will be, a certain type of producer who must 'grind them out' for the 'masses.' But those truly high-class producing organizations who advertise 'triumphs of the cinema,' must get away from the cut-and-dried producing rules or they will soon find they are not running out such 'triumphs' after all.

"In the formation of Marshall Neilan Productions, I realize the ambition of years. No production will be released under my name unless my organization, comprising the foremost experts in the industry, and myself feel that it is a credit to our standards. This is another phase that has often been stated, a bromide of the industry, but for once it will be backed by fact."

Prison Conditions Visualized

MacManus Production Said to Truly Reveal Inner Conditions as Seen by "Tom" Osborne

EDWARD A. MacMANUS has completed his second production, which promises a more startling innovation in the way of new photo-play art. It is even a radical departure in both production and direction of the methods employed to obtain realism in "The Lost Battalion," where all of the characters were developed sympathetically but without sentimentality. His new production is a massive one, built on a romantic and intensely dramatic story of prison life and conditions, founded on the vivid experiences of Thomas Mott Osborne, who became a voluntary prisoner to learn first hand the horrors of prisons under the "old system" of management.

Few productions for the screen have been made that entailed the supervision and labor as well as the number of people employed almost constantly, or the number of photographic "shots" necessary than this McManus production has.

Under the general supervision and direction of Sidney Olcott, sixty-two sets were necessary for interior scenes alone, and there was made no less than an excess of one hundred dissolving scenes and five hundred stills, an unprecedented number to attain the necessary MacManus ideal of realism and which seems to mark the limit of up-to-date achievement in moving picture production.

The children of the rich and the children of the poor in their natural environment ever have an appeal to the dramatic instinct, and when it is considered that Mr. MacManus has visualized what Mr. Osborne saw in prison, the sons of the rich and poor paying the penalty of early folly side by side on the stone heap, tracing their careers almost from the tenement, and mansion, to the house of correction and the penitentiary with the romance and love that follows them behind the bars, he has something to interest, not a mere number, but all the people.

Thirty-five hundred people were employed in the visualization of this great drama, with 50 screen artists playing parts. In addition there was a number of former inmates of prisons who had endured and survived such cruelties of the "old system" as the head cage, the ball and chain, whippings, strait jacket, and long periods of incarceration in dark cells, and who were not averse to re-enact some of the bitter experiences they went through while under punishment.

Harrison Ford, who came East to play opposite Marguerite Clark in her new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Easy to Get," has returned to California where he will resume work at the Lasky studio.

Yukio Aoyama, Japanese actor and writer, has been engaged by Ruth Roland for an important part in her forth-coming Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," which will be released on December 28th.

Prof. Charles F. Herm, who will furnish a series of pictures on cinema-biology for the New Screen Magazine

Three New Pictures Added to the Famous Directors' Series

Director Dallas M. Fitzgerald and John Glavey, scenario writer of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, are completing the cutting, titling and editing of Director Fitzgerald's first production for the Famous Directors Series, distributed by Hallmark. The title of this production has not yet been announced. Anna Lehr, Marie Shotwell and Edmund Breese have the principal roles.

"High Speed," another of the Famous Directors Series, is now in the cutting room. Charles Miller, the director, expects to have it ready for a private showing within the next two weeks. Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette have the principal roles.

"The Veiled Marriage," Keanan Buel's first production for the Famous Directors Series, has been titled and edited and is announced for release on this series in January. Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard have the principal roles.

Benny Leonard Is Seeking Good-Looking Young Lady for Star

Benny Leonard, Frank G. Hall, Sidney Ascher and Joseph A. Jacobs, are looking for a good looking young lady who is willing to follow Benny through 15 episodes of love-making and thrills. Benny returned this week from his fight with Johnny Duffy in Tulsa, Okla., and came directly from the Pennsylvania station to the offices of Frank G. Hall to inquire whether Mr. Hall had chosen his leading woman for the serial in which he is to star. Mr. Hall said he hadn't, and so the search goes on.

Lifeograph Co. Puts "The Golden Trail" on the Silver Screen

"The Golden Trail," an Alaskan story from the pen of Lewis H. Moomaw, has just been filmed by the American Lifeograph Company of Portland, Oregon, under the directorship of Mr. Moomaw and Jean Hersholt. The scenario was written by Elizabeth Mahoney; the photography accomplished by Clyde Cooke.

Does Al Christie know how to "pick 'em nice?" Well we can truthfully say he does judging from the above. And he also knows a lot about costumes, although we do not believe he ever was in that business. These beauties are appearing in his latest comedies.

Outdoor Sport Films to be the Product of New Concern

"The Cinema Classics" was recently chartered under the laws of the State of New York for the purpose of producing and distributing educational films (short subjects). The company is well prepared to carry out its program, having a capitalization of $100,000 fully paid and non-assessable.

The staff of the Cinema Classics is composed of two officers recently returned from France and M. L. Fulton who for the past eight years has been engaged in every branch of the industry. Captain H. C. K. Mattison, recently discharged, will immediately take up his duties as president of the corporation, and Lieut. Joel F. Seedoff will be the vice-president and treasurer of the same. M. L. Fulton as secretary will be in charge of the scenario art and music departments.

The program of the corporation includes the production of a series of out-door sport pictures, the first of which "Golf" is now ready for release.

Blanche Sweet in "Fighting Cressy" to be Seen January 16

"Fighting Cressy," second of Blanche Sweet's series of big special productions for Jesse D. Hampton, which started a successful run at the Broadway Theatre, Monday, November 22, will be released on January 16th. This date was set during the last week by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"Fighting Cressy," which was adapted for the screen from Bret Harte's classic of the West, "Cressy," follows "A Woman of Pleasure," in the list of Blanche Sweet pictures distributed by Pathe. This epic of the West will only have to repeat the performance of "A Woman of Pleasure" to be established as one of the biggest features of the season.

After spending three days in personal appearances at Boston, where she also co-operated with the Red Cross Drive in that city, June Elvidge proceeded to Cleveland. Here again her personal appearances coincided with the showing at the Loew theatres of "The Poison Pen," her recent release through World Film Corporation.

Completing National Subject

"The Kentucky Colonel" Will Soon be Finished; Players of Note go With Company

WITH the completion of Harold McGrath's novel, "Hearts and Masks," starring pretty Elinor Field, the National Film Corporation has announced the start of another feature, this time a story with a southern setting, called "The Kentucky Colonel."

This story was created by one of the most famous authors of the day, and is a careful study of the south and its charm. Complete details of the production, as to cast, direction and other bits have not yet reached the east from Los Angeles. However, Joe Brandt, general representative of the National, is confident that it will maintain the standard set in the two most recent releases of the company, which are "Hearts and Masks" and "The Confession," a drama featuring that finished actor, Henry Walthall.

The "Kentucky Colonel" will be finished in several weeks.

The National players are being continually augmented with film folk who have won reputations for photoplay work. The present company is now headed by Elinor Field, Francis McDonald, Lloyd Bacon, who is a son of Frank Bacon, star in the phenomenal Broadway legitimate hit, "Lightnin'."

Joe Brandt, general representative of the company, whose office is at 1600 Broadway, is highly gratified at the manner in which the productions of the National have been received. Although comparatively young in point of years, National is rounding out into one of the main producing companies in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

I. Bernstein, producing manager, is one of the most experienced men in the business, and those of the trade familiar with his ability, expect even greater things from the National studios.

Henley Will Visit Exhibitors

Producer Will Ascertain Through Leading Exhibitors the Type of Film the Public Wants

HOBART HENLEY, the producer who created "The Gay Old Dog" for Pathe distribution and is now putting the finishing touches on "Skin Deep," his second attraction, is planning to go direct to the leading exhibitors of the country to obtain their views of the type of motion picture most popular at this time. When the cutting and assembling of "Skin Deep" has been completed, it is the intention of Mr. Henley to visit about sixteen key cities, and to confer with the foremost exhibitors in each territory.

In the past, producers have claimed they held their fingers directly on the pulse of the public, and made productions according to the trend of the amusement lovers' views, but Mr. Henley, says the Pathe report, will be the real pioneer of the movement. No one is better fitted to judge what the public desires than the men who are fulfilling the wishes of their patrons. Henley wants to know particularly just how his public feels regarding the type of his productions.

Before leaving, Mr. Henley will make all preparations for the filming of his third Pathe attraction. Therefore, he will lose no time putting it into work immediately upon his return. "The Gay Old Dog" continues to roll up a wonderful booking record. Everywhere the production is meeting with great success, and a most noteworthy fact in connection with the picture is the long runs it is being accorded.

"The Fireman," is announced by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, as the second release, scheduled for November 16th, of the new edition de luxe, of the Chaplin comedies.

Her First Selznick Picture "A Regular Girl" Sets Records on Broadway and Elsewhere

THE S. R. O. sign has been working overtime at D. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre since the doors were first opened for an indefinite run of Elsie Janis' first Selznick Picture, "A Regular Girl."

Preceded and trailed by exploitation and publicity that has set a standard for power, "A Regular Girl" has literally captured Father Knickerbocker in one of the most auspicious and successful engagements that Broadway has known.

On the end of the first week's presentation, the management of the Broadway Theatre reported that all previous box-office records had been shattered, with receipts totalling the highest of any previous week in the history of the Broadway.

With the start of the second week on Monday, the ticket-seekers continued to form a line which extended for three blocks down Broadway and it seemed as though all New York was eager to pay homage to America's beloved comedienne and the heroine of the A. E. F. in France.

Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures Corporation, points to the success of "A Regular Girl" as the surest proof of what showmanship means in the making of motion pictures. It will be remembered that Myron Selznick outbid all other companies for the services of Miss Janis following her return from overseas service and the determined manner in which "A Regular Girl" is ensnaring Manhattan and all other cities is conclusive evidence of the value of timeliness and quality in picture production.

So consistent and persistent has been the response at the Broadway Theatre that extra performances have been arranged. Special children's performances and a benefit presentation for returned soldiers and sailors will be held every Saturday morning during the indefinite run.

Charles R. Rogers, Director of Sales for Select, continues to report heavy bookings on "A Regular Girl." Repeat bookings from showmen who have already presented the picture are reported by many Select branches.

Wm. DeMille Assigned New Job

He Will Direct a Series of Special Productions for F. P.–Lasky; The First to be "The Prince Chap"

ALTHOUGH William C. DeMille will follow the same general lines in the organization of his staff as his brother, Cecil B. DeMille, the productions of William C. DeMille will be of a very different type from those with which the brother's name has been associated. Comedy with a strong hint of pathos is William C. DeMille's field, both by preference and training, and it will be to this style of photoplay that he will devote his efforts.

He joined the Famous Players-Lasky forces five years ago in the capacity of scenario editor. This in turn led him to directing, although he has continued to devote a portion of his time to writing for both the stage and the screen. During his five years of screen work, William C. DeMille has directed a total of eighteen productions which have been uniformly successful. His most recent efforts have been devoted to two starring vehicles for Robert Warwick, "The Tree of Knowledge" and "Jack Straw."

Although no definite schedule beyond the production of "The Prince Chap" has been drawn up for him, Mr. DeMille has several famous plays in mind which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is planning to purchase for production as William C. DeMille specials.

Marshall Neilan Moves to New Studio in Los Angeles

Marshall Neilan has moved his organization from the Louis Weber Studio and has established his new producing headquarters at 1723 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, opposite the Mack Sennett comedy factory. Mr. Neilan's lease on the Weber studio expired last week at which time he finished the interiors for his initial independent production.

Accompanied by Marjorie Daw, Lewis Stone, Jane Novak, J. Barney Sherry and other members of his cast and producing stag, Mr. Neilan left Los Angeles late last week for Bear Valley in the northern part of the state. After completing a number of exteriors there the company will go to Canada where the film will be finished.

Plans are now rapidly progressing for the building of Mr. Neilan's own studio in Hollywood, and it is expected that actual work will be started on the construction in the near future.

Entire Stanley Circuit Latest to Book Lloyd's Two-Reelers

Following a statement that the entire Metropolitan circuit of Marcus Loew would play the new series of $100,000 two-reel Harold Lloyd comedies, Pathe announces that the Stanley circuit has also booked the first six of the features, starting with "Bumping into Broadway." Sixteen Stanley theatres in Philadelphia, three in Camden, N. J., and two in Atlantic City, have been signed up for the initial multiple reel series starring Lloyd.

In Chicago, the Lloyd comedies have been booked over the Eubliner and Trinz, and the Ascher Brothers circuits, and by the Riviera Theatre, one of Chicago's finest motion-picture palaces. In Los Angeles, Samuel L. Rothapfel, who established New York's three big motion-picture theatres among the most artistic in the country, is playing Lloyd comedies with great success.

Jesse L. Lasky, Well Again, Is Back at Desk in Hollywood

O. Medina, Motiograph Distributor for Cuba, Visits New York

O. Medina, a prominent Havana business man and partner in the firm of Audrian & Medina, distributors of the world famous Motiograph for the island of Cuba, is visiting New York.

Mr. Medina has been very successful selling Motiographs in his country, disposing of 30-odd machines the past year, and is to install one in the new house in Havana which is to be constructed along the same lines as our Capitol Theatre.

"They are becoming more popular every day," he said, "and especially since they installed a new speed control on their 1002-D machines which resembles that now being used on the De Luxe model, which has proven such a success.

"We are striving for perfection in our machines and believe we are very near it, and have a number of 'selling talks' over our nearest competitors.

"Among the theatres of Havana now using the machines are the Rialto, Margot, Tosca, Gris Esmeraldi, Royal and Inglaterra."

Mr. Medina is very enthusiastic in his accounts of the wonderful prosperity which Cuba is enjoying and says that thousands and thousands of Americans are making their hofes there, especially during the winter months.

"All this will naturally revert to the picture business and mean the building of many new and modern picture houses," he says.

"Exhibitor Now Sees Value of Exploitation Aids"

V. P. Whitaker, general sales representative for Select Pictures Corporation, who recently started on a cross-country tour of Select's branch offices, reports business conditions among the exhibitors as "better than ever." Mr. Whitaker further states that the exhibitor is finally awakening to the true value of exploitation and advertising, and that he is keenly appreciative of the efforts of the distributor to assist him along these lines.

"The exhibitor now realizes that if he doesn't take advantage of the exploitation helps the distributor furnishes with a picture, that his competitor will," writes Mr. Whitaker. "Furthermore the exhibitor knows that exploitation pays big dividends at the box office and this applies to the small-town exhibitor as well as to the big showman in the larger city."

English Head Does Fast Buying

Harry Ward of Ward's Films, London, Returns to Europe with 46 Film Features Bought Since Nov. 1

A SERIES of sales, which National Graphic Sales Corporation claims will go down as a record for the fastest buying of features for the United Kingdom, was concluded several days ago at the sailing of the Mauretania, which carried back to England Harry Ward of Ward's Films, Ltd., of London. Mr. Ward arrived in New York on November 1, and had no more than set foot on our shores when he got busy looking at features. Before the first day was over he had six in hand it is reported. and he added to the collection until he had acquired 46 features with options on others which are in production. As fast as the decisions were made, Mr. Ward wrote his check for the full amount of the purchase, and the entire lot ran close the quarter million mark, according to reports. This may be considered the biggest and fastest cash buy of motion pictures ever made in the United States by any European buyer, at one time," says the National Graphic Sales report.

Until a few years ago Mr. Ward was very little known in the film business, particularly in the United States. He started a small distributing office in England some six years ago, which was located in a back room with a very small capital. With persistency he kept his head above water, and to-day the Ward Films, Ltd., which he organized, are the owners and occupy the entire six story building at 193 Wardour Street, London, in the heart of the film section of London.

Among the many features that Mr. Ward has purchased are those with such stars as: Alice Brady, June Elvidge, Montague Love, Mary Miles Minter, Henry B. Walthall, Carlyle Blackwell, Clara Kimball Young. Vivian Martin, House Peters, Kitty Gordon and Robert Warwick. In fact, it is expected that the majority of the present day screen favorites will be seen in the United Kingdom through the house of Ward.

Burston Serial Now Completed

Preliminary Showings of First Four Episodes are Reported to Have Aroused Great Interest

LOUIS BURSTON, President of Burston Film Inc., announces the completion of his latest fifteen episode serial, "The Hawk's Trial" starring King Baggott, with Rhea Mitchell, Grace Darmond and a big cast of principals, directed by Woodrow Van Dyke. Preliminary showings of the first four episodes have aroused great interest it is said in the review of the picture which will be given to representatives of the press and invited guests, the first of the coming week. Producer Burston's statement that he has succeeded in producing an absolutely original type of serial in "The Hawk's Trial" is said to be borne out by the few episodes that have already been shown.

King Baggott, has a protean role, assuming a different character in each episode. The suspense at the end of each episode is achieved through tense situations which developed for two reels, reach their climax as episode endings. This does away with the necessity for interpolated "stunt" endings, it is said, and gives better dramatic form as well as a greater interest in the continuation of the situation at the opening of the next chapter.

King Baggot in this serial is said to be given opportunities such as rarely fall to the lot of even a successful star. King is given wide scope for display of his dramatic talents and presents the fifteen characters as clean-cut delineations, which it is claimed reach the highest expression of the dramatic art.

Extensive Improvements at Jesse D. Hampton's Hollywood Studio

With the rapid increase of work at the Jesse D. Hampton Productions studios in Hollywood it has been found necessary to add another enclosed stage not only to protect the sets and properties from the rainy season but to get the better light effects insisted upon in these productions.

Miss Blanche Sweet's next production, "Simple Souls," by John Hastings Turner, will be filmed in the new studios.

Universal Studios Still Active

Officials Concede Machinery is Not Running at Maximum But Maintain Much is Being Accomplished

A recent report from the Universal Film Company states:

"Despite the fact that many coast press communications carry the statement that Universal City is deserted, Universal officials cannot agree to the truthfulness of that statement. It is a fact that many companies are not working—but many are. It is only that the usual number are not working."

This week three directors are busy cutting productions they have just completed. They are: Allen Holuban, who is cutting "Ambition;" Rollin Sturgeon, who supervised the Aoki production, "The Breath of the Gods;" and Douglas Gerrard, who directed the Salisbury picture, "The Phantom Melody." The entire week will be devoted to steady editing of these productions, it is said.

Three other big productions are receiving the finishing touches and the final scenes are being made on them. "Overland Red," the latest Harry Carey production, will be ready for the cutting room within the next few days. The James J. Corbett production, "The Prince of Avenue A," is reported ready for editing. The Eric Von Stroheim production, "The Woman in the Plot," is approaching the final scenes. Tsuri Aoki is scheduled to begin work soon on "The Yellow Orchid." This production will be directed by William C. Dowlan.

Besides these production activities three serials are under way at the big Western studio. Two of them have been under way for some time and the third was started a week ago, the new Eddie Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger." Jacques Jaccard has been assigned to handle the megaphone in this serial. Thelma Percy, sister of Eileen Percy, is Polo's new leading woman.

Kathleen O'Connor is now costarring with Jack Perrin in the serial, "The Lion Man." Al Russell is directing this serial and the twelfth episode is scheduled to be completed this week. "The Man Hunter," the serial starring Art Accord and Mildred Moore, is in the sixth episode of its continuity. This serial is said to be an uncommon one and is being carefully watched at Universal City by the officials there.

Selznick's Coast Studios Busy

"Just a Wife" and "Blind Youth" in the Making For National Picture Theatres

WORD comes from the Selznick West Coast studios that the whole aggregation has gone into second speed on the production of the first two pictures which will be released through the Select Pictures Corporation to National Picture Theatres, Inc., the new exhibitor cooperative organization founded and incorporated by Lewis J. Selznick.

These two pictures are under the personal supervision of Harry Rapf, and are being enacted by all-star casts. The first to be released will be "Just A Wife," a screen version of Eugene Walter's big domestic drama, which Belasco staged on Broadway several seasons ago. This picture is definitely announced for release on January 1st, and Mr. Rapf says the studio fairly hums with the sounds of a big film in the making.

"Blind Youth" will follow close upon the release of "Just a Wife." "Blind Youth" is the joint product of Lou Tellegan, the famous actor-sculptor-author, and Willard Mack, playwright, responsible for such successes as "Tiger Rose" and "Kick In." Mr. Tellegan played the leading role in the stage version of this play last season, achieving one of the most triumphant successes of his career.

Many notable players, some of them stars in their own right, have been engaged for the casts of "Just a Wife" and "Blind Youth," and in addition Mr. Rapf has surrounded himself with the most capable and experienced men and women to be found in the productional division of the industry.

The two plays now in course of production are the initial offering of a long line of excellent pictures to be made in the Selznick West Coast studios for release to National Pictures Theatres, Inc.

Mr. Zierler is widely known among motion picture men, having for years been with Universal as sales manager of the Big U Exchange. Recently he took the presidency of the Commonwealth to handle the Clara Kimball Young pictures among others.

Great Interest at Initial Presentation of "The Undercurrent"

Executives and officials of industrial concerns located within a radius of 50 miles on all sides of New York City have shown a very active interest in Guy Empey's photodrama, "The Undercurrent," the Select special which has been seen in the New York territory for the first time during its run at the Capitol Theatre, in New York City, the week beginning November 16th.

For many weeks past inquiries have poured into the offices of Select Pictures Corporation, asking where and when "The Undercurrent" would be released in Greater New York. In view of the timeliness of the picture not a little impatience has been shown at the delay which was occasioned by holding the picture back for its presentation in the world's largest and finest theatre devoted to the motion-picture art.

Arthur Guy Empey, who wrote "The Undercurrent" as well as playing the leading role, has expressed in it many true American ideals.

New Producing Plant in East

Eugene Spitz, Head of the Estee Company, Announces Opening of Modern Studios on East 124th Street

DIRECT evidence that the East is becoming more popular again as the production center for pictures is evidenced in the announcement that a new studio was opened December 1 by the Estee Company at 209 East 124th street, New York City. It will be known as the Estee Annex No. 2, the other one being at 361 West 125th street.

The new studio is located between Second and Third avenues on 124th street and covers a half block. Eugene Spitz, president and manager of the company, is authority for the statement that the new studio is one of the most modern in the East. The studio consists of two buildings, one of the studio proper and the other devoted to complete dressing rooms, shower baths, reception rooms, a carpenter shop and property rooms. Special movable arcs of high candle-power are features of the new studio.

In connection with the opening of the new plant, Mr. Spitz announces the start of a big production "which will star one of America's greatest actresses" it is said. The identity of this person has been kept secret, and will be, it is said, until the production is well under way. Work on the start of this production has been held up until the completion of this studio. Mr. Spitz states that this production is the first of a series of big ones he has planned and in which prominent stage and screen stars will be featured.

A third studio for the same company will be completed soon after the first of next year, according to Mr. Spitz. This studio, the plans of which are now being made, will be one of the largest in the East.

Artistry of H. B. Irving Extant

Triangle Distributing Only Film in Which Late Actor Appeared; Also One With Ellen Terry

WITH the passing of H. B. Irving, lovers of the drama are congratulating themselves that he allowed himself to be persuaded to appear in a screen version of the great drama both he and his father played so often upon the stage, "The Lyons' Mail." Otherwise his wonderful art would live only in memories.

"The Lyons' Mail," now being distributed by Triangle Film Corporation, is the only record of this great actor's work that will be handed down to posterity and fortunately it is a picture production of the famous melodrama in which the star took wonderful advantage of the powerful dual role he knew so well to make his first and only appearance on the screen, a splendid addition to his many stage triumphs.

The now priceless value of "The Lyons' Mail" added to the fortunate circumstance that the world-famous actress, Ellen Terry has also given the world an excellent picture-record of her art in "Her Greatest Performance," now being presented by "Triangle," adds to the anxiety of many that some of the other great stars who have so studiously held aloof from the movies — notably Maude Adams —shall register at least one of their favorite roles on the film.

New "Snub" Pollard Comedy Will be Released by Pathe Dec. 14

"Looking for Trouble" is the defiant title of the Rolin comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard, which will be released by Pathe December 14th. Pollard is supported by Eddie Boland, the "slicker"; Mildred Davis as his sweetheart, and "Sunshine Sammy," the diminutive colored actor.

The plot of the comedy evolves about a prize-fight in which "Snub" is slated to battle the champion of the neighborhood and his originality and comedy methods are reported to be uproarious.

Monopoly Endangers Exhibitor

So Asserts Lee A. Ochs Who Plans A New National Organization of Exhibitors to Combat Menace

LEE A. OCHS, who recently resigned as Vice-President of United Picture Theatres of America to organize a new company, has sounded a note of warning to theatre owners of America. Just prior to leaving New York for Los Angeles where he has been called by negotiations with several prominent stars, Mr. Ochs, according to a report from the United Picture Theatres, said he confidently believed a film trust imminent and that the wise exhibitor is he who is now building his fences against the time when monopoly will jeopardize the millions of dollars now invested in theatre property.

Mr. Ochs said that the unit cooperative buying plan on a national basis is finding favor with those successful exhibitors who are alive to their present danger and that territorial franchises in the new organization are being rapidly closed.

"I do not believe that the majority of exhibitors of America fully realize the critical situation that confronts them just now," said Mr. Ochs. "Never in the history of the industry have they faced a graver menace—a menace that threatens to force many thousands of them to the wall. This menace is monopoly.

"I have never been a calamity bawler; I am not now, for I sincerely believe that the entire picture industry was never on so profitable a basis nor was the outlook for exhibitors ever so bright if proper steps are taken by them to guard against the danger that confronts them.

"There is a way by which exhibitors can prevent that which may otherwise destroy the properties in which they have large investments. In each locality the exhibitors, by combining for the purchase of film through a national organization, can insure for themselves an adequate supply of pictures quite independent of any film trust that may be formed.

"There is nothing radical or involved about the plan I am now working out. In every locality there is a sufficient number of wide awake exhibitors with large theatre investments to protect, who will get together under my plan and purchase the negatives' right on pictures for their territory at a percentage of the entire negative cost, sub-dividing their quota among other groups until their own actual investment is relatively small. By this method the original franchise holders can in many instances sub-divide their percentage quota in such a way that they can not only obtain pictures in their theatres free but can make a profit upon the deal."

New "Big Four" Picture Ready

"When the Clouds Roll By" Starring Fairbanks will be Released Dec. 29; Has Spectacular Flood

THE filming of the second Douglas Fairbanks production to be released through the United Artists Corporation, "When the Clouds Roll By," has been completed. Hiram Abrams, of the "Big Four" has announced December 29th as the release date for the picture.

Under the personal supervision of Mr. Fairbanks the production is receiving its final inspection in the cutting department and the reports that come from the Coast relate that all the members of the Fairbanks organization are highly elated over the extraordinary results that have been accomplished, notifying their New York office, it is said that the picture is far more elaborate than anything that has ever been turned out by them.

With the presentation of "When the Clouds Roll By," the first screen drawings of Henry Clive, the celebrated American artist, known internationally through his original creations in oil of beautiful women, will be seen. Mr. Clive has been specially engaged by Mr. Fairbanks to furnish the art titles to accompany his second independently produced picture and something unique and entirely new is promised in illustrated titles.

Another added triumph for "When the Clouds Roll By" is the introduction to the screen of the destruction of a city by flood. An entire city, two miles long, was built in the foothills of the Cascade mountains, Northern California, on the top of which hills a reservoir was built, in which nearly two million gallons of water were contained until the day of the flood.

The United Artists report declares: "This is undoubtedly the most spectacular scene that has ever been done for the screen."

According to the statements received, the story of the production is filled with all the elements that make for success, for there is an abundance of action, lots of love and romance, plenty of suspense and full of the peppery material that is always to be found in a Fairbanks picture.

Allan Dwan Starts the Filming of New and Costly Feature

After many weeks of careful research work preparing the story and the designing of the many big sets which will be used Allan Dwan has started the filming of what promises to be, according to reports, one of the biggest, most powerful stories that has come to the crucible of the screen. William Allen White's novel, "In the Heart of a Fool," is the story from which the vehicle was taken, and it is said that more money was spent in preparations alone than average feature productions cost to produce.

Play Success Next Vehicle for Doris Kenyon

Because of Doris Kenyon's success in her Broadway production, "The Girl in the Limousine," the next motion picture in which she will appear under the management of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., will be "The Harvest Moon," from the famous play success of Augustus Thomas.

It had been the intention of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., to have Miss Kenyon appear in another Louis Joseph Vance story because of the success she achieved in her last picture, "The Bandbox," written by that novelist. To that end the motion-picture rights were purchased from Mr. Vance for "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" also one of his most famous novels at a price said to be the highest ever paid for a Louis Joseph Vance story.

It had been expected that Miss Kenyon would be able to leave New York to make the exteriors on "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" in Florida, about Christmas time. Her continued success in "The Girl in the Limousine," however, made it inadvisable for her to quit that cast as had been tentatively agreed upon between Theodore C. Deitrich and A. H. Woods.

"The Harvest Moon" can be filmed in and around New York.

Vitagraph Renews Larry Semon's Contract For Three Years

Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, Inc., and "Larry" Semon, the motion picture comedian, have entered into a new contract at Los Angeles which, according to the Vitagraph report, makes the actor-author-director one of the highest paid comedians in the world. According to information received at Vitagraph's General Offices, No. 1600 Broadway, from Mr. Smith, who is now in the West, Semon's new contract means the outlay of $3,600,000 by Vitagraph for Semon comedies during the next three years. This sum, it is said, includes the cost of production as well as the comedian's salary.

Mr. Semon's present contract with Vitagraph expires with the closing of the year; and under his new contract, his services are assured the producers until at least the end of 1922. As Mr. Semon averages about ten two-reel comedies a year, according to reports, the new agreement means that for the next three years each of his comedies will cost the producers, it is claimed, an average of $120,000 each.

Exhibitors Distributing Corp., Ltd., Handles Supreme Comics

Robertson-Cole announces that the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation, Limited, of Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnepeg, Calgary and Vancouver will exploit Supreme Comedies within the Dominion of Canada. After the exhibitors in the United States showed their favor for these ever laugh-producing productions, exhibitors throughout Canada followed suit and the demand was so great that Robertson-Cole concluded the contract for a Canadian agency to handle these comedies in Canada.

The Plot: Viewed as picture material this story would need quite a little emendation to make it a good picture. It is a story of the career of a very young business man — the sort of young man who is commonly found in stores and offices, with all of the faults of the egotistic half-educated and rather sporty young man who goes into business with no training for any sort of work but great expectations as to his returns. Peter is from a country town where his father runs a store and when Peter finishes the High School his father decides that before taking him into the store at home it will be best to let him learn "the ropes." in a department store in the city. He sends him to Boston with a letter of recommendation to a man named Benton who is manager of a department store there. Peter begins on five dollars a week with a remittance of ten dollars from home. He falls in with Billy Murray, a shiftless worker and one who is always finding fault with the institution. He gets acquainted with Rosie Lever, an unmoral rather than immoral young woman whose sensibilities are not even shocked at petty larceny. The white lights beckon and the next step in Peter's career is his introduction to the loan sharks and the forging of the name of a friend to a note. The friend, Philip Rogers, makes good on the note and his encouragement determines Peter to do something really worth while. Having lost his job with the store, he tries book selling for a house to house selling agency without success. then he goes into insurance and really gets a fair start but is lured away to real estate where he does not do so well. He determines, however, to open his own real estate office and does so with the assistance of Kellet, a sharper, who tries to beat him out of his commissions. Rosie has determined to marry Peter but when his family objects she takes poison and nearly dies. She then determines that Peter has too good a chance to be spoiled by a girl like herself and breaks their engagement herself. Peter now finds himself in serious difficulties with his business but Bruno Duke, a business doctor, who happens to be a friend of his helps him straighten out his affairs and finally takes him on as an assistant — though there is nothing in the story to indicate why he should do this. Marv Gillispie — a girl from the old home town of Farmdale and Peter are engaged on the strength of this appointment. This is, in effect, a dissertation on the problems confronting a young man with no particular business acquirements, told in fiction form.

The Wild Goose

By Gouverneur Morris

Character of Story: Sex story.
Theme: Married life.
Characters: Francis Manners, an architect; Diana Manners, his wife; Tam, their daughter; Ogden Fenn; Mrs. Langham, Diana's mother; Peter Manners, Francis' cousin; Mrs. Herriot, the co-respondent, May Hastings.
The Plot: Upon the birth of their child, Tam, Diana Manners informs her husband that she will never bear him another child. From this time on they begin more or less to drift apart. Manners is called away a good deal on business and Diana becomes more interested in other people than in him. Returning from a trip to California, Manners is surprised to have her come to their town apartment with a strange man in tow. This man is Ogden Fenn, a timorous and apologetic sort of man whose presence is such that Manners never dreams that he can be a possible rival. It is soon apparent, however, that something is wrong. Diana is unhappy and she refuses to devote herself as a wife to Manners. Finally she confesses to him that she is in love with Fenn. Instead of reproaching her or swearing revenge against Fenn, Manners declares that he will assist her to the man of her choice. He will permit her to get a divorce from him on the grounds of desertion. At first he has determined to commit suicide, thus leaving her a widow and a free agent, but he finds that Fenn has no money, so it will be necessary for him to continue to live and work so that Diana's alimony will take care of her. Diana agrees to all of this. She is delighted to find it so easy. Manners, thinking the matter over, changes his mind because of their daughter. Diana then rushes off to Fenn's little country house. Manners learns of it and goes with his cousin, Peter Manners, to save her reputation. He tells her that if she insists she shall have her freedom but that until she is married to Fenn, she must not live with him. She agrees. Manners declares that the only divorce which will completely save her name will be one secured in the grounds of infidelity and that lest someone declares there was a fake divorce, he will give her real cause for complaint. On the way back to town Peter Manners nearly succeeds in an attempt to kill Fenn by wrecking the automobile in which they are traveling but thinks better of it at the last moment. The divorce is accomplished and Mrs. Herriot plays the part of the co-respondent. She is really in love with Manners and indignant at Diana for the treatment she has accorded him. In a moment of anger Mrs. Herriot writes Diana some interesting and intimate details concerning Fenn which could be only known to one who had known him very well indeed. Manners learns that Diana is about to have another child. He determines to steal Tam. He goes to Fenn's house and mounts a ladder to his daughter's window. Fenn hears him and enters with a double-barreled shot-gun and shoots Manners dead. Diana's love for Fenn is killed at the same time but she determines to stick to him for the sake of Tam.

Character of Story: Story of a young girl.
Theme: Poverty.
Characters: Henrietta Kirby; Etta Kirby, her mother; Minnie Haswell, a friend; Mrs. Lovell, a society woman; Dick Bently, a young man from the East; Van Dyne Alstyne.
The Plot: Henrietta Kirby is the daughter of a hair-dresser and beauty specialist in a small town in Colorado. Her mother has formerly been a sewing woman in a New England town. Henrietta is a beautiful high-spirited girl who is distressed because she has no father — or no father of whom she knows anything. She presses her mother for information regarding her father and finally learns that when her mother was a young woman she had been called in to sew for the aunt of Henry Crosby, a young aristocrat of the New England town but totally dependent upon his aunt for his support. The two young people fell in love and Henry Crosby insisted upon marrying Etta Kirby in spite of the opposition of his aunt When the marriage took place, his aunt forbade him to come any longer to her house and cut off her support. Henry tried for a long time to find work which would enable him to support his wife but even when the child came he had not succeeded in making a connection which would pay for their living. Etta kept on working and was able to support them all after a fashion but Henry could not stand the humiliation of living upon his wife and finally disappeared with the idea of going elsewhere to make his fortune and to return with plenty of money. He finally wandered to South America where he began to make money and about the time of the opening of this story he sent a check to his wife and some presents to his daughter whom he remembered as an infant in arms. Henrietta, named for Henry and Etta, is very indignant at the treatment her father has accorded her mother and will not write to him and declares that she never wishes to have anything to do with him nor even to make any use of any money which he may send. Her mother points out, however, the fact that they are sadly in need of help and that they cannot afford to throw away any money and that, after all, the father loved them both and was, in a way, a victim of circumstances, having been brought up to believe that he was rich and that he would never want for anything. The story proper is concerned with the efforts of Henrietta's mother to secure for her the advantages which she feels the girl ought to have, but which she can hardly afford. Mrs. Lovell, a society woman and one of Mrs. Kirby's customers — Kirby being the name she assumed or resumed when her husband left her — takes a great fancy to Henrietta and volunteers to give her a thorough course in reading without charge. Henrietta, who has fed largely upon lurid romances, is delighted and Mrs. Lovell is soon struck with the resemblance of the girl to Henry Crosby — a girlhood friend. Crosby dies leaving Henrietta and her mother enough to keep them from want and to insure Henrietta's education. There is slight love interest, suggested only.

Locale: Colorado.

Picture High Lights: As a picture this story furnishes a character in Henrietta and material to build upon in the missing father and the romance of the father and mother.

The Mystery of the Red Flame
By George Barton

Character of Story: Mystery story.

Theme:

Characters: Hugh Garland, Special Agent of Treasury Department; Bromley Barnes of the Secret Service; Colonel Basil Wharton, collector of jewels; Dora Wharton, his niece; Jules Jacquette, another collector; Victor Jayne, a suitor for Dora's hand; Dr. Henderson, the Colonel's physician.

The Plot: Hugh Garland, a recently appointed special agent for the Treasury Department is assigned to the home of Colonel Basil Wharton, an amateur collector of precious stones, to watch for the Red Flame, a red diamond of great value which is supposed to have been smuggled into the United States from Brazil. This diamond had been split into two parts, one of which was preserved in the national museum in Brazil and the other belonging to a rich Brazilian. Arriving at the house, Garland finds that Jules Jacquette and Victor Jayne are there as house guests. All has been prepared for Garland and he enters the house as a sort of personal secretary to the Colonel, his chief duty being to keep track of the rare coins, books and jewels of the collection. Garland falls in love with Dora and she with him. He finds that the celebrated diamond is not among the collection proper but during a conversation when all are present Dr. Henderson gets on the subject of this stone and twits the colonel with the fact that it is supposed to be in the United States and it is not in his collection. Colonel Wharton then states that it is in his possession and takes it from a safe in the library and exhibits it. Garland reports this to Barnes by telephone. During the night Garland hears someone in the library and sees Dora take the stone from the safe. A newspaper account of the jewel states that the diamond which has come to this country is not the one belonging to the individual but the one which belongs to the Brazilian Government. When Colonel Wharton reads this he is stricken with a mild form of paralysis and is not able to tell the Doctor or Garland where he got the stone. Jacquette and Jayne accuse Garland of being a spy and he admits that he is a Treasury agent. Dora thinks that he has been making love to her merely to get information and orders him from the house. Garland hears a conversation between Jayne and Jacquette which convinces him that they are in the plot.

Helen Ferguson and Elsie McLeod, in "The Gray Brother," a new Edward A. MacManus Production

A man in a gray suit who has been hanging about the place turns out to be a dealer in gems and on investigation it is found that he had the diamond in his possession and that he has the key to a house on the edge of Washington where any amount of smuggled goods are secreted. It develops that Dora lost the stone the night she took it from the safe and it was found by a maid who buried it in the yard. Jayne meanwhile has been trying to persuade Dora to marry him, saying that this was her uncle's desire. The maid confesses to Garland and Garland hastens back to the Wharton place — which is out of town — with Barnes and other detectives. They arrive just in time to prevent the marriage. Jayne is arrested for stealing the stone, but Jacquette escapes to the house where the smuggled goods are stored and there he has a terrific battle with Garland. Garland is knocked senseless but the capture is finally made by Barnes. All ends happily.

Free Air
By Sinclair Lewis

Character of Story: Automobile romance.

Theme: Snobbery.

Characters: Claire Boltwood of Brooklyn Heights; Judge Boltwood, her father; Milt Daggett, a product of Shoenstrum, Minnesota; Jeff Saxton, a model young man; The Gilsons; Bill McGolwey, proprietor of the Old Home Lunch. "Pinky," a knight of the road.

The Plot: This is decidedly a "different" type of story, both in the nature of the action and in the motives of the leading characters. It is an outdoor story covering a large portion of the Northwest. Claire Boltwood and her father set out in their roadster to tour from Minneapolis to Seattle. This is partly for the sake of seeing the country and having such fun as may come of it and partly because Boltwood's doctor thinks that the outdoor atmosphere will do him good. As they are passing through Shoenstrum, Minnesota, the youthful owner of the garage of that village spies Claire and suddenly makes up his mind that he will make a trip to Seattle in his little Teal car which he effectionately terms "the bug." He has the good fortune to be of help in towing Claire's car out of a mudhole the first day out and thereafter keeps to the trail. Claire does not wish to encourage strange young men but there is something appealing about the young mechanic and he certainly has a vast store of knowledge about cars and how to make them behave on unmannerly roads which turn into deep sloughs of mud when one least expects it and run up the sides of mountains without warning. On several occasions Milt Daggett, for such is the young man's name, is the means of escape from some predicament and Claire finally has to admit that it is safer to have him along than to travel without him. He particularly distinguishes himself by pulling from the running board of Claire's car a ruffian who had begged a ride and then threatened to rob the Boltwoods and run away with their roadster. Milt is the product of a village where baths are weekly events and Claire is the froth on the top layer of the cream of exclusive Brooklyn society. On the road, however, one gets a different "slant" as Milt says, so that by the time they reach Yellowstone Park, Milt and Claire are quite chummy and she is encouraging him in his plan to enter the University of Washington as a student of engineering. And then, at Kalispell, who should show up but Jeff Saxton, the very model of Brooklyn propriety, official suitor for Clair'e hand and a good fellow, successful too, in spite of the fact that he is a first class snob and prig. Milt arrives with a disreputable passenger whom he has picked up on the road and does not contrast well with Jeff. Milt realizes this and proceeds to rush on ahead but is again overtaken and he and Claire enjoy one highly exciting adventure which results in the wrecking of Claire's car and the death of "Pinky" — Milt's passenger — who meets death in an attempt to steal the roadster. At Seattle Claire visits the Gilsons, who conspire with Jeff to make Milt rediculous, but Claire by now has learned that Milt has more to offer her than any of the people in her own set, and so, when the opportunity offers, they run off together in the "bug."

Picture High Lights: This story has more picture possibilities than may appear from this very brief synopsis and the action does not require an actual trip across the continent. It has the virtue of absolute novelty.

Expects "The Blindness of Youth" Will Meet Demands of Public

"The Blindness of Youth" which is about to be released by the Foundation Film Corporation, 1600 Broadway, New York, is a story that will come close to touching the heart of every motion-picture fan, it is stated. The screen version of the story is declared to be of the type every exhibitor will welcome. The theme of the "Blindness of Youth," it is said, will carry the interest of the reviewer to the end of its screening.

Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the company talked with a number of prominent exhibitors and exchange managers regarding the likes and dislikes of the theatre-going public. After a thorough investigation of the subject, Mr. Garsson said that he found that the public in general is in favor of the picture with a touch of society life and the society girl as the basis for the story. Considering their tip worthy of consideration, Mr. Garsson set out to purchase material along these lines and "The Blindness of Youth" was his final selection.

Cast of "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" Wins High Praise

Miss Bessie Barriscale's manager, J. L. Frothingham, praised highly the work of the entire cast in the production of "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," but showered special marks of approval upon the efforts of Miss Barriscale and Niles Welch, who plays opposite Miss Barriscale. His statement concludes as follows:

"In fact I might add, that the entire cast from Miss Barriscale down to the little children, Mary Jane Irving and Theo-Alice Carpenter, and their pet dog, give a performance that is sure to prove a delight to those who appreciate real acting. Each one seems to live and feel his or her part, and that is after all the most essential things."

In and Out West Coast Studios

Famous Players-Lasky

CECIL B. DEMILLE is expected back in a few days from New York where he made the final scenes for "Why Change Your Wife." This will make possible the completion of the work of editing this DeMille subject. Thomas Meighan, who went to New York with Mr. DeMille, will remain East until early in December, but his arrival will not delay production of "The Prince Chap," in which he is to be starred under the direction of William DeMille. This subject will be an Artcraft Special.

"Where Julia Rules" is to be the next vehicle for Bryant Washburn, this star having completed his work in "The Six Best Cellars." James Cruze will be the director of the new subject.

Ann Little has been selected for leading woman for Wallace Reid in "The Bear Cat." The company, this week, is back from San Francisco where the final race scenes of the picture were made. This subject will require the use of the largest auditorium in Los Angeles — that of the Shriners — where an automobile show or exposition will be staged especially for scenes in this subject. Automobiles of all makes, together with accessories of all kinds, will be used for the display.

Three hundred negroes were taken to a desert island off the coast this week to work in the Houdini picture, "Terror Island."

Adolph Zukor is back in Los Angeles after spending a few days in San Francisco and will remain at the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky for the next two weeks.

Fox Studio Notes

THE Fox studio has taken on renewed activities between picture seasons there, and now all of the producing units are actively engaged on new subjects with but one exception. Edmund Lawrence and Denison Clift, as codirectors, are making the final scenes for the Madlaine Traverse subject, "What Would You Do?" which was written by Clift. George McDaniels is playing the male lead.

Edward J. LeSaint (who says Motion Picture News never carries his name) has just begun work on a new Gladys Brockwell picture which has been titled "White Lies." While some scenes of this photoplay were taken this week, the entire cast has not been assembled.

Buck Jones is at work on the second of the new series of Fox Western pictures, and in this a new leading woman will be introduced in the person of Vivian Rich, who will be remembered as star of American releases. Miss Rich has been out of pictures for the past year or more. Charles Swickard is directing this subject, which has been titled "The Last Straw."

The Fox William Russell Company has a new leading woman who will make her first appearance in "The Lincoln Highwayman," now in production under the direction of Emmett Flynn. The leading woman is Lois Lee who, in 1917, was winner of the beauty and brains contest conducted by the Photoplay Magazine, and who has since played in several Essanay and Universal pictures. Miss Lee recently came to the Coast, and it was through the effort of the Mabel Condon exchange that she has been lifted to the position of leading woman.

Tom Mix is now working in "3 Gold Coins," written especially for this Western player. Margaret Loomis, a dancer of national reputation, who has played in many Lasky subjects, is leading woman for this company. Cliff Smith continues as director of the Mix pictures.

"Her Elephant Man," which is to be the initial starring vehicle for Shirley Mason, will have Albert Roscoe as leading man. The work of filming this was started in the past few days by Director Scott Dunlap.

Thomas H. Ince Newsettes

AFTER a rehearsal of three weeks the Douglas MacLean-Boris May Company has started work of actual shooting on their latest comedy which has been given the working title of "Playing With Fire." Lloyd Ingraham is directing the production under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, who has supplied an excellent supporting cast for the co-stars, which includes such names as Wade Boteler, who made a big hit as the Mess Sergeant in "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," Norris Joynson, Wilbur Higby, Mollie McConnell, Grace Morse and Bob Walker. Bert Cann is behind the camera.

Last week marked the completion of the Ray picture, "Watch Out, William," and in the course of the next day or two Charles Ray and his supporting company will start on their next production which is taken from the story "Homer Come Home," by Alexander Hull, and adapted to the screen by Agnes Christine Johnston. In this story Mr. Ray will play the part of a young man with broad guage ideas in a narrow guage town, and in order to accomplish his purpose he finds it necessary to leave his native village for a sojourn in the city. On his return to the village, having become sophisticated in the ways and dress of the city, he proceeds to put over his big plans and wins the heart of the village belle, much to the chagrin of the villain, but to the great advantage of his own home town.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH, since coming to Los Angeles, has consummated a new contract with Larry Semon, and the comedian this week began work on his first two-reel subject under this contract. The new document is referred to as a three million dollar contract, and is said to stipulate that Semon shall make thirty comedies in the next three years, each of which is to cost $100,000.

The new Vitagraph serial to feature Joe Ryan has been given the title of "The Black Soviet," and it is now thought the filming of this will be started within the next few days. Bert Ensminger has been selected to serve as co-director with the featured player, but leading woman and other members of the cast have not been named.

William Duncan will have Edith Johnson, it is definitely announced, as leading woman in the forthcoming features which he will put in production next week following a short vacation.

The Montgomery and Rock unit have been away from the studio all week working on scenes which require a leap of 23 feet from the top of one building to another. All the scenes for the comedy, with the exception of the most hazardous, will be filmed prior to the taking of the leap, and this scene will be made before the end of the week.

What Metro is Doing

METRO has secured the screen rights for the very popular novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Blasco Ibanez, and Director-General Maxwell Karger announces that it will be filmed as a Screen Classic.

June Mathis has been granted a vacation, and left this week to spend several weeks in New York.

Graham Pettie has been selected to play the role of a backwoods tailor in Bert Lytell's "The Right-of-Way." He has had a very wide experience on the speaking stage, and has played in pictures since 1915.

Completion of the Viola Dana Screen Classic, "The Willow Tree," is announced. This was made under the direction of Henry Otto, and contains some of the most elaborate settings, both interior and exterior, made for a photoplay at the Metro studio.

Robert Emmons, aged forty-five, an actor who has appeared in many West Coast subjects, died suddenly of heart trouble at the Metro studios November 22d. On the day of his death he had taken part in the society circus scenes for "The Walk-Offs," the forthcoming May Allison picture.

HERE AND THERE

LOUIS BURSTON announces the completion of the King Baggot film, "The Hawk's Trail," which has Rhea Mitchell and Grace Darmond as the leading women, and which was made under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke. It is very probable that a new producing unit will be formed by Burston to take up the making of five reel or larger subjects, and reports have it that Grace Darmond will be the featured player.

The Francis Ford Company is working on the seventh episode of the "Gates of Doom," principality serial in which Ella Hall plays the lead, with Mark Fenton, Elsie Van Name and Phil Ford as principals.

The Great Western Pictures Corporation, recently organized by Emmett Dalton and Dan Ryan, has completed two two-reel subjects under the direction of Francis Powers. Dalton, who will be remembered as star of "Beyond the Law," made by the Southern Feature Film Company, is taking the leading part in this series of Western films. He has Caroline Wagner and Mary Scott as his leading women, and they will alternately appear in pictures of the series. William Addison Lathrop is author of these stories.

Marshall Neilan and his company of all-star players, including Lewis Stone, Marjorie Daw, Jane Novak and Barney Sherry, are now hard at work in the northern part of Canada filming the final scenes for Mr. Neilan's first independent production, "The River's End," an adaptation of the story of the same name by James Oliver Curwood.

All the exterior scenes of the picture will be filmed in the North and Mr. Neilan estimates he will be away for two or three weeks.

Others who made the trip were William Bomb, production manager; Tom Held, assistant director; Henry Cronjager, Sam Landers, and Dave Kissen, cameramen: Foster Leonard and Bill Lenhian, assistant cameramen; Charles Smyth, Mr. Neilan's secretary; George Elder and Frank Stucky, propertymen.

Miss Mary Pickford and mother arrived from New York after attending the third hearing in the suit brought by Mrs. C. C. Wilkinning for commissions claimed to be due her for services rendered in securing an engagement for Miss Pickford with Famous Players Pictures Corporation, in which trial the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant. Miss Pickford began work immediately upon her arrival on the last scenes for "Pollyanna." About two weeks will be required for finishing the making of scenes for this, which is to be the first United Artists release.

Francis Marion, scenario writer for Miss Pickford, has been at the Coast for the past few days working on the subtitles for "Pollyanna." She was accompanied by her husband, Fred Thompson, to whom she was married on November 2d. Thompson is all around world champion athlete, having won that title at the Olympic Games in 1912. The couple were to be married in Paris more than a year ago, but the signing of the armistice changed the plans of the army, and it was impossible for them to meet until they both returned to New York recently.

There is a convention of famous authors this week at the office of Ben B. Hampton, those present being Zane Grey, Stewart Edward White, Emerson Hough and Winston Churchill, who will spend some time here in consultation with Mr. Hampton and his staff respecting forthcoming productions of this studio. Film versions of Emerson Hough and Winston Churchill novels will be started in the very near future, and inasmuch as the productions bear the signature of the authors' personal endorsements, they are giving the producer, Mr. Hampton, all the personal co-operation possible.

Archer MacMackin has been engaged as director for the Gale Henry comedies, and this week began work on a picture which has been titled, "House Hunting." The supporting players will be Billy Franey, Hap Ward, Phyllis Allen and a number of girls. MacMackin has had a wide experience in the direction of comedies, and has written senarios for many. He became identified with the industry a number of years ago with Essanay.

A new producing company has been organized by the Mitchell Lewis Corporation according to announcement by General Manager Clarence J. Williams, which will make Bradbury productions. The first of these is now in the process of filming and is known under the working title of "Hollyhocks."

Goldwyn Studio Notes

EXPANSION of production of the Goldwyn Company at Culver City this week made necessary the acquisition of additional space for buildings and settings, and a deal was closed by General Manager Abraham Lehr for the purchase of thirteen acres adjoining the studio. This gives the Goldwyn studio a frontage of half a mile on Washington Boulevard and a total area of about fifty acres. The property is now in almost a triable shape and very advantageous in every respect for studio and setting sites. It will be possible, by the use of this land, to keep street scenes standing, and these may be changed for this or that production, thus reducing production costs.

The Goldwyn Flying Corps is a new organization capitalized at several thousand dollars, which was organized this week by G. B. Manley of the production department, who was a member of the U. S. Aviation Corps in France. The stockholders are all members of the Goldwyn staff, who have subscribed the total amount of stock, and the money thus raised will be used for the purchase of airplanes, order for the first having been made. General Manager Lehr has granted the officers of the corps the use of land in the studio for aviation field, and the Goldwyn Company will build a hangar. The machines are to be used by members of the corps and rented to the studio or the public. They may thus be of service in delivering film or taking supplies or people to location.

Practically all the Goldwyn companies have been in production on their present subjects for the past four to six weeks, and all will finish at about the same time, so there is very little new in the matter of production other than has been announced in this department.

Sub-titles to Go? Not in the Opinion of Frank Woods

WILL the motion picture go through a process of evolution until the subtitles are quite needless to help tell the story? Not in the opinion of Frank E. Woods, supervising director of Paramount pictures.

There has recently been a revival of the talk about the alleged improvement of photoplays by the elision of the printed word. Mr. Woods thinks it is neither possible nor desirable. "It is true," he said, "that long or needless titles are generally the stamp of a poor quality film, but it does not follow that titles are undesirable per se.

"It rather appears to the fancy to suggest that a picture might be so well made as to eliminate the need of explanatory titles. But that deduction is wrong because titles are not explanatory; in pictures they are as much a part of the action as they are in the spoken drama. And they perform their function of enlightening the spectator quite as much as the depicted action.

"Just as in the stage plays, so in the screen plays, words are often absolutely necessary to give the key to the situation. You can picture an actor's expression or movements with great skill and still not convey what is taking place in his mind; yet it is in the mental clash that the best drama consists."

Montgomery and Rock Take Many Chances

The grave dangers that lurk in even the slightest alteration of plans for a movie thrill was forcefully illustrated last week when Montgomery & Rock Vitagraph comedy stars were making ready to film a spectacular jump from the roof of one tall building to the roof of another, slightly lower, on the opposite side of a narrow downtown street.

The width of the street, from wall to wall, at the front end of the buildings was carefully measured as twenty-two feet, and for several days the comedians practiced broad-jumping at the studio until they finally reached the point where Joe Rock was able to jump a distance of twenty-one feet and Earle Montgomery could clear a distance of little over twenty feet.

The team then calculated that with the drop of some five feet that would be encountered when the jump was made from building to building that they would be able to successfully perform the feat.

Harry Revier, directing "The Return of Tarzan" for Numa Pictures Corporation

But when they arrived on the roof of the building they discovered that a small chimney in the center of the roof at the point from which the jump was to be made prevented a run of some hundred feet that they needed to gain momentum. The cameras were then moved to focus at a spot nearer to the rear of the buildings and the stars made ready to make the jump from that point. Then someone remarked that the distance looked greater at the rear of the building than it was at the front, but this was set down as being a perspective allusion until the distance was measured and found to be nine feet wider than the best jump achieved by the comedians. The distance between the buildings at the second point was over thirty feet.

Ten Picture Stars Aid Legion's Replacement Bureau

The boys of the American Legion elected ten favorite motion picture stars to assist them at the benefit ball given Armistice Night, November 11, in the Shriners' Auditorium of Los Angeles, Cal. The proceeds are to be used for the maintenance of the war replacement bureau, one of the most effective aids for returned soldiers.

The players so honored are: Antonio Moreno, Wallace Reid, Bryant Washburn, William Russell, Tom Forman, Madge Kennedy, Betty Blythe, Enid Bennett, Gladys Brockwell and Carol Mac Comas. Each of the stars gives away one dance to a holder of a lucky number drawn with the ticket of admission.

About the Players

Roger Lytton, who recently finished his part in the Hallmark production "High Speed," says that he finds the police force efficiency about Union Square, so far as harmless and law abiding actors like himself are concerned, just 100 per cent. perfect. Mr. Lytton was returning home at 2 a.m. the other morning, shivering with cold from the after effects of having been obliged to escape innumerable times, in the chilly midnight atmosphere, from a supposedly burning house, clad in only his shirt and trousers. He was carrying a bag — a bag that he had always before imagined to be handsome enough to be quite inconspicuous — but the police, it seems, didn't find it so. In his journey of three blocks, from the subway station to his studio apartment, Mr. Lytton was stopped no less than three times by as many uniformed officials, and questioned as to the contents of that bag. And each time, no sooner had he began to explain that it contained merely a few boxes of make-up and several suits of clothes, than the careful officer of the law exclaimed in words to this effect: "Ah, sure, an' I've seen ye that oftin meself in the fillums. Sorry to bother ye, but there's many a bag like that with bombs in it these days, and we 'ave our orders, ye know."

Betty Ross Clarke, who played the feminine lead opposite William Farnum in "If I Were King," tells an amusing story of the way she secured her first part in pictures. She was intent on the wall directory of a large office building, and oblivious to everything around her, when a remarkably good looking man, whom she doesn't remember ever having seen before, touched her arm, apologized for disturbing her, and told her that if she wanted an excellent part in a big film production, he would advise her going to the Fox office at once. Not knowing whether to take him seriously or not, Miss Clarke finally decided to take a chance. No one at the Fox office could offer any clew as to the identity of the handsome stranger, but they told her that they thought they knew someone who would be glad she had come. The someone was J. Gordon Edwards, who signed her immediately for Mr. Farnum's leading woman. Fortunate is she who is a perfect type!

Mme. Olga Petrova, who has deserted the screen for a tour of 27 prominent cities in vaudeville, spent the only week's "lay-off" of her entire tour by journeying all the way from New Orleans to New York for one day — to spend Thanksgiving at her home at Great Neck, and to make a new Emerson Phonograph record of her original song "The Road to Romany" — returning Friday to Houston, Texas.

About Coast Players

When Harvey Thew, who had been writing continuity for Goldwyn "The Man in Lower 10," saw the headlines in a local paper concerning the recent Southern Pacific wreck near Los Angeles, he began to move toward General Manager Abraham Lehr's office. Fifteen minutes later, cameramen and assistants were in an automobile on the way to the wreck. Mr. Thew served as director, played in some of the scenes, and then later re-wrote the script so that the photoplay will contain the scenes of the most expensive wreck occurring in the west in recent years. Scenes were taken of the wreck of the demolished engine, the crushed cars and interiors of several of the Pullmans after all of the victims of the wreck had been removed.

Percy Hilburn is a self-made (camera) man. When motion pictures just began to be motion pictures, he was asked to do the camera work and his first-hand information came from catalogues of the manufacturers of cameras. With this meagre information, he became cameraman and laboratory man for Vitagraph and he must have made good for he remained there five years. Following this, he was engaged by Goldwyn to photograph Geraldine Farrar subjects at the time the contract was made with Miss Farrar. With the exception of photographing two subjects starring Mabel Normand, he has given practically all of his time to the making of Geraldine Farrar subjects. The most recent release, "The Flame of the Desert," is considered one of the finest examples of photography made for the screen.

Finis Fox, who wrote "Blackie's Redemption," one of the most popular Bert Lytell Metro releases, has been assigned to the work of preparing continuity for "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the O. Henry and Paul Armstrong safe-cracker story which is to serve Bert Lytell as his next vehicle.

With the engagement of Robert B. Phelan, as cameraman for Metro, bp Supt. Clifford Bultr, a heretofore unpublished chapter in the lives of three well known cameramen became known. Phelan was working with Dal Clawson, now with Lois Weber, and Dev Jennings, photographer for Goldwyn, in Death Valley, Califonia when the call of the camera first hit him. The three cameramen of today, were then surveyors, putting in their time marking off quarter sections in the then desert of California. That was in 1910 and they all made up their minds they would be cameramen and they've been working motion pictures ever since. These three men have been responsible for some of the most remarkable photography introduced on the screen and they all attribute a portion of their success to their intimate knowledge of the ability of a lens.

Anita Stewart is now in Los Angeles, at her home in Langham Park. A new studio has been erected for her next picture "The Fighting Shepherdess," which will be produced under the direction of Edward Jose. Miss Stewart, it is said, boasts of having had three of the best directors in the profession — Lois Weber, George Loane Tucker and Marshall Neilan, and declares that Mr. Jose, the Belgian director, will add a fourth name to the distinguished list.

Robert Vignola, who is under contract with the International Film Company, has arrived from the coast, and is expected to start work soon on a Cosmopolitan feature. It is probable that Mr. Vignola will direct Marion Davies at some time during his International connection.

Al Santell, the Universal comedy director, seems determined to die in action. In the filming of "Lower Four and Upper Three," the Universal comedy in which Joe Martin is starred, Mr. Santell recently tangled with the famous orang-outang and enjoyed the cracking of three ribs. A few days later he resumed his place behind the camera just in time to provide a landing field for a flying lion. The leaping jungle cat flattened Mr. Santell like unto a pancake.

Hardly had the director recovered from the injuries inflicted by the lion when he engaged in an altercation with Charles Bullephant, Universal's old pachyderm. The elephant lifted Mr. Santell so that he could whisper in his ear. Apparently not liking what he said, the beast dropped Santell, seriously injuring the pavement.

"Lower Four and Upper Three" is nearly finished — so is Al.

Thomas O'Brien has completed his contract with Frank Keenan and has been signed for a long term by Benjamin B. Hampton. He will first appear opposite Claire Adams in "The Dwelling Place of Lights," from the novel by Winston Churchill. Jack Conway will direct.

Denison Clift Directs Fox Feature

Denison Clift, Fox scenario editor, has temporarily forsaken the typewriter to direct a special feature starring Madlaine Traverse.

This is a powerful problem play entitled "What Would You Do?" The story was specially written by Clift, who also put it into scenario form.

Special effects will make this a notable feature, and in his direction Clift is developing some novel touches to emphasize the dramatic moments of the story.

George McDaniels is playing the leading male role, that of Hugh Chilson. The story starts in New York, switches to South America, and ends in New York. The production will be released on the Excel Program early in 1920.

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Y. D. A. No. 1160:

Let's publish a journal of letters from N. A. M. L. members. I, for one, would pay for a subscription.

Also, why not have "good" buttons and charge extra for them?

REPLY:

What do other members think of this plan? Y. D. A. doesn't make it clear what these letters would cover. Perhaps if he expresses himself at greater length, he would interest a large number of the 1200 members. All a scheme of this sort needs is support — both moral and financial.

Someone else suggested a better button some months ago but his letter didn't bring in any response from those who must have read it. At the present rate of labor, the buttons which are supplied members without charge, cost MOTION PICTURE NEWS several cents apiece. A really "good button" would probably cost around 35¢ to 50¢. If we hear from enough members, we will consider the possibility of having better buttons for those who desire them.

American Film Co. Puts Out an "Aero Special" Camera

THE subject of aerial photography has, during the past few years, occupied the attention of camera experts, to the extent that a number of different types of cameras have been invented in the effort to overcome the peculiar difficulties of photographing from a rapidly-moving machine flying at varying elevations. The majority of these cameras used to-day with any degree of success, however, are extremely cumbersome affairs with metal boxes, heavy to handle and highly complicated in their mechanical construction.

Simplicity itself, this contrivance is the result of many months' experimenting by the photographic department of the company's studios in Santa Barbara. The camera was designed and perfected by E. P. Moore, chief still photographer, was manufactured entirely in the studio shops, and already has a remarkable collection of exceptionally fine "still" photographs to its credit.

Being less than seven pounds in weight, the camera is readily handled from any position. As shown in the photograph, the box is so shaped as to offer a minimum surface to wind-resistance—a most important factor when traveling at high speed, as a high wind pressure will completely demolish the usual type of camera bellows.

The camera makes an 8 x 10 negative, and is so built that standard plate-holders from the ordinary still cameras may be used without requiring change or adjustment. A Turner-Reich Anastigmat F:6:8 lens is used in an adjustable focusing ring attachment, in such a manner that the focus can be regulated to correspond with the altameter readings for various elevations.

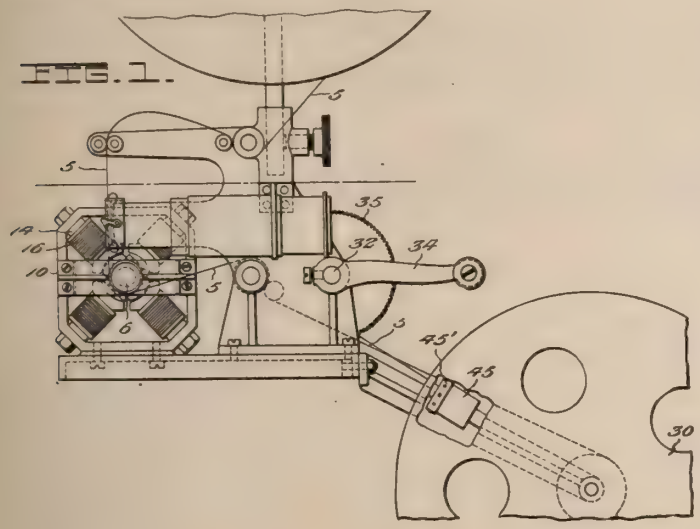
When King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium visited Santa Barbara recently, His Majesty displayed enthusiastic interest in the ingenious device which was to take aero photographs of Santa Barbara as souvenirs of his flight over the city in the Loughead seaplane. With characteristic thoroughness, he requested the inventor, Mr. Moore, to explain its mechanism in detail. In the accompanying photograph, taken just before the flight, the king is shown learning how to operate the camera.

A Few Notes on Condensers by a Man Who Knows

Excerpts from the Transactions of the Soc. Motion Picture Engineers

By Dr. Hermann Kellner

ON account of spherical aberration in the ordinary condenser, the rays coming from the source and passing through its marginal zone, intersect the optical axis nearer the aperture plate and under a much greater angle than the rays passing through the center of the condenser. If the diameter of the lens is not large enough, it happens that some of the rays coming through the marginal zone of the condenser are not intercepted by the lens and, therefore, lost for the illumination on the screen. This is illustrated in the first figure.



Such loss may be avoided in two ways:

1st. By making the aperture of the lens large enough to collect those rays or by keeping the aperture the same as before and bringing the rear combination of the lens so close to the aperture plate that the lens intercepts the rays otherwise lost, in other words by reducing the working distance.

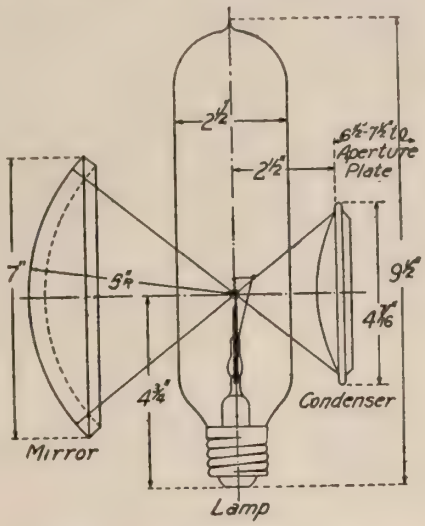
2d. By reducing the spherical aberration of the condenser so that the rays coming through the margin of the condenser pass through the lens.

The first remedy is not very inviting to the lens computer, nor to the lens maker. The greater the aperture of the lens in proportion to its equivalent focal length, the more difficult it is to correct the aberration and the more difficult it is to produce the lens, and also the more sensitive such lens is to small variations in the adjustment of the machine.

A lens with shorter working distance can be constructed by adding a third combination. This has the disadvantage of additional loss of light by reflection and absorption in the added member, amounting to 10%, which will have to be subtracted from the amount gained by the shorter working distance.

The working distance may also be shortened in a two-combination projection lens by increasing the distance between the combinations. This, however, has also difficulties of its own.

It seems to me more logical to leave the projection lens alone and remedy the evil by using a condenser that sends through the projection objective all the light which it collects from the source. For this purpose we must reduce the spherical aberration of the condenser to such an extent that the rays coming through the margin of the condenser intersect the optical axis near enough to the objective to be intercepted by the latter and thus contribute to the illumination on the screen. This is illustrated by the dotted lines in Fig. 2. The full lines show the path of the rays through the central and marginal zone of fully-corrected condenser.



30 Ampere Motion Picture Lamp, Corrugated Condenser and Spherical Mirror in Correct Operating Positions

I have here a model of a projection apparatus which shows very nicely the condition under discussion. These are interchangeable condenser systems, consisting of the same number of lenses and having the same equivalent focus and aperture. One of these condensers is spherically corrected and produces a small distinct image of the source, while the non-corrected one shows at the same distance a diffused image of the source surrounded by a broad circular halo. The outer zone of this halo which falls outside of the circumference of the projection lens is of course lost.

It is evident that with the spherically corrected condenser a lens of very much smaller diameter would be sufficient to give the same illumination on the screen as the large lens in combination with a non-corrected condenser.

I must confess that I cannot quite reconcile the figures of the loss given by Mr. Richardson and Mr. Burrows with an experience I had several years ago.

A short working distance lens was submitted to me * * *. It was claimed that this lens showed an increase of illumination of about 100 per cent. on the screen. A comparison between this lens and a lens of the ordinary type was made in the following way.

In the booth of one of the theatres of Rochester two machines of the same make and type were placed side by side and run under as nearly as possible the same conditions using the same size carbons, keeping the current the same, etc. The fields projected by the lenses in competition could be compared side by side on the screen. Under similar conditions the new lens was supposed to show 100 per cent. superiority in the illumination. The originator of the short working distance lens, himself, adjusted the machines, as well as for another comparison, the operator of the theatre and afterward a third impartial person. It goes without saying that the objectives also were changed from one machine to another. The judges sat in the orchestra too far away from the booth to know what was going on in the booth. The result was that no one could definitely tell which lens was illuminating the one field or the other. There were slight differences in the illumination but they were caused evidently by accidental conditions and did not at all depend upon the lenses.

The biggest theatre organ in the world is in the biggest theatre in the world

It is an Estey Organ

THE CAPITOL THEATRE wanted the finest pipe organ that could be made.

It is an Estey.

You know that good pictures attract people to your theatre this week. Good music brings them back there—every week.

You can always have good music if you have an Estey Organ. You will be independent of labor troubles, for in many theatres the Estey Organ does the work of an entire orchestra; and it has no union hours, for it is always there.

Your Estey Organ will be built to fit your theatre, just as this splendid organ was built to fit the Capitol Theatre. The cost of your organ will depend upon its size and the way it is built in—and it will not cost you as much as you think.

Hear an Estey Pipe Organ at any of the studios listed below, or write the home office. We will send an expert to talk with you, wherever you are, whenever you say.

HAVE you thought how much a residence organ in your home will add to its atmosphere of culture? It need cost but little more than a first-class motor car.

HOW LONG?

How long would these Stars continue to earn their Enormous Salaries each year without the "endorsement" of the public?

How long would they be the pride of the continent without the "consent" of the people?

How long would the motion picture industry show progress without the favor of the masses?

How long would your theatre be kept open without the support of your patrons?

Figure your business out in any way you choose: It's the public you're catering to. The patrons who are responsible for your profits—your very "movie-business" existence.

NOW THEN:

How long will you continue to let your patrons poke, kick and strangle one another in the dark aisles of your theatre when there is an "Aislelite" to be had?

How long will you proceed to let the side lights of your theatre be a constant strain on your patrons' eyes, and detract from the clearness of the screen picture, when the use of "Aislelite" would enable you to dispense with side lights, overhead lights and flashlights?

How long will you let your patrons risk life, limb and liberty in pursuit of a seat when makes the pathway clear and distinct

How long will you continue to hold your patronage IF you allow your competitors to install the "Aislelite" before you do?

More Dope on Shutters and Exposures

I NOTICED on page 2843 of your worthy paper where Chas. Geis, of Chicago, Ill., asks questions regarding degrees of shutter opening and its corresponding speed at normal turning of the camera crank and at 1 to 1

Does Mr. Geis in saying 1 to 1 mean one turn of the camera crank per second, as you interpreted it? Or does he mean one turn per picture, sometimes called "stop motion"?

If in the latter instance your figures should read:

180	degrees opening	1/4	second exposure
90	degrees opening	1/8	second exposure
45	degrees opening	1/16	second exposure
22.5	degrees opening	1/32	second exposure
11.25	degrees opening	1/64	second exposure
5.5	degrees opening approximately	1/128	second exposure

The above is figured for turning camera crank at normal speed of two turns per second, but on the "stop motion" or "1 to 1" shaft, instead of on the normal or 8 to 1 shaft.

If a motion picture camera man were working on a scene, turning normal, with a 90 degree shutter opening and a given stop or aperture of say f16., to get the identical exposure for trick "stop motion" he would change his crank to the 1 to 1 shaft, close his shutter down to 11.25 leave his stop or f. number the same, and crank normal speed of two turns per second. The resultant exposures would be identical, as they are both 1/64 of a second exposure.

The writer has been a photographer for the past fifteen years, and a motion picture photographer, making photoplays,—industrials,—weeklies, etc., for the past eight years, and the picture making section of the Equipment Department of the Motion Picture News is always of interest to me.

If there are any questions which might be in the minds of camera readers of the Picture Making Section which pertain to either still or motion picture photography, is tricks, development, printing, tinting, toning or camera accessories, cameras, etc., I would be glad to answer them, either thru' your worthy paper or direct by mail.

None of us are too old to learn. I believe in helping the other fellow, if he wants to know and if it will help him make better pictures, and better pictures in the theatres means bigger and better business for you, for me and for everybody concerned.

Yours, J. WILLIAM HAZELTON.

VENARD USES A UNIVERSAL MOTION PICTURE CAMERA

IN ALL FIELDS and phases of motion picture photography, the Universal Camera has proven its worth and utility—particularly in that most important field, the making of industrial film. Industrial film must be made under varying conditions and many difficulties.

The Venard Photographic Company makes a specialty of this type of work. Its operators use an aeroplane to fly to location and take bird's eye views of industrial plants which they are filming. They use Universal Cameras exclusively so they are sure of getting perfect film any time and all the time.

If you are considering the purchase of a motion picture camera, by all means get full information and catalog of the Universal before making any purchase. We will be glad to send them to you upon request.

Gentlemen:

While you have not asked for this letter, I feel that it is really due you owing to the wonderful performance that has been shown by our Universal Cameras. I can not speak too highly of this camera for general purposes. We have used it for field work of all kinds and have never had any trouble whatsoever with the mechanism of the machines.

One of our machines has been used considerably for over two years without having been overhauled or had any repairs whatever. It has had the hardest kind of use. Our work is almost exclusively confined to the tractor, truck and farm implement industry. This work takes us into some of the very hardest places to work but we always come out with a perfect film when we use the Universal.

Personally, I have used this machine in the making of considerable air-plane film and find that its sturdy construction and dependability is especially well adapted to this sort of work.

We have, in fact had such good success with our air-plane photography that we are now putting in our own plane for this class of work and can assure you that there will be no other but Universal Cameras used.

You have my permission to publish this letter if you see fit and to refer any prospective buyers to me. Thanking you and wishing you every success, I am

Most truly yours,
C. L. Venard Pres.

Does Your Lobby Reflect the Quality of Your Show?

By Preston W. Grounds, Mgr. Display Dept., Consolidated Portrait & Frame Co.

YOU have, no doubt, seen the modern skyscraper in the course of construction.

There is a great similarity between the growth of this modern skyscraper and the mushroom-like growth of the Moving Picture Industry. For instance, you will note upon observation that as the building is erected no attempt is made as to details of construction. All hands are concentrated on the framework — the steel structure on which the building depends for support.

The last ten years has seen the steelwork of the Moving Picture Industry firmly established. Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor have all contributed. Now, the ground work laid, they look around ready to fill in; ready to tack on the trimmings; ready to add those details which will lift Motion Picture work out of the commercial class and place it with the Arts.

The Producer has done his share. He has made masterpieces of his films. He has beautified them with art titles — has designed appropriate paper to accompany them. The Distributor, following the example set by the Producer has extended the spirit of co-operation to the Exhibitor, has given him the opportunities to avail himself of all the Producer's efforts.

But has the Exhibitor taken advantage of these things?

With all the beautiful literature that accompanies the modern release, the 11 x 14's, 22 x 28's, one sheets and three sheets, in nine cases out of ten you will find that he has neglected one of the best advertising mediums he could ask for — the lobby of his theater. Experience has proven that it is here impressions are formed; here decisions are made to see productions scheduled for future showings; should not, then, the lobby reflect the high standards of the theater?

Wherever the lobby is woefully neglected the fault is directly traceable to ignorance of display principles on the Exhibitor's part. Of course like everything else there are exceptions but in most instances this holds true. A new Exhibitor just opening his showhouse has no way of knowing the elements entering into successful Lobby Display and therefore cannot obtain the proper results.

Personal observations on the subject have shown that there are but three basic principles functioning in good display; good display must be neat, must be systematized and must be artistic. Combine these three points in your lobby furnishings and you are assured of success.

Bearing out the first point, let me cite a case which recently came to my attention. A showhouse on the north side of Chicago notified us that they were desirous of bettering their lobby display and asked that we send a representative. Imagine our salesman's surprise when, upon entering the lobby he found $100,000 production literature sloppily tacked on rough pine boards rested against the walls. This was their "lobby display" and yet the Exhibitor wondered why features which had proven so successful for others did not even fill his house. Is this proper co-operation with the Producer who is spending good money and lots of it to present artistic, serviceable, money-getting paper? The best paper in the world would have been of no avail in a case like this.

But neatness alone is not sufficient; the successful lobby must be systematized as well. Do you think large mail order houses could make any kind of progress if they did not employ the most up-to-date system; if everything was not indexed so they could lay their hands on an article without a minute's hesitation? The same reasoning holds true in the lobby. In this advanced stage of the game every house has its own true band of followers. They must unconsciously know where to look for to-morrow's attraction. They must know that Tuesday's showing will always appear in the frame on the west wall; that Wednesday's showing will appear in the frame next to it; and that features coming later will always be displayed cut in front. They must not have to search the lobby for they will not; rather, habit must tell them where to look for their information.

Then, too, the whole scheme of the display must be pleasing to the eye. If the lobby is large and roomy let your frames be massive; let them be in keeping with the style of the place. In all events they must be artistic and not of the "pine board variety" that our friend thought were all right, for unconsciously the playgoer says to himself, "well, the pictures don't look good—guess I won't see that." Artistic frames make the pictures look better, and the better the pictures look, the more liable the patron is to come back.

Along this same line I might mention an idea used by one exhibitor which shows how psychology can be applied to lobby display. He said, "Many times I have stood in the lobby of the theater and watched my patrons coming out. Do you know that at least fifty per cent of them (especially is this true of the ladies) would make straightway to the mirror which hangs along the exitway. I guess it is only human nature to do this but at any rate it gave me an idea. Here was the best advertising space in the house going to waste. I immediately installed a combination mirror and frame so that every time my vaner patrons gaze on their tear stained countenances they will be confronted with to-morrow's attraction. The idea has worked wonderfully well." Here was the case of an Exhibitor capitalizing a happy inspiration.

Does the Lobby Reflect Quality?

Another craft Exhibitor uses this scheme. With every frame in his lobby he displays one hand drawn 11 x 14 card in one of the spaces. By hand drawn I do not mean the ordinary hand lettered announcement card; on the contrary I mean an artistic, minature poster, cleverly executed in this daring and extremely modern poster art style and vividly painted in bright colors with lots of purple, yellow, etc. Perhaps it is a character sketch of the "Star" who is to appear; perhaps it is some scene from the play, at any rate it is an attention-getter — it draws people to the frame where they can't help seeing the rest of the literature and the impression is formed. After all the function of any display is to impress; this accomplished, you are bound to get results. By co-operating with the local artist and having him turn out something unusual, something unique in character, any Exhibitor can make the above plan pay.

Keep your eyes open for innovations in display. Remember that sloppy, poorly arranged lobbies are not conducive to success. You can't afford to take any chances with your lobby for it is the heart of your showhouse. Correct Display Equipment ultimately means less vacant chairs at each performance. In the words of one large national advertiser, "Eventually" you will realize this —"why not now?"

How to Set Excelite

C. M., No. 1,181:

Please give me information on how to set and adjust the Mazda lamp in a Powers' Excelite equipment?

ANSWER:

The setting of an incandescent bulb is simple but important. In fact, the whole success of the equipment depends on the care and accuracy of adjustment.

First, screw in the bulb and light it. Set it approximately in its operating position. The illustration shows the correct setting for a 900-watt Mazda. This figure does not show the shape of the filament, which is in a single plane. The plane of the filament should be parallel to the condenser.

By means of the adjusting handles the finer adjustments can be made so as to place the image of the filaments in the correct position on the aperture plate. That is, the circle of light should be distributed so that the rectangle of the aperture comes exactly in the center of the "spot." With this filament centered, the next move is to adjust it back and forth to find its correct position with regard to the condenser.

Turn the mirror so that it does not reflect an image into the condenser. Then turn the revolving shutter until a blade comes in front of the objective. An image of the filament will appear on the blade. Now move the whole lamp backward or forward until this images is sharpest.

Now swing the mirror into position. Move it back and forth until the reflected image on the aperture is the same size as the projected image. Then move the mirror sideways to make the reflected image on the shutter blade take a position between the projected image. That is, the reflected images of the coils will fall between the direct images of the coils. By being careful of this adjustment you will not be troubled by a streaky screen.

Once these settings are made, they should be permanent, as the variations usually encountered in arc operation are not present when using intelligently the incandescent lamp.

The Complete Plan Book

"The Hawk's Trail"

(Fifteen episode Louis Burston Serial featuring King Baggott, Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell.—Handled by W. H. Productions.)

THERE is good ground for belief that Louis Burston has caught his stride in standard serial production. The reviewer sat through the first four episodes of "The Hawk's Trail" and was entertained in spite of the fact that personally he does not care for serials, but realizes that a fast-growing clientele is demanding the thrills and mystery generally furnished by this type of cinema entertainment.

In the first place there is one redeeming feature in particular that should be commended. There are no weird hands or skulls roving about in an attempt to provoke shudders. It is just a straight plot showing that a crook with hypnotic power has secured the rich estate of two girls by posing as the brother of their dead father.

One girl is confined in the basement of an old house guarded by a hardened aged woman. The other sister is still living in the big house occupied by the elderly crook who spares her temporarily because his son is in love with her. The son does not appear to know that his father is a scoundrel.

A criminologist interests himself in the girls and it is a constant battle between this man and the big crook with his group of lesser lights.

There is plenty of fast action, scenes in Chinatown's underground, fights, auto races and all that go to provide thrills. The romance is injected by the love affair of the crook's son and one of the girls who is being defrauded.

King Baggott is the active criminologist and Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell are the sisters. George Seigmann, Fred Windemere, Harry Lorain, Stanton Heck and Leo White have strong roles which they also fill acceptably.

Nan Blair wrote the story and if the succeeding action keeps the pace set by the first four episodes this serial can be counted upon to highly entertain any serial audience anywhere.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Berth Of a Nation"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon Comedy Fox Half Reel)

NOTHING seems too big for these extraordinary comics to tackle and now its "Berth of a Nation."

Starting in as baggagemen, Bud Fisher's two imaginative chaps, Mutt and Jeff, very cleverly carry grips and trunks by the simple process of Mutt loading all the stuff upon Jeff, and after greasing the little fellow's soles, gracefully kicks him and the caravan slides across the station and into the baggage car.

Then they apparently become brakemen. The continuity is not very clear as to just how they obtained this sudden promotion, unless the Government has adopted a new rule anent the operation of railroads.

Madam the Snake Queen loses one of her snakes and the rest of the passengers in this Pullman try to lose this same snake, but it hoops itself, and the result is a merry chase over the top of the train. Every time the train passes through a tunnel, Mutt climbs up the little stepladder to kiss the pretty ingenue.

And then the two leading men, in trying to escape from the snake manage to keep up the pace set by a Bolshevist and get credit for capturing him. This entitles them to the reward offered—$5,000,—which will undoubtedly keep these spendthrifts in high-priced milk and eggs for a week until their next production is completed.

A very nonsensical but generally satisfactory filler for most any theatre.—TOM HAMLIN.

Mary Pickford in a tense moment from "Heart O' the Hills" her latest First National release.

"Musical Soup"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon Comedy-Half-Reel-Fox)

HERE we are favored with a title that a live exhibitor can make a lot of noise about. In fact, it speaks for itself. Our exploitation suggestion would be to have a number of signs printed, to be displayed in the various restaurants, worded as follows: "No Musical Soup Here—Apply at the ——— Theatre."

The histrionic abilities of these two performers are too well known for further comment and their finesse and delicacy in handling such a hot subject reflects great credit upon their ancestors.

Here they are restaurant proprietors with soup to serve, and augmented by a hose they deliver the goods. This is just as ridiculously funny as most of the Mutt and Jeff offerings, and where these stars are favorites will certainly captivate the patrons and will also generally satisfy the capitalists, burgeoise and proletariat who are at present unacquainted with these two figures of fancy.

Since June 30th these subjects have proved a very acceptable "filler."—TOM HAMLIN.

"His Last False Step"

(A two-reel Mack Sennett-Paramount Comedy)

THIS one is a very acceptable two-reel comedy and fully up to the Sennett standard. Ford Sterling and a bunch of Sennett funmakers get in a sort of mixup, in which the old badger game is promoted.

The picture is well mounted and is full of rapid action without so much of the "trick" photography to distract. All the exciting events culminate when Ford Sterling falls over into the bathtub and finds that all this excitement which seriously threatened to disrupt his happy home was but a dream.

It was a wild dream while it lasted and will certainly afford great amusement to the spectators.—TOM HAMLIN.

"THE HEART OF A GYPSY"

(HALLMARK)

Obvious Story of a Romany Romance

WHEN the gypsy formula is introduced in a screen story you can make up your mind that one of two romantic patterns will be incorporated—either the heroine will be presented as a gypsy from birth or that she will become one during the progress of the story. In Frank Hall's presentation of Charles Miller's production, "The Heart of a Gypsy," the latter course is followed. Gypsy blood courses through her veins, although she is unaware of it until she learns from her grandmother's lips that her father married a Romany lass.

The story does not develop any issue away from its central idea further than a melodramatic bit that is obviously forced. The heroine is happy with her gypsy lover after mourning her husband for two years. But like Enoch Arden he turns up and unlike Enoch Arden he does not look in the window and go away. The author makes him out a traitor so that his wife may denounce him. When he is murdered she is tried for the crime because of a threat that she would kill him. A last minute confession from an eye-witness saves her and it is all over.

This courtroom scene is like dozens of others visualized on the screen. It drags out its uninteresting action without a ripple of suspense. The story is a frail romance at best, although it has a pleasing quality about it. The scenes where the husband is introduced seem to have been conceived for no other purpose than to provide a sustaining note of drama. And there is nothing finished about the conception nor the execution of them. Another weakness is found in the belated development of the action which is due to the "planting" of the characters. Many of these could be dispensed with and there would be a closer arrangement of sequences. The picture is well staged and capably played by Florence Billings and an adequate cast. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

CATCH LINES

Suppose you had mourned your husband for two years and decided to find happiness in love again. And your husband came back. What would you do? See how it is answered in "The Heart of a Gypsy."

A story of gypsy life — a story of love and adventure and intrigue — a story of strong situations and climaxes — that is "The Heart of a Gypsy." See it.

She was a gypsy by nature and when the nomadic tribes pitched their tents near her home she joined them. What came of her adventure? See "The Heart of a Gypsy."

PROGRAM READER

A situation of the utmost force forms the crux of the action of "The Heart of a Gypsy," the feature that will be presented here on ————. A murder has been committed. A young wife has been accused of killing her husband. The evidence is overwhelming that she is guilty since she was overheard to say that she would kill him. Then when the future looked black for her something happened to clear her life of its shadow. What was it? Was it evidence — did some one know that she is innocent? You must find out for yourself when "The Heart of a Gypsy" is presented here in the near future. It is a romantic play — a dramatic play — a play of adventure and intrigue. The solution of the story will not be given here, for it is carried through with such force and skill on the screen that it wouldn't do to spoil it all before hand. Florence Billings has the leading role and a capable cast supports her.

SUGGESTIONS

You can feature this is as a Hallmark picture and bring out the value of the title. Play it up in appropriate catch lines. You can make mention of the plot and the central situation which forms the crux of the action. Don't give away the story in detail — elaborate on it to the extent that it is a colorful tale of gypsy life and that it is exceptionally rich in romance and adventure. Feature the players. Most of them are well known to your fan patronage. The title looks like the best angle for exploitation. Inasmuch as gypsies are a fascinating people you can feature the angle which will bring the patrons into the theatre. Tell them that they will see a faithful presentation of gypsy life. Play up the director. He is one of the best in the business.

"HEART O' THE HILLS"

Mary Pickford Has Dramatic Role Here

"HEART O' THE HILLS" is without question the most entertaining subject that Mary Pickford has ever had. However dramatic "Stella Maris" may have been, however, sweet and wholesome "Daddy Long-Legs" may have been these pictures are surely eclipsed in entertaining qualities by "Heart O' the Hills," an adaptation of the story by John Fox, Jr. The element that will strike the spectator most deeply of all is its rich characterization and the opportunity it affords the star to show a versatility that has heretofore been hidden because of the public's desire to see her as a dainty ingenue.

So a new Mary Pickford is presented here — a Mary Pickford who displays a genuine talent for emotional expression. You will see the old Mary Pickford too. She has ample opportunity to display her delightful mannerisms, her quaint humor and her charming personality. The role of the little mountain girl who avenges her "Pap's" death who is wonderfully happy in her mountain fastness with her youthful lover, Jason who leaves the hills to get an education and returns to them, who becomes a Night Rider and other characters, is one that is fascinating in every particular.

It is a story of contrasts too. and humor is admirably commingled with pathos throughout. The background of the hills "up thar" embellishes the story not a little. And Director Franklin has taken advantage of the highlights by emphasizing them for their full value. His "shindig" in grandpap's hut, his unique courtroom scene when the jury announces collectively that it is guilty, and other details are well conceived and executed. In the star's capable company is Harold Goodwin who as the youthful lover, gives a performance that stands out like a cameo. He is the uncouth, honest, mountain lad to the life.—Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Mary Pickford, the universal favorite, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her newest photoplay, "Heart O' the Hills," an adaptation of the story by John Fox, Jr. This is considered one of the most interesting contributions to American fiction, it being written by one of our most celebrated authors. The role which the star assumes could not be more adaptable if it was written with her in mind. She portrays the tempestuous feudist girl of the Blue Ridge mountains with remarkable depth and feeling and manages to extract a great deal of humor from the characterization. You will see a new Mary Pickford here — a Mary Pickford who depicts many varied roles. She avenges the death of her "Pap," becomes a Night Rider, a school girl, a society girl, and other characters.

As Mavis Hawn she takes the role of a girl whose father has been killed in a feud and whose mother is on the verge of re-marrying. Oddly, Mavis is in love with the son of the widower who is courting her mother, both Mavis and Jason Honeycutt take separate trails in their search for education. The mountain boy chafes under the cruel treatment of his father and he is unrelentingly jealous of the attention which Mavis pays to one of the city aristocrats who visits in the mountains. The sweethearts fire a double shot that ends Honeycutt's life, when they find that he is responsible for the murder of Mavis's father.

The latter part of the story details feudists battles and land stealing and presents Mavis on trial for her life. The picture is full of humor and pathos and offers a beautiful romance, And it is dramatic to the core. The star is supported by an exceptionally clever group of plyers. Sydney Franklin directed the feature.

PROGRAM READER

The ———— theatre will offer for next ———— Mary Pickford in "Heart O' the Hills," an adaptation of the story by John Fox, Jr. Our patrons are doubtless familiar with this beautiful tale of the Blue Ridge mountains. They will probably remember the youthful romance of the mountain children, of how Mavis and Jason plighted their troth in the golden days of childhood, how they separated to gain an education, how they returned to their hills to continue their love. The story is an ideal vehicle for Mary Pickford. There is a similarity in her role and the memorable Tess of "Tess of the d'Urbervilles." The picture is full of humor that will bring laughs to all, pathos that will bring tears to the eyes, and tense drama that will grip you with its action and suspense. It is a picture which the management highly recommends. It will send you away glad that you went to see it. A great picture, a great author, a great star.

"LOST MONEY"
(FOX)

This Photoplay Will Undoubtedly Satisfy

MADLAINE TRAVERSE comes to us this time in a role that does not portray a woman with a dark secret in her early life and there are no Lords and Dukes in the cast. This time she is the pampered daughter of a wealthy Londoner, and journeys with her father to his South African bungalow. Unknown to her he had lost nearly all his wealth on the London exchange.

When a wealthy youth of husky physique and a rather effeminate countenance leaves his holdings in care of her father while he goes into the desert and jungle to save some friends from the savages the father uses some of the funds and when the youth returns the father finds that the young man has lost his duplicate copy of the deed of trust and refuses to return the property.

This is fairly well directed and the continuity maintains an easy rhythm. Miss Traverse contributes a very creditable performance but some of the others overact in many of the situations. A photoplay that will undoubtedly satisfy those that appreciate this sort of a story.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, average puller and generally pleasing; Workers, good puller and fairly pleasing. — Length, 5 reels— Released, December 7.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Madaline Traverse is presented by William Fox in her latest screen attraction, "Lost Money," at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

She is the London belle who takes part in a cave-man courtship in South Africa and this emotional actress is said to have one of the best roles in a long time.

Her father was almost impoverished on the London exchange but she did not know it. She agrees to accompany him to his South African bungalow for a time and it is here that her romance begins.

Their neighbor was the youthful diamond mine operator and very wealthy. When the young man determined to go into the jungle and desert to rescue some of his friends who were besieged by savages he places his holdings in trust with her father.

During the youth's absence the old man uses a portion of this money to tide him over his own difficulties. When the young mine owner returns and the old man discovers that the youth had lost his copy of the deed of trust he refuses to turn over any of the property.

The youth was all shaken over this and determined that the old man should be made to suffer. And also his haughty daughter. So he kidnaps the girl and brings her into the desert. The efforts of the searchers were useless and it was a long time before they finally discovered the couple and persuaded her to return home to her father.

But this is not the end of the romance. It is merely an anti-climax. The William Fox people do not care to divulge too much of the story as it would spoil the entertaining value of the picture for the patrons who will see it later on the screen.

This is described as the story of money lost but hearts found and has a thrilling situation when the house is attacked by Kaffirs who are afterwards routed by the soldiers.

PROGRAM READER

She was the pampered daughter of a wealthy father.

But she did not know that he had suddenly lost his wealth and therefore the girl acted as haughty as ever.

When this London belle was taken to South Africa she received the surprise of her life. She was abducted by a regular cave-man.

It was then that she learned to wash dishes for the first time.

And it was then that she learned what true love is.

Madlaine Traverse is the star in the William Fox picture coming to this theatre next week.

It is entitled "Lost Money" and is a story of money lost and hearts found.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture quickly acknowledge that you have a very good title for catch line etc., and will act accordingly. But don't neglect using the name of the producer and the star as they both have a certain pulling power that should not be ignored. William Fox presents Madlaine Traverse in "Lost Monday." One good line for throw-aways, stickers, etc., is; — "You will find lost money at the ——— theatre December ———. Don't capitalize the title or use quotation marks around it and you will attract more attention to the announcement.

CATCH LINES

A lost soul can be saved but it is hard to find lost money unless you attend the ——— theatre.

One London belle is kidnapped by a cave-man in South Africa and then learns to love him.

"THE POINTING FINGER"
(UNIVERSAL)

May Please the MacLaren Admirers

WITH the star in a typical Mary MacLaren role this one may fairly well please her admirers but will never cause a stampede at the box office window. It is not up to her former offerings and is so ridiculously illogical that it quite fails to hold attention.

The continuity is broken and the chance for a really big scene is lost when the girl reveals her real identity to the youth.

She so quickly blossoms from a life-long kitchen slave to a budding society debutante that it becomes utterly impossible for an audience to treat this seriously unless the patrons are very unsophisticated. Miss MacLaren, David Butler, Johnnie Cook and Carl Stockdale do very nicely in their respective roles and the picture is clean and inoffensive and may no doubt prove pleasantly entertaining to all except the blase.

The girl is the oldest child at the orphanage and runs away, carrying a new gown, and later, when acting as assistant to an entomologist, she learns that when she left the orphange the safe had been looted of $10,000, and that she was blamed for it. The son of the "bug" professor helps prove her innocence and marries her.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, average puller and not generally pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing; Workers, average puller and generally pleasing.— Length, 5 reels.— Released, December 1.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Mary Mac Laren in her latest Universal picture, "The Pointing Finger," will be shown at the ——— theatre for —— days, beginning —

Mary, the oldest orphan in a small town orphanage, finally determines to strike out for herself, and takes a gown belonging to the matron. When she arrives in a big city she finds it difficult to obtain work.

An old professor who advertises for an assistant refuses to employ her because she is too pretty. It is then that the great idea comes and she trades the attractive outfit for an old suit and puts on black rimmed glasses. This time the professor hires her, little thinking that she was the same girl he had formerly refused to engage.

When Mary escaped from the orphanage it seems that the safe was robbed and ten thousand dollars stolen. The matron believes naturally that Mary stole the money and a wide search is made for her.

The professor's youthful son finds Mary without her disguise as she was combing her hair one day and falls in love with her. He asks her why she is masquerading in such a severe makeup. She then tells him of her escape from the orphanage, but of course does not know that she is suspected of stealing the ten thousand dollars.

It is when the orphanage solicitor visited the professor in search of funds that Mary learns for the first time that the safe had been robbed. And the solicitor recognized her but did not denounce her. For it develops that he knew something of where the money had gone.

When he is discovered by Mary in the act of robbing the professor's safe after a successful bazaar for charity he tells the professor's son that Mary was robbing his safe and that she was also the girl that escaped with the money from the orphanage.

But the old professor had been concealed nearby and heard the conversation the rogue had with Mary before the son arrived, and the solicitor was the one arrested and Mary is freed of suspicion and ready to marry the son.

PROGRAM READER

This girl was an orphan and the oldest girl in the orphanage. All the drudgery fell to her and she suddenly tired of it.

When the delivery man brought a striking gown for the matron, the girl determined to steal the dress and journey to the nearby big city. She wanted to strike out for herself. She would return the money for the dress later on.

But the night she escaped, the safe of this same orphanage was robbed of the big fund just raised, ten thousand dollars.

And the girl was blamed for it although she did not know it. And a strenuous search by the police failed to discover the girl. It is her drama that is unfolded in the Universal picture coming to this theatre next week.

Mary Mac Laren is the star and a happy ending to this girl's drama is brought about in a happy manner.

SUGGESTIONS

Tell them after you have booked the picture that Mary Mac Laren, the star in "Shoes," "Bread," and other Universal successes is now portraying the orphan in her latest screen drama, "The Pointing Finger." A special matinee can be held by inviting all the children in the nearest Orphan's Home to be your guests. This should procure you all the favorable publicity needed outside your regular advertising.

"BROTHERS DIVIDED"
(PATHE)

Should Highly Entertain Keenan Followers

FRANK KEENAN in a dual role is very effective in both characterizations, and, as this is a well produced photoplay of the regulation Keenan type, it should highly entertain his following and prove very satisfactory entertainment for about every class of audience.

Two brothers of very opposite characters are portrayed. One is the crabbed and religious brother who is hard of heart and the other is the black sheep in early life, but possessed of a good heart.

After the younger brother is pardoned in middle life because of his heroic action during the prison fire he visits the older brother who is proprietor of a large mill and when the selfish one suffers a stroke of partial paralysis the younger brother takes charge of the mill and makes everybody happy by declaring occasional vacations and providing amusements for the employes.

And the dividends in money are shown to be greater than under the other brother's regime. The son who fled because his father was an ex-convict finally comes homes and marries the girl he loves. A finer sense of social justice is the good thought unfolded in this picture. It is well mounted and has clear continuity and a very good cast.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are about as follows: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Workers, good puller and generally pleasing.— Length, 5 reels.— Released, December 7.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Frank Keenan in his own production of "Brothers Divided" is announced for a —— days' showing at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

The star appears in a dual role and the photoplay is described as a drama of American homes advocating civic betterment and personal happiness and portrays a good thought that is timely in showing a finer sense of social justice.

Tom and Matthew King are brothers of strikingly opposite characters and Tom, the adventurous one, falls into bad company and is sentenced to prison for life, leaving his baby boy in charge of his brother Matthew.

When he proves himself a hero at the prison fire he is pardoned in middle life by the Governor and returns to his home. Matthew is a crabbed fellow who believes in getting the maximum of labor out of his employes and he suffers a stroke of partial paralysis when Tom returns.

Tom then takes charge of the mills and by providing occasional vacations for the employes and encouraging sports as a pastime, he still manages to realize a bigger money dividend than the mills enjoyed under the regime of his brother.

Max is the grown son of Tom and leaves the city when he discovers that his father, whom he was led to believe had died, was a returned convict. The youth could not face his sweetheart and felt too humiliated. But when Tom takes charge of the mills he gathered the employes together and frankly confessed that he was an exconvict and his plan proved a safe and sane one.

The youth finally decides to return and when he finds that his father is so honored and respected he begs his pardon and then visits his sweetheart whom he finds happy to meet him again. And old Matthew finally acknowledges that fair tactics are always the best for the great human family.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this one you should not fail to mention that Frank Keenan who scored so heavily in "The World Aflame" is both the director and star in this picture and that he appears in a dual role. From then on you should mention the good thought brought out through the picture by using material from the catch lines, program reader and press notice story on this page.

CATCH LINES

One brother declared that one hour of justice was worth a year of prayers.

Where one brother was an ex-convict the other was a wealthy mill owner and it was the first that commanded the respect of the community.

With one brother "steady" and the other brother "unsteady" the latter one with the finer sense of justice won acclaim.

"A FUGITIVE FROM MATRIMONY"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Warner Scores in Humorous Characterization

H. B. WARNER has gotten away from his Oriental characterization for the time being and picture patrons should take notice that he is as capable in a light comedy role as when he is interpreting serious expressions. The star has in Fred Myton's story, "A Fugitive from Matrimony," a subject similar to his memorable "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in that it affords him an opportunity to evade the law. He is only a pseudo-crook, a character he assumes because it offers him a certain zest in a life that is otherwise quite drab. And he wants to avoid matrimony.

The development of the tale is familiar enough for it presents the old established formula of a young millionaire attempting to evade the clutching hands of dowager mothers who have marriageable daughters to offer. But its obviousness never intrudes here for a single instant. It is well covered up through the employment of sure-fire incidents. From the moment that the hero exchanges his clothes with an escaped convict and climbs in the bedroom window of a marriageable daughter's home in order to escape the pursuing guards the interest is carried forward with plenty of humor and suspense. She will reform him (a familiar stroke too) and the climax reveals him deep in the throes of love.

The picture carries spontaneous action which is quite zippy considering its single-track idea. If Mr. Warner does not want to tire his following with Oriental stoics then allow him to take a humorous journey occasionally attired in a convict's clothes. Seena Owen appears opposite. Henry King's direction is praiseworthy.— Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

H. B. Warner, whose screen efforts have mostly been confined to tales of the desert comes to the ———— theatre beginning ————, in his latest Jesse D. Hampton production, "A fugitive from Matrimony," which is a subject of comedy foundations. In characterization it is not unlike his memorable stage success, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in that it offers him opportunity to evade the law disguised as a convict. As Stephen Van Courtlandt, he is a member of the most ultra exclusive set in America. A traveler for many years it is his ambition to keep moving so as to avoid the tangles of matrimony. Adjoining his estate is the newlyrich Riggs family, the doting mother of the household desiring to catch him as a husband for her daughter.

Steve returns unexpectedly to find an escaped convict prowling about his property. He willingly exchanges his clothing with him after listening to a hard luck story, and the criminal, in gratitude, tells him to look him up at Mother Kelly's in the fifth ward if he ever needs help. Steve to avoid the searchers climbs in Barbara Riggs' bedroom window. She does not know his identity, but still she is attracted to him because of the feminine impulse to reform him. And she eventually learns his identity. So in running away from matrimony he actually stepped into it.

This is a bright and interesting picture—a picture punctuated with plenty of dramatic situations in addition to its humorous scenes. Mr. Warner gives a finished performance of the pseudo convict and his support includes Seena Owen, Adele Farrington, Walter Perry and others.

CATCH LINES

He traveled the wide world over to avoid matrimony. And when he came home he exchanged places with an escaped convict. It was more fun in dodging the law than doting mothers with marriageable daughters. Did he escape from matrimony?

"Who are you and what do you want?" she asked, when she found this stranger in her bedroom. He wore a convict's clothes, so she decided to reform him. What happened? See "A Fugitive from Matrimony."

In running away from marriage he stepped right into it. How? See H. B. Warner in the delightful comedy-drama, "A Fugitive from Matrimony."

PROGRAM READER

Stephen Van Courtlandt was the most eligible man in New York society. Dowager mothers looked upon him with anxious eyes, appreciating the fact that he would be an admirable "catch" for their daughters. There was Mrs. Riggs for instance. This member of the nouveau riche had been moved on an adjoining estate so as to be near him. But Stephen never looked her way. He traveled in Europe most of the time to avoid matrimony. When he returned he stepped right into it without knowing it and he married into the Riggs family too. In running away from the law he landed straight at the altar. How this is done may be seen next ———— when H. B. Warner comes to this theatre in "A Fugitive from Matrimony". It is a picture of rich situations that build both dramatically and humorously. A treat is in store for you.

"THE BLACK GATE"

(VITAGRAPH)

Characterization Robs Story of Truth

"THE BLACK GATE," Earle Williams' newest expression, is a sort of visualization of "Who Killed Cock Robin?" insofar as the chief character is concerned. He is constantly at cross purposes with himself whether to acknowledge his guilt or innocence. Our hero will stand trial for murder on the premise that he will inherit a princely sum from the real murderer's mother when he passes through the black gate on his way to the death chair. This money is to go to his brother in payment for a debt. The man is resolved to die until he discovers that the girl for whom the crime was committed still loves him. Then he wants to break his contract.

No sooner has he made a resolution to live than he expresses a desire to die after all. The wealthy woman, in an admirable spirit of trustfulness, surrenders the fortune before the trial begins, and the hero offers no defense. When the fatal day approaches he offers evidence that he is innocent. So he gains his liberty and his love. And the real murderer is punished after all. No sympathy can be extended the hero, nor any admiration for his inexplicable conduct. He has gotten the money under false pretenses.

The inconsistent characterization may fortify the story with an element of mystery (perhaps that is the note that was striven for), but it robs it of the beacon light of truth. It is a story of gray lights and shadows with not a ray of penetrating sunshine. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest production entitled "The Black Gate." This picture presents him with opportunities for heroic sacrifice in that he offers to assume the guilt of a murderer so that his brother may come into his rightful inheritance. As Shaler Spencer, a lawyer, Mr. Williams, squanders his brother's money and in oder to cancel the debt, he makes a bargain with the real murderer's mother. She is to turn over to his estate a goodly fortune when he passes through the black gate, or the little green door, as the entrance to the death chamber is sometimes called.

Wade DeForrest committed the crime through jealousy of Bowen, a theatrical manager. She was formerly Spencer's sweetheat, but they had separated over a quarrel. At the trial Shaler offers no defense and the evidence is given that he actually fired the fatal bullet. But life looks sweet to him after a sojourn in jail, and he tells the authorities that he couldn't have committed the crime inasmuch as his bullets were steel-jacketed while the fatal bullet was a lead one. So the evidence comes forth that two bullets were fired instead of one. Shaler's bullet is found imbedded in the wall and so he is given his liberty. The brother has the money since the wealthy woman had fulfilled her contract before Shaler was taken to prison.

This is a decided novelty and it offers the star a role in which he takes full advantage. It carries a quota of action and suspense and mystery. The cast includes Ruth Clifford, Harry Springler, Park Shaw, Brinsley Shaw and others. Hilliard Booth directed the feature from a story by Lucien Hubbard.

CATCH LINES

How to obtain the money that he squandered. His brother's wealth. That was the question that perplexed Shaler Spencer. How he found a way forms one of the most novel and dramatic ideas ever seen in a screen play. See "The Black Gate."

He would assume the part of a murderer. Why? So that his brother might come into his rightful inheritance. What happened? See Earle Williams in "The Black Gate."

He was found guilty of murder and soon he would walk through the black gate that leads to the electric chair. What saved him? See Earle Williams in "The Black Gate." A gripping picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a mystery melodrama so it would be advisable to shroud the story with mystery. Don't by any means give away the plot. You can decide best if you want to take advantage of the title and what it means. If you are not afraid of jarring your patrons you can make your exploitations very vivid. You can touch upon the black gate through which no one ever returns. We would not give this a lobby display since it might keep patrons away from the theatre. It would be very easy to get a chair and have an electrician make replica of the one in the death chamber, but it appears as if such a plan would be too realistic. But you can decide what best to do if you know your audience. We would advertise it as a clever mystery melodrama, a melodrama that is decidedly unique of plot. And feature the star and his players. Bring out that it presents a compelling romance.

"THE A.B.C. OF LOVE"

(ACME–PERRET–PATHE)

Delicate Story Brutalized by the Scissors

"THE A. B. C. of Love" gets down to the A. B. C.'s of screen construction, it being modeled after the old Cinderella pattern and presenting an arrangement of scenes which are equally old-fasioned. The story while it unfolds a pretty romance is not only impossible but improbable. It might have appeared more logical had the direction not been so hap-hazardly executed. On second thought the old-fashioned development would not have hampered the story had there been some attention paid to the cutting process.

The picture presents an appearance of having been taken in several thousand feet with the responsibility resting upon the shoulders of the cutter. While there is some sequence of scenes yet the film offers evidence of being trimmed of whole chapters. So much so that the movement of the characters is at times extremely puzzling. And terse subtitles are not sufficient in building up the continuity. There are no subtleties in the direction. The result is it presents a choppy story that loses its high lights. An orphaned country girl marries her hero who is fascinated by her charm and youthful exuberance despite the fact that she is illiterate.

The conflict, crudely introduced, presents him tiring of her when he realizes her lack of an education. The butterfly, who would win him, shows herself eventually as a salamander of the worst type, so he goes back to his wife a sadder and wiser man Happy this time too, for during his absence from the hearth she has learned her A. B. C.'s. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The A. B. C. of Love" is a dramatic romance of a little wildflower of the country and a man of the world and it will be presented at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ——— with Mae Murray as the star. This is an Leonce Perret production of a story by the director himself and it offers Miss Murray many opportunities to display her charm as well as her histrionic capability. It can safely be said that never has the star appeared in such a dramatic role as she has here. As Kate, an orphan, who is just blossoming into womanhood, it is Miss Murray's privilege to sound the depths of youthful expression.

Kate is discovered by Harry Bryant, a playwright, and taken to a wayside Inn. He gives her his address and the priest of the parish, escorts her to Harry's home, for he had found her a runaway. She was unable to stand the cruelties of the innkeepers longer. So the man and the girl fall in love with each other, her charm and youthful exuberance more than counterbalancing her lack of education. After they are married Harry realizes that his wife's inability to read or write is not conductive to happiness, so he finds solace with a former sweetheart, Diana Nelson. When he learns eventually that this woman is only using him to make an impression in the world he picks up the threads of his broken romance and renews his old time happiness.

Be it said that during his perigrinations away from his fireside the little wife has gained an education. And by arousing his jealousy through playing his game she keeps his interest. This is a picture which is unusually rich in romance and yet it carries enough drama to balance it nicely. Its note of heart interest is appealing. The picture is artistically produced.

CATCH LINES

She could neither read nor write, but she possessed an individual charm, and so he married her. Did the romance burn out? See Mae Murray in "The A. B. C. of Love."

She didn't know her A. B. C's. But she knew the A. B. C's of love. She could keep a man interested despite her lack of education. Until — See Mae Murray in "The A. B. C. of Love."

See "The A. B. C. of Love" with Mae Murray. A delightful story of youth and love and sunshine. Yes and shadows too. A dramatic romance artistically produced and delightfully played.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a catchy title to work upon in the exploitation of this picture. You can feature it in the manner of Children's blocks for your newspaper spreads with the A. B. C. printed on the blocks. You can ask questions if the patrons know the A. B. C's of love. Feature it as a delightful romance of an innocent girl who lacked a knowledge of the familiar A. B. C's but knew enough about the A. B. C's of love. And what she didn't know her husband taught her. You can feature this picture along attractive lines with teasers, throw-aways, door-knob hangers, etc. Pathe will supply you with attractive stills for newspaper layouts. Use them.. Feature the star and the director. Feature Miss Murray as the "maid of many moods," who finds it difficult to learn her A. B. C's but who learns the A. B. C's of love very easily. Bring out the picture's ingredients. Tell that it is a piquant, dramatic romance of youth and love.

TOURNEUR

IT has an astonishing power to grip you, this fascinating Conrad tale of romance,—a power that Tourneur has fully realized.

It is like no other picture of the year. It has an appeal that only few really great pictures can claim. In fact, as the reviewers said:

"It is marvellous what a picture this book has made. The scenes are wonders of photography." "It achieves the atmosphere Conrad creates. A thoroughly well knit-story full of life and action." "The production is on a lavish scale. An original and interesting picture, picturesque in detail, a refreshing change from the conventional in nearly all respects." "Decidedly distinctive and unique offering."

You can afford to talk loud about "Victory." It is one of the great pictures of the year.

EDWARD GODAL, Managing Director
LONDON, ENGLAND

NOTE:—Mr. Godal, during his visit here, is making his headquarters at the Hotel Astor, where all communications will reach him.

DON'T TOUCH THE SAFETY VALVE!

Independent theatres and independent producers must keep their freedom to prevent a blow-up — AND THEY WILL KEEP THEIR FREEDOM.

If you fool with the safety valve on a boiler, you're in for a blow-up.

The film industry has its safety valves, too, and they mustn't be meddled with.

To exist as an industry we've got to give the public better pictures.

Independent theatres, buying on the open market, will compel the production of quality films.

That is our safety valve.

Distributor control of theatres chokes this safety valve, for the distributor can and will force any kind of footage into the houses that are signed up tight.

But the public wants good pictures and will pay for them.

Independent producers are now making the best product of their careers, and these pictures ARE GOING TO BE SHOWN to the public. Maybe in your theatre, or your opposition or the town hall, or the School house, or a barn or a tent—BUT THEY ARE GOING TO BE SHOWN!

And then—the blow-up!

If your house is not free of distributor control or dictation, the blow-up will hit you. You can't run your house successfully without good pictures, and the distributor who insists on controlling your theatre is simply keeping good pictures off your screen.

When the blow-up comes—and it will come—your long-term contract will be poor consolation for your darkened theatre while you see the independents showing your former patrons the pictures you couldn't show them in your house.

Don't sell—Don't sign—keep the safety valve working!

Hiram Abrams.

Real Art Endures—

Art is not a matter of opinion. It is a matter of popular selection.

D. W. Griffith's "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" is a more powerful attraction today than when it was first shown last Spring, because people speak of it, they see it again and again, and those who have not yet had the opportunity, are looking for it. They feel that it is one film that they must not miss.

That is why "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" is a more compelling box-office feature for you now than ever before.

Its name above your theatre entrance means big business and prestige for your house.

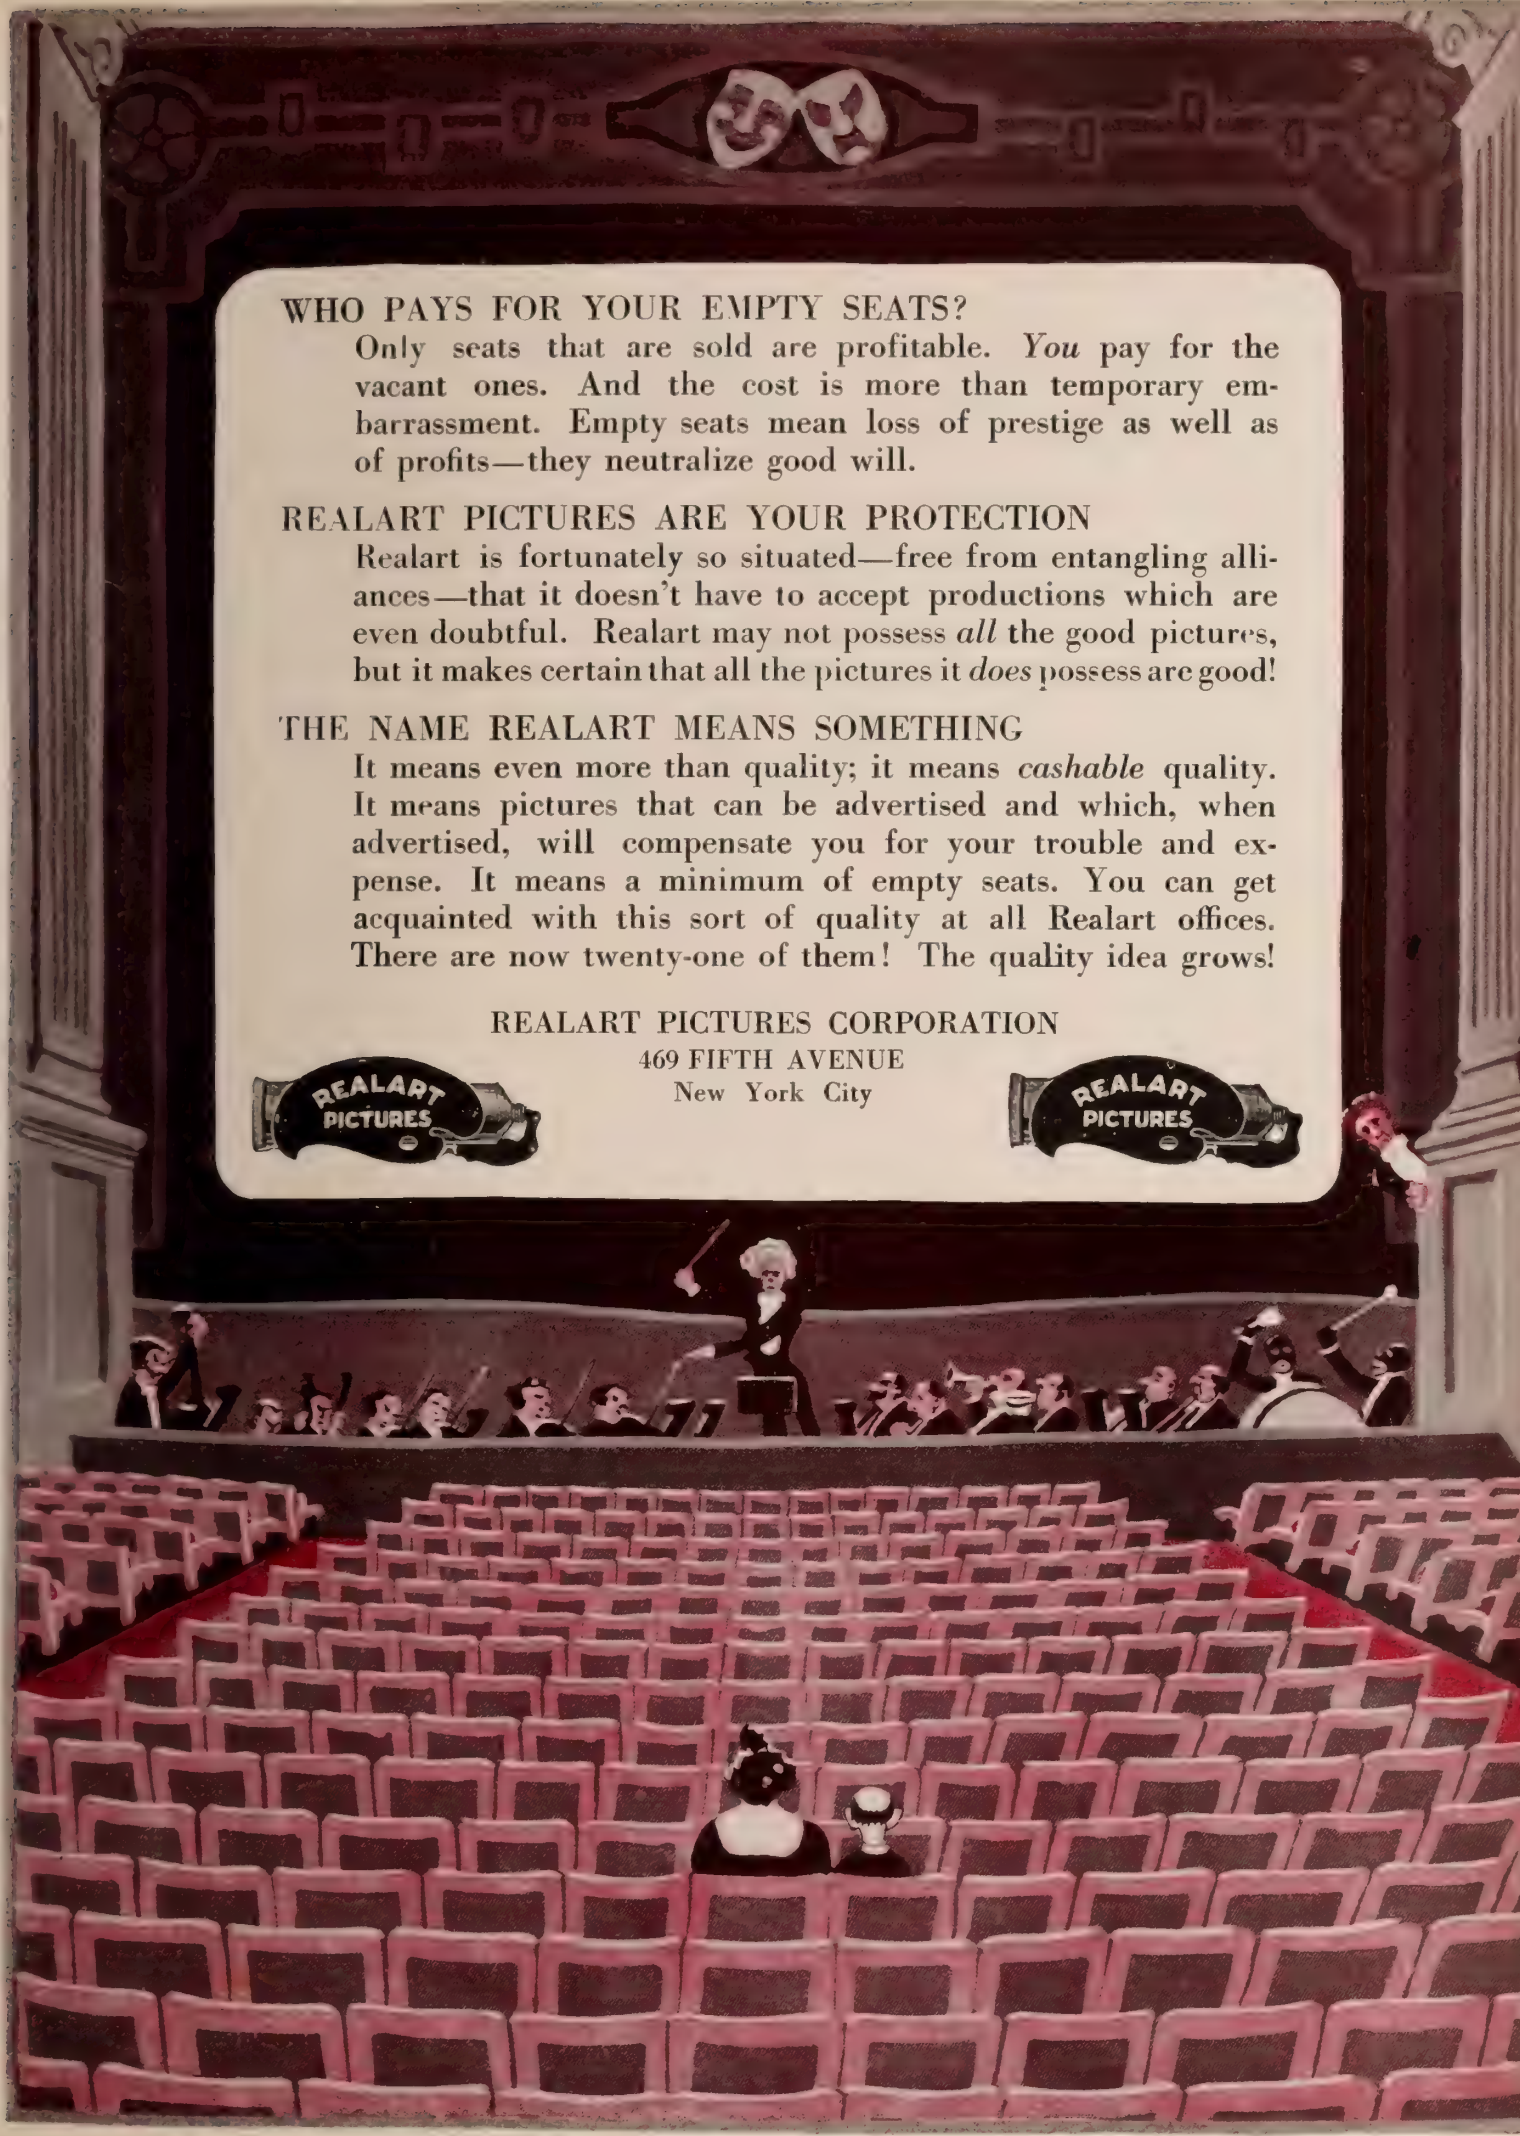
A SURE-FIRE BOX-OFFICE WINNER!



WHO PAYS FOR YOUR EMPTY SEATS?
Only seats that are sold are profitable. You pay for the vacant ones. And the cost is more than temporary embarrassment. Empty seats mean loss of prestige as well as of profits—they neutralize good will.
REALART PICTURES ARE YOUR PROTECTION
Realart is fortunately so situated—free from entangling alliances—that it doesn't have to accept productions which are even doubtful. Realart may not possess all the good pictures, but it makes certain that all the pictures it does possess are good!
THE NAME REALART MEANS SOMETHING
It means even more than quality; it means cashable quality. It means pictures that can be advertised and which, when advertised, will compensate you for your trouble and expense. It means a minimum of empty seats. You can get acquainted with this sort of quality at all Realart offices. There are now twenty-one of them! The quality idea grows!

Wanted: Directors who wish to establish themselves as producers, with the financial and other assistance of

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is exclusively a Distributing organization with the longest and sanest experience in the motion picture business. We desire to develop additional who can demonstrate thru past performances that he can turn out pictures comparable to the early efforts of other new producing units operating thru the Hodkinson organization, namely:

Hodkinson Producers:	Initial Pictures:
GREAT AUTHORS	"The Westerners"
J. PARKER READ Jr.	"Sahara"
ZANE GREY PICTURES	"Desert Gold"
ARTCO-AUGUSTUS THOMAS	"As A Man Thinks"
DEITRICH-BECK	"The Bandbox"
ROBERT BRUNTON	J. Warren Kerrigan Pictures

W. W. Hodkinson is the only executive in this industry who has continuously from the beginning stood for

Quality From Any Sources and Particularly From New Sources

He devised the first selective machinery built for this purpose. The above-listed product from new concerns and the additional product that this announcement should bring forth will prove that today he controls—

The most effective machine for selecting and encouraging worthy producing units.

We solicit inquiries from the best talent in the business and will treat them in strict confidence while negotiations are pending.

W.W. HODKINSON CORPORATION
527 Fifth Avenue, New York City
Distributing through PATHE Exchange, Incorporated

Wanted: Exhibitors

to read the opposite page and then question—if they can—the claim of W. W. Hodkinson that he alone has built an organization designed to select pictures for National Distribution in the same manner that the exhibitor would book them for his own theatre.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will not commit itself to inferior product in the present market any more than the exhibitor will.

It is well known to the exhibitors of the nation that each and every picture released by our organization is classified and graded and offered at prices in keeping with its worth and value to the retail exhibitor-buyers of the industry. In other words, we pick the pictures we distribute with as great care and thought as you pick the pictures you book for your theatre.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has in the past and will in the future discourage poor product and encourage new and worthy producers.

A highly capitalized Producer-controlled organization cannot encourage good product from new producers without destroying the market for its own inferior pictures.

Read these pages again. Debate and discuss their contents. And remember: Until you are able to recognize the peculiar fitness of the Hodkinson machine for helping you, it will not serve its real and fullest purpose and that, until then, it must necessarily deal with you on a competitive basis, the same as other Producer-Distributors do.

When you recognize that we are different and can help you solve your problems we stand ready to explain our position and come to your aid.

PROTECTION

Any man who builds a theatre and then fails to insure it against fire is criminally careless. And the same goes for any man who builds up a business in that theatre and fails to protect that business against forces far more ruinous than fire.

National Picture Theatres, Inc., offers every exhibitor the chance to protect his business and to make it grow —make it grow not only in volume but in the proportion of profit.

National Picture Theatres, Inc., is, in a sense, a form of business insurance in which the insured makes money by being insured.

As an exhibitor who has a business, the least you can do toward protecting that business is to investigate.

The REX BEACH PICTURES

Why is Rex Beach called the screen's most successful writer? First, because his stories have the pile-driving thud of realism. Rex Beach, like Jack London, lived his tales before he wrote them.

Second, because his pictures are enriched by his own absorbing personality. Rex Beach is right there -- "on the lot" -- during the filming, and the picture invariably catches the authentic smack of the man, from first-hand contact.

Every Rex Beach Picture is a money-magnet. You know that as well as we do, and that's why you'll book "The Silver Horde" and back it to a finish!

Come, let us reason together

THERE are few business problems which cannot be straightened out if the two interested parties will sit down and reason together. Your problem, as an exhibitor of motion pictures, is to secure attractions that will not only bring in money to your house, but which will by their quality, by their interest, by their suspense and genuine entertainment value satisfy each patron to the end that attendance upon your theatre will become a fixed habit.

In this manner your playhouse becomes a community centre where people naturally turn to find amusement.

As soon as your house has established its character and is fully identified as the place where real enjoyment is sure to be found, your next step is to maintain that standard so that your success may be continuous, your profits large and your reputation of the best.

During the present season I have caused to be released four great motion picture specials, which absolutely guarantee success, prestige and satisfaction to every exhibitor of motion pictures. Beginning with CHECKERS, which has brought a tidal wave of prosperity to theatres everywhere, and which continues as one of the greatest successes of the year, I presented Theda Bara in KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN, EVANGELINE with Miriam Cooper in the title role, and then SHOULD A HUSBAND FORGIVE? a 1920 Cinemelodrama reaching into the hearts of all the world.

Many exhibitors have already profited by booking these pictures for long runs, and then advertising them and exploiting them with that enthusiasm and industry which turn successes into triumphs.

I desire, therefore, that such exhibitors as have not as yet played these attractions should reason together with me by means of this frank talk. Entertainments like these, conceived in showmanship, matured with rare dramatic skill, enacted with brilliance and scened in beauty, are born to success.

It is my desire that exhibitors everywhere shall share generously in the great profits which these entertainments are bringing in. My business reason for this is that as Fox Entertainments make money for the theatre, the exhibitor conducting that theatre becomes a business friend. If he can link himself to these productions I know by experience with them that his rewards will be so great he will feel he cannot afford to miss any of the productions which have my personal guarantee as a showman.

It is not enough, however, for any motion picture special, no matter how great its value, to merely book the picture, but the exhibitor must give to it that industry and enthusiasm in exploitation which I already have mentioned.

I speak as a showman to showmen, and I invite you to a share in the financial rewards and house prestige which will be yours when you play CHECKERS, KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN, SHOULD A HUSBAND FORGIVE? and EVANGELINE.

EXPLOITATION

Off to a Running Start

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, you have booked "THE BELOVED CHEATER," because it was one of the snappiest, peppiest comedy dramas you have seen in a long time. You knew it was going to make your patrons sit up and take notice or you wouldn't have booked it in the first place.

Are you going to sit back in your seat and let a really good chance slip by?

Or are you going to do what hundreds of live exhibitors are doing—play "The Beloved Cheater" to the limit—please all your old patrons and create hundreds of new friends.

No good picture ever played to the limit of its drawing-power—even though the house showing it played to standing room only every day of its run.

So don't be afraid of spending a few extra dollars on exploiting a picture which will warrant the exploitation.

Remember—holding a crowd in front of your house—even if they can't get in—is worth money to you some other day.

Advance Teaser Campaign

Start your advance work at least two weeks before you open with the picture. It is well to plan this campaign so that one feature will follow on the heels of another. In this way you will reap the cumulative effects of your work. Open the campaign by placing in all available locations strips bearing the following inscription printed in red:

KEEP YOUR EYES ON YOUR SWEETHEARTS!

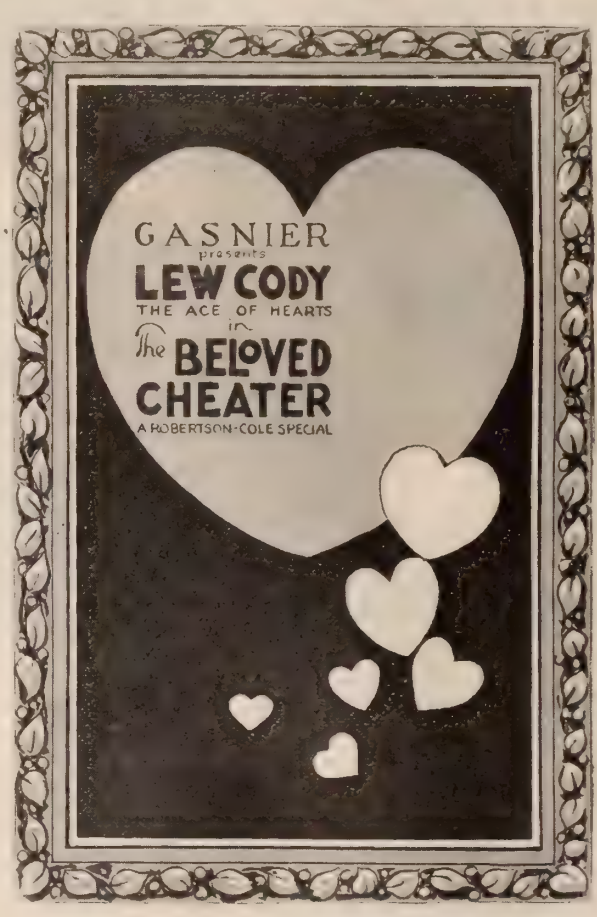
Allow these strips to remain until they awaken curiosity then place a similar strip immediately beneath it bearing these words:

THE BELOVED CHEATER IS COMING!

Hold up the placing of your regular paper until these strips have obtained their greatest effect, then bill thoroughly. It might be well to mention in connection with a teaser campaign that you can book through the Robertson-Cole Exchanges, a trailer showing scenes from "THE BELOVED CHEATER" title in such a manner as to prove a highly effective appeal to your patrons. You should use the trailer at least a week before your opening and follow this with the regular announcement slide.

Don't forget to use the beautiful two-color heralds which have been prepared for your use in exploiting "THE BELOVED CHEATER."

While these heralds were primarily designed for distribution in you theatre previous to your showing, they may also be used in direct advertising upon the street. Engage a pretty girl—she will get more results than another—let her conduct a personal campaign for "THE BELOVED CHEATER."



Let your artist follow this design for lobby posters

Advantageous Hook-Ups

"THE BELOVED CHEATER" naturally lends itself to unlimited possibilities in the way of tie-ups with various stores in your city. Gilbert & Friedland, Inc., music publishers have published a song, "THAT BELOVED CHEATER OF MINE," which gives every assurance of being one of the hits of the year.

Arrange with the various music stores to give a special window display before and during the run of the picture at your theatre featuring this song. If your dealer is a live wire, he will have a singer at the theatre.

Novelty and toy shops are open to suggestions for a tie-up with "THE BELOVED CHEATER." In this connection a display of Kewpie and other dolls can be featured with large and small hearts bearing the inscription:

Soda fountains near the theatre are always ready for ideas which will help their business. Remember that any tie-up you make must be advantageous for the store as well as for yourself. In the case of the soda fountains, they expect to do business with your patrons as they come and go from your house. With "THE BELOVED CHEATER" here is a title than can be featured as the name of a Sundae and the fountain may be decorated with Kewpies and hearts bearing the same legend as above.

Personality in Advertising

Always believe in what you are advertising. You cannot expect to impress others unless you yourself are impressed. You have booked "THE BELOVED CHEATER" because you were impressed that it would make money for you. You therefore must plan all your advertising with the idea that your patrons will be impressed with the fact that they will enjoy the picture.

You can enthuse personally about the picture and enthuse others but it is physically impossible for you to see every one of your patrons and tell them about what you are going to show next week or tomorrow. Let the newspapers or the other mediums be your personal messenger and try to put that enthusiasm in your copy. The advertisements that are shown in this book carry that message as far as it is possible for a distributor to go—you must put the personal element in your advertising.

Get a personal angle to your advertising and watch your business keep growing.

"THE BELOVED CHEATER" IS A REAL PICTURE—HOW MUCH YOU MAKE WITH IT DEPENDS UPON YOURSELF

POSSIBILITIES

Never make the mistake of believing that you can exploit a picture to the limit—crowd your house—and then present your picture in the same way that your patrons are accustomed to see with the regular run of program pictures.

It doesn't take much effort on your part to make an event of any presentation.

In the first place consider your decorations. The effect of any presentation begins the moment your patrons step into the theatre. So with this in mind place large Kewpie dolls festooned with paper hearts, together with large vases of roses near your entrance. The same style of decoration can be carried throughout the house.

If you have girl ushers, let them wear white aprons with red silk hearts stitched in one corner.

Now comes the important question of music. On another page in this book you will find a musical setting, compiled by one of the best known artists in the country especially for "THE BELOVED CHEATER." It will pay you to augment your usual orchestra for this occasion and make a feature of your music.

As an added feature, obtain a singer and present the latest song hit, "THAT BELOVED CHEATER OF MINE."

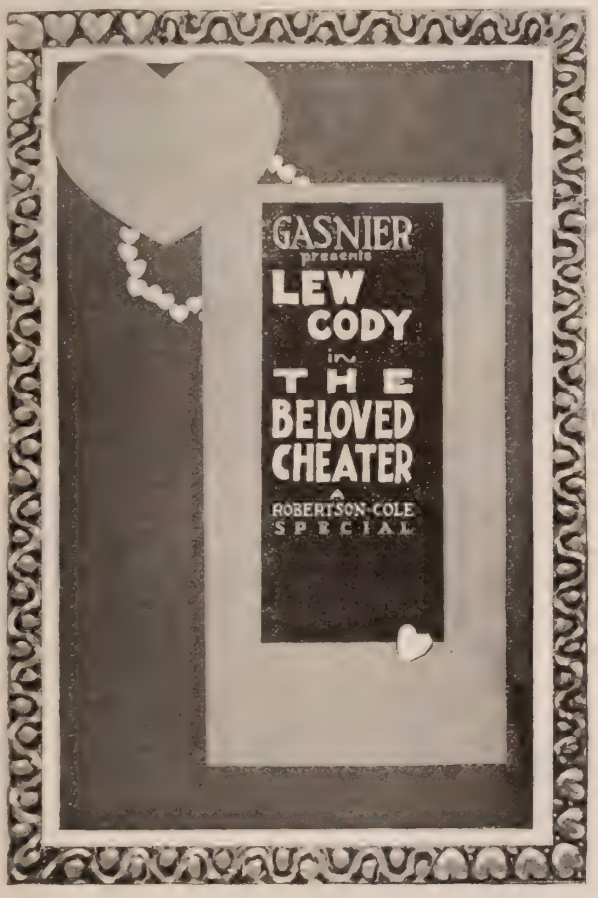
If the facilities of your house permit, it is suggested that you open your presentation with the following tableau:

This will require a setting in which a large pair of French doors figure prominently. The curtain rises in darkness—a dim blue light glows through the panels of the French doors, silhouetting the figures of a man and a woman—they kiss. A spot then opens on a man downstage—he shows great perturbation as he sees the figures in the rear—then the lights are suddenly extinguished and the picture opens.

Keep Plugging for Profits

Do not relax your campaign as soon as the picture opens. You can count naturally upon the word of mouth advertising that "THE BELOVED CHEATER" is going to receive from those who saw it the opening day. This boost is the best that you can obtain for it as going to bring their friends into the house, but, give these friends an opportunity to ask, "Did you see the Beloved Cheater?" and "How did you like it?"

Advertise and follow up your advertising so that this will be the natural question on every one's tongue. Keep your press notices before the public continuously and your advertising space in the newspapers. Arrange this advertising copy so that it will be in the nature of a follow-up. Your public reads the newspapers and they see your ads. Don't forget that advertising which remains the same soon becomes stale and ineffective and will attract no attention.



Another simple but striking design for lobby display

Practical Stunts

Don't be afraid of a stunt just because it may seem wild or far fetched.

The purpose of any stunt is to make people stop, look and listen—then to pull people into your house.

It has always been the habit of the public to remember those things which are out of the ordinary.

Do not commence your stunts until the day you open with "THE BELOVED CHEATER." Select the prettiest girl you can find and have her drive slowly through the streets. On the sides of the car have signs reading:

I DON'T BELIEVE IN KISSING

These signs will naturally attract the attention of everyone on the street. They will turn and look after the car, so place a third sign on the back of the car:

LEW CODY says:
Take them in your arms
Look lovingly in their eyes;
Whisper pretty words in their ears:
And they'll all KISS—
From babies to grandmothers.
IN THE BELOVED CHEATER
AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE

In the vicinity of the theatre post signs reading:

FOLLOW THE TRAIL OF HEARTS

Then paste red paper hearts two blocks in every direction leading to your theatre. Curiosity alone will attract many.

Lobby Display

Many theatres throughout the country have followed the example of the great Broadway theatres and are now having their own artists prepare special posters for their lobby frames.

There is a certain distinction in these individual hand-drawn and lettered posters and it gives the house an atmosphere of class that is attractive to many neighborhoods.

To assist those who are using this style of poster we have provided the two designs, shown on this page, for the assistance of your artist.

Of course you will use the regular lobby display photo which you will obtain from the Robertson-Cole Exchange but in addition to these you can make use of other displays which take advantage of the title to awaken interest in the production.

One of the features of "THE BELOVED CHEATER" is a trophy cabinet in which the Beloved Cheater collects trophies of his various love affairs. You can show such a collection in your lobby consisting of gloves, a slipper, handkerchiefs, a faded flower, etc.

A Face as Well Known as the Man in the Moon

To the Members of the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, Inc.

GENTLEMEN:

In your own experience you have found that the only rival of the printing press is the motion picture screen. For the entertainment and enlightenment of the people the screen has many advantages over the printed word. During the war, the people learned from the motion picture screens in your theatres the great truths that enabled them to present a solid front against the foe within our borders. Through this medium for the visualization and dissemination of ideas our people were induced to support war drives, Liberty Loans, and also to see the great events of the mighty world conflict as they actually happened.

That so powerful a force must inevitably be developed and made to serve all the purposes of our civilization soon became evident. As an Exhibitor and in common with many thousands of you, I felt the growing demand on the part of the public for pictures of an educational and industrial nature becoming insistent.

That the exhibitor could not afford to give his screen for these purposes indefinitely was a foregone conclusion; that the leading producers would welcome any change that brought about a more equitable arrangement could not be denied.

There cannot be, nor for two or more years past has there been, any doubt that such pictures were as much a part of our national life as the truly educational advertisements, stories of business success, and articles of business trade or professional instruction which filled the columns of our great periodical magazines and newspapers.

A searching investigation led me to the conclusion that there was one producer whose record in the educational and industrial picture field warranted a frank discussion of present conditions, and the hope that an agreement could be reached for a betterment of these conditions for you exhibitors.

This producer was the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of 1600 Broadway, New York. I am happy to say that my hopes were well founded. I now have the privilege of announcing to the members of this association that arrangements have been entered into with the Universal Film Mfg. Co., whereby they have agreed to pay exhibitors a fixed sum per day for each Universal Industrial or Educational picture you play.

They will also pay a percentage of all booking charges into the treasury of our organization. Within the next few days, I will send you a letter telling you the exact terms of the arrangement, the amount to be paid you, etc. The interests of the exhibitor and his patrons will always be safeguarded by the fact that regardless of this agreement, the public will always be the final judge of what it does or does not wish to see on the screen.

But the agreement means even more. It means that in spite of the many fine Universal productions of the past the standard is bound to be improved. You have in the past been getting excellent Universal Industrial pictures for nothing. I know, because I have run them on my own circuit. In the future under this agreement, you will get even better pictures and you will get paid for showing them. In addition, as above stated, there will be sums of money paid into our treasury monthly that will be of the greatest help to us in our tax drives and other constructive work of our organization.

I have seen the pictures that will in due time be offered for your approval. I recall one in particular—a membership drive for the Boy Scouts—a picture of the most fascinating interest, and of the most exquisite photography.

I have seen travelogs in Sumatra where much of the world's rubber supply comes from—a picture of the scenic class included on the weekly programs of the largest picture palaces in the country. Many more in process of production worthy to grace my screens—and yours.

This is not an appeal for an endorsement. There is no altruistic camouflage used to hide an ulterior purpose. We are not going into the industrial production or distributing business nor are we attempting to coerce you or your fellow members. In the development of an industry too great to be ignored we have taken a forward constructive step which will bring increased revenue into your theatres.

Full information will be sent you soon, so that you may guard against unaccredited representatives claiming to represent your own organization.

Any industrial or educational pictures offered you will bear as a trailer the seal of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors of America, Inc.

I shall welcome letters of inquiry or suggestions from any of our members.

Yours truly,

Gentlemen:-

I think the Pathe Exchange is to be congratulated on having the distribution of the new two reel Harold Lloyd comedies.

"BUMPING INTO BROADWAY" was one of the best comedies that has played at the Strand in a long time. In both our New York and Brooklyn houses it was a riot of fun with the audiences, and in its originality, the cleverness of its titling, and in the wholesomeness of its fun, it is safe to predict that Harold Lloyd from now on will be just double the favorite he was in his single reel releases

Yours truly,

It's the Same Old Backbone

WE hear a great deal these days about the first run theatre in the key city—the key theatre, it may be called.

Distributors seem to be concentrating pell mell in an effort to book it, let alone tie up with it or actually own it.

Its importance, one might well think, to the business at large is overshadowing.

But is it? Is it so important after all?

It is important, to a certain extent, in the way of revenue. And it has a store window value. This is to say, it advertises the picture. Bookings follow in other theatres in the district of which the city is the key. The newspaper advertising given the picture by the key theatre helps all over the district. That is, it does in some cities, like Detroit, Denver, Seattle, where theatre advertising is heavy and where the newspapers circulate heavily in the adjoining district. In some cities, like New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, this is not a factor, because comparatively the advertising is not.

So far so good.

But after all there are only about one hundred and fifty of these key theatres. One hundred and fifty out of fourteen thousand picture houses.

And among these fourteen thousand theatres are a few thousand first run theatres—first run for the city they are in—which are of considerable importance both in the way of revenue and of advertising.

Then there are several thousand more, of considerable importance also to the producer and distributor.

Three years ago we found that 80 per cent of the picture theatres of the country were small theatres—550 seats on an average.

This percentage and seating capacity have not changed greatly.

These "eighty percenters" we at that time decided constituted the backbone of the business.

They do today.

We begin to doubt if they are influenced so greatly by the bookings of the key theatres. Certainly they are not influenced as at first they were.

Some of the best pictures don't get a great showing at the key theatres; and some which do are not the best pictures.

It doesn't take the live exhibitor long to find out such obvious, practical facts as this.

Also we begin to wonder why the distributors don't turn their particular attention to these theatres, their problems, etc.

They are mighty important to the industry at large, and they always will be. It is this large number of theatres, many thousands of them genuine and established centres in the daily life of their respective communities, that make the business different from that of the speaking stage, and its bookings are circuiting problems.

Rewards and Penalties

W. W. HODKINSON is authority for a brief, simple statement which in our opinion expresses the underlying truth about this business, past, present and future.

He says: "There must forever be in this business a system whereby good pictures are fully encouraged and poor pictures are fully penalized."

No one of us—producer, distributor or exhibitor—and whatever our policies and affiliations,

Speaking Editorially:

It's the Same Backbone

will argue against this broad and elemental truth. Just the same it may be overlooked in the feverish evolutions of the business and particularly in these days of unrest and confusion.

The statement is the acid test which can and should be applied to any plan of merchandizing pictures.

What Mr. Hodkinson means, we assume, is that there must always be unrestricted competition. There must always be, all along the line—producer, distributor, exhibitor—a free and easy movement whereby the best possible pictures will be at once inspired and permitted to reach the largest possible number of screens.

Such a system must be maintained simply because the life blood of this business comes from the public pulse—and comes only when the public is pleased to pay its money, which in turn will only continue so long as the public gets the best pictures that can be produced.

Mr. Hodkinson has built a business upon this selective principle, and as such will prove a growing and healthful force in this industry.

There's Work to Do

WE have already spoken of the splendid fulfillment of the motion picture's mission in the World War and of its new and still greater duty to cure the after war disease of red anarchy.

We have congratulated ourselves that the motion picture is utterly free from that taint of radicalism, from which the printed word, unfortunately, is not immune.

And we are positive that the motion picture will thus and utterly continue to safeguard the unusual power it enjoys—that not one creator or distributor or exhibitor of motion pictures will ever lend his slightest consideration to the steadily and dastardly propaganda now struggling to reach weak and ignorant minds. But on the contrary, motion pictures will keep on breathing the spirit of clean Americanism and preaching to the world's millions, every day, the ideals of good homes, good government and good living.

There is more to do, however. We of this business can act individually, and the duty is as pressing as the red menace is threatening.

The Department of Justice, finding our laws deplorably inadequate to this menace new to these shores has prepared a bill which will provide at last an effective weapon to protect America and Americans. It is known as the Davey Sedition Bill, H. R. 10650, and has been introduced in the House by Congressman Martin L. Davey of Ohio.

The bill hits the nail on the head. It defines sedition and fixes a penalty for its expression in any form. Congress, in the new session, finds itself swamped with important measures but surely none is more immediately and thoroughly needed than this enactment. Write your Congressman and ask that this bill has his best attention.

Thank You—One and All!

NOW that the printers' strike is over and we are back once more on regular schedule, and next week to take on again our regular size, we want to thank our readers and advertisers for their consideration and help.

Our thanks should go first perhaps to the J. B. Lyon Press of Albany, which housed us during the storm here in New York, and which to a man gave us cordial and sincere cooperation.

It was decidedly an achievement to get out, during such a strike, a paper as fine typographically as the interim NEWS has proved itself to be.

Our advertisers recognized fully the difficulties inevitable to the printing of a weekly paper, one hundred and fifty miles away from its office and were courteous and liberal to a degree.

The attitude of our readers can be summed up in a single expression common to many of the letters we have received: "Bully for you. You kept going."

Let's Hear From the Others

OUR figures of $600,000,000 to $750,000,000 gross annual intake for the picture theatres of this country continue to be questioned by exhibitors who find that they are paying, not ten or twelve—but thirty and forty per cent of the gross intake for film rentals.

We don't blame them for expostulating. But we can find no reason to change these figures.

The trouble lies with those other exhibitors who with closed towns and territories are getting the best of it and pulling the average film rental down so low that it seems unbelievable to the average exhibitor.

They are getting the best, not only of the producers and distributors, but of their fellow exhibitors.

We would like to hear from the closed towns and sections what proportion of their gross receipts they are paying out in film rentals.

William A. Johnston

Dealing In Personalities

WATCH!—Look!—Listen!—and Wait! for that big Holiday Number of MOTION PICTURE NEWS next week.

Just think, that big large-size page once more! The "right-size" page!

Gosh, if you only get one-tenth the pleasure reading about that "right-size" page that we receive from starting to work on it again—then we are all happy.

And you will realize it next week. You'll see once more the all-around, lively qualities that you have come to expect in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. And with our organization back in New York—instead of one hundred and fifty miles away at the printer's—you'll see those qualities again, week in and week out.

Getting back to that Holiday edition, however, we might give you one tip about it—especially if you are an advertiser. There's one ten page feature in this number which will alone insure its being an all-year-round workman for you. And that will assure you of being sorry every week in the year if you let this issue get by without your ad. It's a feature that will be on close to a thousand newspaper desks, that will be saved by exhibitors, and that will work for you in every New York office. Take our tip. Phone the ad department and get some of the details.

GOSH, but that boy Earl Hammons is a secretive one. Here he slips away without a word of warning and then to our desk comes this announcement:

"Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Ferris Handy have the honor of announcing the marriage of their daughter, Violet Adelaide, to Earl Wooldridge Hammons, on Tuesday, the second of December."

It just took our breath away at first. Then when we got it back we found that we thought so much of Earl Hammons that we just wanted to break loose with every adjective of congratulation in the dictionary.

The job is too much for us. If Earl Hammons were just an ordinary "fillum magnut" we could turn some neatly phrased formal word of "Congratulations!" and get away with it in dandy fashion. But Earl Hammons is such a "regular feller" that we don't know just how to out our "wish you the best of luck, old top!"

We just have to get back to that Holiday number, somehow or other. While speaking of that one big feature in the italic paragraph above we neglected to say that this feature is "but one of many." But the biggest of all to us is the "right-size" page once more. Do you folks realize what you have been missing during these past two months? We'll bet you don't. Memory is short in this picture game. But it will hit you with a bang when you see that "right-size" big book again. Mark our words!

LEO WHARTON was among the arrivals of the week at Mrs. Astor's gathering place. Leo has been down in Texas so long that people were beginning to wonder if he had forgotten pictures to go after oil.

But Leo is back—and with him three pictures. These are the product of the San Antonio Pictures Corporation, starring our old friend of "The Round-Up"—Maclyn Arbuckle.

The "other member" of the Wharton team is just as enthusiastic about San Antonio as both Whartons—Leo and Theo—have always been about Ithaca, New York.

"San Antonio is an ideal picture country," says Leo. "Climate, light, everything combine to make a producer happy. The scenery is entirely new, the best people of the country co-operate with you, and you are lots nearer 'the center of things' than you imagine when you first say, 'San Antonio.' I'm surprised that more of the producing companies haven't recognized the advantages of San Antonio."

Just a second, before we pass on. Start thinking about that Holiday Number of Motion Picture News now. Copy reservations must be made early if you want to assure position—because there will be forms going to press every day from Monday on. And we don't want you to say that we didn't give you warning that this number would have "honest-to-goodness" all-year-round value. Enuf said. We've done our part.

JOHN SIEFERT and Al Kinsel headed a delegation from the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League that visited New York last week and found time to call at the NEWS office and say "Howdy!" The Ohio boys are doing a little "gum-shoeing" to get the "inside info" on a number of things that are happening to and for exhibitors.

They also brought the news with them that on December 2nd the organized exhibitors of Cincinnati—over eight strong—had joined forces with the Miami Valley body.

Which is good news all around. Just keep your eye on this Miami Valley bunch. They are ready to show the country a real, worthwhile organization of exhibitors covering an entire exchange territory.

It seems a late day to try and tell exhibitors the benefits of organization, but we'll wager that those Cincinnati boys won't need any one to tell them after they have been with the Miami Valley crowd for a while. Organization was never needed as much by the exhibitor as it is at the present moment. And it isn't needed half as much now as it will be during the year to come.

As we close—don't forget that Holiday number of Motion Picture News, and the return to the "right-size." Next week! And then watch our smoke!

Did you catch that announcement regarding "Grumpy" on page 4278 last week? This stage success should be a knockout when screened by Robertson-Cole as a special. It's a legitimate production that deserves screen success.

KAY AND BEE BACK!

AL KESSEL and Charles Bauman are coming back into the producing field again!

The pioneers of Kaybee fame—who have to their credit more than their share of the events that make film history—are to produce three big productions a year.

Charles Bauman explained is to a "News" representative this way: "We used to make FILM. Now we are going to make PRODUCTIONS."

But that "film" recorded the discovery of Chaplin and some of the greatest achievements of Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince!

"Stand Fast, Stay Free"—Abrams

United Artists Official Embellishes Advertising Statements, Hitting at Theatre Monopoly Sought

ENLARGING on the points contained in advertising statements issued over his signature defending the open market for the selling of productions on a basis of merit, Hiram Abrams of the United Artists Corporation last week issued the following statement:

"I don't want the exhibitors to feed the monster that will surely destroy them eventually. Let me tell you of the famous legend of when the world was very young, an ambitious but foolish scientist built a giant called Frankenstein, and created life within him, through the use of salt, sugar, water and other chemical ingredients, and that when this miracle was performed Frankenstein turned upon his creator and destroyed him.

"There are many exhibitors today who are not so much scientists, but just as foolish, creating a motion picture Frankenstein.

"They are using the same ingredients; they are giving the salt, the sugar of their business, and the Frankenstein is supplying the water in the form of stock. And some day when he feels he is strong enough, Mr. M. P. Frankenstein will turn upon his creators and destroy them, a la his illustrious predecessor.

"Don't feed the monster that will destroy you. Don't even feed him a little bit, for it might be just that added ounce of strength that will give him the power to crush you. He is the business vampire of the age; he can give you nothing, but he will take everything from you.

"He wants your theatre! Are you going to give it to him? Or are you going to tell him in the strongest language that the mails will carry, that you are going to remain in business uncontrolled, uninfluenced by dictation, and in a position to secure the greatest pictures ever made from independent stars and producers, now and forever available to you if you stand your ground, hold the fort, and refuse to surrender.

"If I can only make the exhibitor understand that his selling out the control of his theatre is simply weaving his own noose, then I will have accomplished my purpose. I just want him to understand.

"You certainly know that in the time of the Spanish Inquisition it was considered an exquisite torment to force a victim to fashion the tools of his own torture? Well, I've been told that it's not a pleasant thing to have a noose placed around your neck, ready for the jerk to eternity. It is even less pleasant to be compelled to weave that noose for yourself.

"Yet that is what several unthinking exhibitors have already done, by surrendering the control of their theatres to conscienceless financial cliques, whose only interest is their own aggrandizement, regardless of who suffers or loses by it.

"My advice to all exhibitors is, don't weave your own noose. Don't build your own gallows; don't forge your own shackles; don't sell your birth-right for a mess of pottage, for you will find that even that will be more mess than pottage.

"You will do all of these things by giving up control or part of your theatre. You will avoid them all by clinging to your rights, your ownership, your independence—and in the end you will find that you can obtain the best pictures from independent stars and producers, making more money than ever before, making it all for yourself, and for a longer time—besides being free, which is the biggest word of four letters in the English or any other language."

Christmas Seal Campaign Brought Before Public by Witty News Reel in Biggest Houses

"TOPICS of the Day," selected from the press of the world, by The Literary Digest and screened by Timely Films Incorporated, well exemplifies the Power of the Press on the Screen. This motion picture subject, which is distributed by Pathe, has a potent influence upon millions of movie fans throughout the English speaking world. It is a publicity factor the extent of which cannot be measured.

Many practical demonstrations may be cited to show the good influence and educational value of "Topics of the Day." At the present time, the attention of over fifteen million people is being drawn daily to the Red Cross Christmas Seal Campaign for 1919, by a special topic about this worthy work which heads a current program. Amedee J. Van Buren, President of Timely Films Incorporated, offered the co-operation of his organization for the seal campaign and it was readily accepted by James R. Crowell, Publicity Director of the drive.

The entertainment value of "Topics of the Day," is well known. This film has been booked and is billed as an "act" in all the Keith, Orpheum, Poli and affiliated vaudeville circuits. While the leading picture theatres in the big cities of the country are showing "Topics of the Day" with great success, the smaller picture houses in suburban communities have also been quick to realize that they too can play this subject with excellent results.

Newspaper editors and paragraphers have expressed an eager desire to see their brain-children flashed on the silver sheet. Almost every mail brings to the office of Timely Films Incorporated, editorial offerings from the best paragraphers of the American Press.

Out of Briggs Pictures

John William Kellette has severed his connection with Briggs Pictures, Inc., as director of Paramount-Briggs comedies, which position he held since May, and has returned from Jacksonville, Fla., and is making his home at the Elks Club, New York City.

MANAGERIAL SHIFT

M. W. Remond Named General Manager of Atlanta Houses

ACCORDING to announcement just made N. W. Remond of Jacksonville, Fla., has been appointed general manager of the five theatres owned in Atlanta by the Lynch Enterprises. He succeeded Hugh Cardoza, who represented Jake Wells in Atlanta prior to Mr. Wells selling his theatrical interests in this city to Mr. Lynch.

The theatres under Mr. Remond's management are the Lyric, Forsyth, Rialto, Strand and Vaudette.

Before coming to Atlanta he was associated with theatre management in Jacksonville for seven years.

Theatre Manager Resigns

Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theatre in Baltimore since that theatre was erected about five years ago has resigned. He has been succeeded by Louis A. DeHoff, managing director of the New and Garden Theatres. Mr. DeHoff will direct the destinies of the Parkway along wtih his work of managing the other two theatres.

Mr. Depkin is one of the best known moving picture men in Baltimore and during the time that he has had charge of the Parkway, has brought that theatre to the forefront as one of the leading photoplay houses of the city. Mr. Depkin is not yet ready to announce his future plans.

The former manager's resignation is the result of the purchase of the Parkway Theatre by the Century Company of which C. E. Whitehurst is president. The purchase was made about a month ago.

Peter Milne with Wid's

Peter Milne, for the last six months in the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department, where he had charge of exhibitors exploitation publicity, has resigned to accept an editorial position on Wid's. Previous to his connection with Famous Players Mr. Milne was for five years chief reviewer on MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

News Item: Mr. Milne states that his resignation has nothing to do with the previous departure of Walter Greene. He announces that he is not dickering with Messrs. Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan, etc., in the formation of their new distributing corporation.

New Buffalo Theatre Named "Capitol"

George Hall and George Haney, proprietors of the Maxine theatre in Seneca street, Buffalo, are building a mammoth neighborhood house in South Buffalo. Up until a few days ago the name of the theatre was to have been the "Piccadilly."

The fact that the house was in an Irish section proved a stumbling block, and now it is said the theatre will be named The Capitol.

Boise Proves Worth of Sunday Shows

Idaho City After Three Years of Sabbath Opening Has Squelched Even Opposition of Clergy; Prominent Men Declare Opening Is Boon to the City

THREE years ago Boise, Idaho, a city of 30,000 people, was wrapped up in the second most bitter fight in its history—a fight to determine whether or not the motion picture houses should open their places on Sunday. The other fight was on the wet and dry question. In the first fight, Boise was made a dry city, in the second its motion picture shows were made available to those who desired quiet high class recreation on the day of rest.

Boise has now had three years of Sunday picture shows. The criticism has melted away, even some of those who most bitterly opposed the opening of the shows on Sunday, now declare that if the managers continue to show the same high class pictures as in the past, there will be no opposition.

Criticism Smothered

Following the opening of the picture shows in March, 1916, a great amount of crticism was directed against that form of amusement, sermons were preached against it. Today not a voice of criticism or censure is heard. The shows operate from 2 p. m., until 11 p. m., every Sunday. The consensus of opinion of officers of the law is that the shows have brought about a more orderly Sabbath. The police records show fewer arrests on Sunday since the shows opened and the hundreds of sons of toil who on Saturday night do their trading are now able to enjoy the movies on Sunday, thus doing away with being up late Saturday night and therefore able to return to work Monday fresh and in good condition.

The opening of the picture shows Sunday was secured through the passage of a law by the eleventh session of the state legislature, providing, that in any city or village, where the qualified electors equal in number to a majority of the votes cast at the last general election shall petition the council or board of trustees to permit theatres or moving picture show houses to keep open on Sunday, the council or board of trustees may pass an ordinance permitting Sunday opening during such hours and subject to such regulations as may be prescribed.

It was five years after the passage of this law before any attempt was made in Boise to open the picture houses Sunday.

Charles F. Reddoch, the attorney who handled the case for the motion picture show people in the courts, has been elevated to the judgeship of the district court and was elected by a large majority. Concerning Sunday picture shows, he says:

"I favor motion picture shows on Sunday because they furnish an enlightening, educational and harmless form of amusement which supplants evil. As city attorney of Boise I was surprised at the number of cases of drunkenness and other misdemeanor cases which came up Monday morning. They were persistent in spite of the territory being dry. Following the opening of the picture shows, the men were furnished a place to go and be entertained and gradually, I know from investigation, that fewer cases came into police court. I feel certain such shows tend for a more orderly Sabbath and detract but little from the church services. It was because I firmly believed it was for the betterment of the city that I put my heart in the strenuous fight to secure the opening of the theatres for Sunday shows and after several years of their operation I have no cause to regret it."

R. H. Park, president of the State Federation of Labor and prominent in Labor circles throughout Idaho, says: "I favor Sunday picture shows as it affords an opportunity for the laboring man to find relaxation and entertainment. Six days of the week he is on the job. In these times of a scarcity of labor, he is called upon to exert himself to the utmost, therefore it is necessary for him to retire early to be in sharp for the next day. Sunday is the one day on which he can enjoy the motion picture show with his family without the sacrifice of being out late, and it is a form of amusement which he can afford. I find where picture shows operate on Sunday, a more contented class of laborers. I would urge the theatre managers to put on a high class of shows, those which are educational and elevating as well as entertaining as I find the laboring men who patronize the shows wish to be enlightened as well as entertained.

"I favor the Sunday motion picture show for its educational advantages alone, if I could give no other reason," stated Frank J. Clayton, president of the State Industrial Accident Commission and a prominent Labor Union man. "I can see no more harm in attending a motion picture show than going to a baseball game, fishing or automobile riding. The picture show is within the means of those who are not able to afford automobiles, make long trips fishing and care not for the excitement and noise of baseball. I find the current events given at most shows educational, the pictures high class and the entertainment of a form to which I can see no valid objection."

These are but a few expressions from prominent men. The Sunday picture show has proven a success and a community benefit at Boise.

TWO INCORPORATIONS

Community Productions Has Big Capital Stock

CERTIFICATES of incorporation of two motion picture companies have been filed with the County Clerk of Westchester county, within the past week. The Stella Mayhew Productions and the Community Productions are the corporations.

The Stella Mayhew Productions has a capital stock of $50,000 and the directors are Stella Mayhew Taylor, William B. Taylor and Jacob S. Ruskin, all of New Rochelle.

The Community Productions is much larger, having a capital stock of $250,000. It will make Hastings-on-Hudson, a small village just north of here, its headquarters. The subscribers to the certificate of Community Productions were all women—Christine A. Bowles, Mary W. Fry, and Elizabeth Miller, while the directors are Warren D. and William H. Foster, Ernest H. Smith, and Forrest Izard. All the parties gave their addresses as 46 West 24th Street, New York City.

Goldwyn Salesman Named as Ass't. Manager

L. H. Guhl, for the past year Goldwyn's star salesman in Wisconsin, comes into his own by his appointment as Assistant Manager of the Chicago office.

Mr. Guhl, previous to his connections with Goldwyn was an exhibitor and operated a circuit of theatres throughout Iowa and Wisconsin. Upon his connection with Goldwyn, he was assigned to the Wisconsin territory and due largely to his efforts in this territory has increased the number of Goldwyn exhibitors.

His appointment as Assistant Manager at the Chicago office, comes as a reward for his conscientious and loyal work after he had turned down various offers from other concerns and remained loyal to Goldwyn.

Mr. Guhl is well known throughout this territory by exhibitors and exchangemen and his many friends will be glad to hear of his new appointment.

Referendum Urged in N. J. on Sunday Showings

An action which motion picture men look upon as highly encouraging in the campaign for Sunday shows in New Jersey was taken when the Jersey City Chamber of Commerce put itself on record as favoring legislation to provide for a referendum to allow Jersey City citizens to determine for themselves whether Sunday movies shall be permitted in the city. The action of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, under the Chairmanship of Willard C. Stanton, was unanimous.

The Directors it is said took into consideration the trend of popular feeling as exhibited in the recent state elections, with regard to Sunday amusements, when both major political parties adopted Sunday motion picture planks in their party platforms.

Film Board of Trade Celebrates

Minneapolis Body But One Year Old is 100% Efficient; Much Accomplished Since Formation

CHANGING its regular meeting day from Monday to Wednesday night for one occasion so that it might celebrate on exactly the same date that its initial session was held the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade brought its first year to a close Wednesday, December 3, with an election of officers and a review of the organization's activities for twelve months past.

On December 3, 1918, the Film Board of Trade began activity in the Northwest. Inasmuch as a Screen Club, an F.I.L.M. Club and several exhibitors' organizations had failed to develop into permanent organizations local wiseacres held out little hope for the long life of the Board, at its inception. A. H. Fischer, manager of the Minneapolis Metro exchange, has been given the honor of presiding over Board meetings for the ensuing year. As the former vice-president and chairman of the transportation committee Mr. Fischer proved such a capable executive that his selection for president was by acclamation. E. S. Holmes, Vitagraph manager, was chosen vice-president, Charles W. Stombaugh, Pathe manager, secretary and Phil J. Reisman, Hodkinson manager, treasurer.

Robert Cotton, manager of the Republic exchange, was selected to act as the fifth member of the executive board. J. F. Cubberly, First National manager, was chosen chairman of the legislative committee at the annual election. Other members of this committee are: E. S. Holmes, Vitagraph; L. E. Davis, Goldwyn; J. E. Hicks, Paramount; J. E. Kemp, Westcott exchange. B. N. Judell, who operates his own exchange, was selected chairman of the transportation committee. B. Friedman, Friedman Film Corp., former treasurer, and W. Lestico, Triangle, former secretary, are other members of the transportation committee. Mr. Judell, Max Weisfeldt, Fox; Newton Davis, Universal; Harry Hollander, Realart and Carl Michaei, Kleine comprise the grievance committee. Phil Reisman, R. Cotton, and Carl Michael make up the publicity committee. L. E. Davis, B. N. Judell and E. S. Holmes were appointed as a committee to arrange for a get-together banquet for local film salesmen, to be given Friday, Dec. 26. The purpose of this banquet will be to get all salesmen and managers together for the purpose of closer harmony and to explain the future plans of the board.

Harry Rathner, Select exchange, retiring president in a brief speech prior to the balloting reviewed the first year's work of the Board of Trade and stated that reports show the organization to have saved exchanges and exhibitors many thousands of dollars, to have eliminated many complaints and to have created a better feeling between all branches of the industry.

Picking Industrials to be Shown

Sydney Cohen and Committee Will Pass on All Such Films Before M. P. T. O. of A. Members Run Them

WITH the growing strength of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as an association for the protection of the American screen and the rights of motion picture exhibitors throughout the country, the committee on organization under the leadership of Sydney S. Cohen, chairman, is completing the final details relative to the type of pictures which will be furnished.

The committee is determined that every motion picture which borders on the "industrial" or which contains advertising propaganda of any sort will not be accepted for projection by any member until it has been given the approval of the representative committee. Even then, it is a part of the agreement made by every organization of theatre owners which has joined forces with the major organization, that it shall receive recompense for the projection of the film.

Under the plan as announced by Mr. Cohen and which he details further in the present announcement, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will distribute pictures on a strictly co-operative basis. Every exhibitor who heretofore has booked "industrial" and advertising pictures blind, and who, after they were projected, received nothing for the service of his screen.

Pictures distributed by the parent association, according to Mr. Cohen, will be selected under the experienced and trained eyes of the best known directors, and with casts which will read like those in films projected in the largest Broadway theatres. Such care as this, declares Mr. Cohen, will provide motion pictures which will not prove offensive to the most critical patron.

Leaders in the movement, however, wish to impress exhibitors and others interested that the activities of the organization will not be confined to the distribution of pictures which are merely for industrial and advertising purposes. It is planned to distribute also a series of beautiful scenic productions, which will rank as high if not higher, than any that are now on the market.

Mr. Cohen declared that the educational angle in the industry would be made an object of deep study by the committee, and that an executive would be engaged for this type of distribution whose technical and scientific education was unquestioned.

Enters Picture Field

M. J. Connolly of the International Film Service and for many years assistant to "Zit." in the Dramatic Department of the New York Evening Journal, has resigned from the Hearst organization to embark in the motion picture and dramatic agency field. He has entered into partnership with Henry Sanger who has, for a long time, successfully conducted an agency of this nature from his offices in the Fitzgerald building.

THIS AND THAT

"Why Censure Movies?" was the subject of an address given before a Y. M. C. A. audience at Winnipeg, Manitoba, by Mr. C. Robson, chief censor for the Province of Saskatchewan. He dealt with moving picture matters in general and defended the censorship of films.

San Antonio Amusement Company, San Antonio, Texas, is among recent incorporations noted. Capital stock $125,000. Incorporators: E. H. Hulsey, Allen T. Morrison and Y. F. Freeman.

A new theatre tax schedule, differing principally in a new classification of legitimate theatres, was adopted by the county court at Independence, Me. It became effective at once and supersedes the schedule adopted Sept. 11. The old schedule included besides circuses, tractor and motor car exhibitions, horse and stock shows, and effected directly the American Royal and other big Kansas City exhibitions. The new schedule doesn't include exhibitors of that class and variety.

A reduction from $75 to $62.50 a month was made in the tax of theatres charging not more than $1.50 admittance.

Harris P. Wolfberg, manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Cincinnati exchange, was elected President of the Film Board of Trade of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce at its last meeting.

Charles Gramlich, General Manager and Director of the Joy Motion Picture Co., with headquarters in Miami, Florida, was a visitor in New York last week.

Frank Zambrino has bought "Lightning Bryce" to handle out of Chicago.

Foster Olsoyd, manager of the Strand theatre, New Orleans, is looking over New York's picture palaces while here on a short visit.

Carl Laemmle, who was a recent visitor at the Universal Cincinnati exchange, states that his company is considering the production of five-reel serials in place of the usual two-reel serials. "This plan would have several advantages," stated Mr. Laemmle. "In the first place, it would take the serial out of the 'fill-in' class and make it a feature, for a real plot can be unfolded in five reels, which is impossible in two reels. In addition, the reduction in the number of showings from 18 to possibly seven would increase the interest in serials.

Probably one of the most touching ceremonies ever held in honor of a departed actor soldier was enacted last Sunday on the steps of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument when Mrs. Sidney Drew formally presented the cross placed over the grave of her step-son, S. Rankin Drew, to the Sidney Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion.

Closing Danger Fades as Strike Ends

Miners Return to Work and Theatre Men Breathe More Easily; Industry Weathered Period Well; Restrictions to Remain in Force Until Normal Production Is Assured

SETTLEMENT of the coal strike and the consequent expectation that the coal restrictions will shortly be removed as production comes back to normal has brought relief to motion picture men in many sections. Though the industry weathered the crisis period in fine shape, the abnormal conditions that would have ensued from a continued shut down of the mines and a gradual tightening of fuel and lighting restrictions was a cause of worry on the part of many.

Prohibition of display lighting and electric signs was about the most severe handicap imposed on theatre owners, with the exception of a few scattered centers, notably Omaha, Neb., and Kansas City, where the houses were compelled to shut down. These lighting restrictions will continue in force for several weeks, it is expected, until mine production resumes in full volume. Director General of Railroads W. G. Hines, in announcing the continuation in force of coal bans, issued the following statement:

Regulations in Force

"A period of time will be required for the complete relocation of railroad stock and meantime it is not to be anticipated that all mines can be supplied with cars to the full normal extent.

"The Railroad Administration will continue to distribute coal to protect those regions whose supply has been inadequate until they can be supplied from their normal sources.

"Just as soon as practicable regulations in connection with the use of bituminous coal for power, light and heat will be rescinded or modified, and the same is true of the supplying of coal to necessary industries."

Consensus of opinion is that the restrictions will not be lifted for about two weeks. In the meantime the celebrated White Way of New York will continue dark, theatre lights and signs having been voluntarily dimmed even before orders from Fuel Administrator Garfield. The same conditions will obtain in Chicago, Denver and other large cities.

All told, comparatively few picture houses throughout the country were forced to close owing to the fuel trouble. In many cities, notably Denver, the hours of opening were cut. In the Colorado city the picture houses were permitted to run eight hours every day, opening at 2:30 and closing at 10:30 p. m. On Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays they were not to open until 6 p. m. It is probable such restrictions will be lifted at an early date.

Reports coming from all parts of Illinois, Wisconsin and northern Indiana indicate that but few movie houses in the district outside of Chicago were forced to close. Exhibitors during the first two or three days of the crisis were timid about making bookings, but quickly regained the spirit of optimism which is characteristic of the moving picture industry, and got back in the market, so that the exchanges have not suffered the slump in business which many feared was imminent.

Exchanges promptly met the problem of decreased train service by shipping out films a day earlier than customary and prompt delivery service has been maintained despite the handicaps.

Omaha theatre managers when forced to close, lost considerable money that had been invested in advance advertising of pictures they had booked. They assured the public, however, that as soon as the ban was lifted they would be given an opportunity of seeing the big features listed.

After having been closed for several days, Kansas City houses opened on Dec. 7 for a ten-hour period. The depleted coal supply, however, made it uncertain whether such a schedule could be maintained.

Cleveland houses and theatres throughout Ohio were unaffected.

REACHING OUT!

Seattle Combine Has Big Plans; To Acquire 27 Houses

JENSEN and Von Herberg of the Greater Theatres Company, Seattle, Wash., last week announced they would build a $1,500,000 house in Seattle, a $600,000 one in Great Falls, Montana, and in addition will buy or build twenty-five other houses on the Pacific Coast.

The Seattle house is planned to be the finest in the country. It will have among other features a $100,000 pipe organ and a large ball room with orchestra. Escalators will care for the crowds. The house will be opened within ten months.

Ascher Enterprises, Ten Years Old, Are Still Growing

Nathan Ascher, president of Ascher Bros. Theatrical Enterprises of Chicago, and recently elected one of the vice-presidents and a member of the board of directors of National Picture Theatres, Inc., the new cooperative company organized and incorporated by Lewis J. Selznick, last week celebrated his tenth anniversary of the foundation of his theatrical interests in the Windy City.

Nathan Ascher is regarded today as one of the most successful exhibitors in the country. He has been active in progressive legislation for the exhibitor ever since his entrance into the motion-picture business 10 years ago. He also was one of the principal organizers of the Exhibitor's League of America.

As a vice-president and director of National Picture Theatres, Inc., the tremendous financial resources of Ascher Bros. Theatrical Enterprises are solidly behind the new organization formed by Mr. Selznick. He will be active in the management of the organization's business affairs, and the broad and practical experience enjoyed by Mr. Ascher will be of great value in the development of the company's interests.

Overcrowding Costs Canadians a Fine

The police swooped down upon the various theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, on Dec. 1 to collect the names of exhibitors in whose houses the crowd was found standing in the lobbies or at the rear of the ground floor. Four managers, J. T. Moxley of the Regent, King Snell of the Dominion, Val Bureau of the Francais, and Harold Vance of the Casino, were later convicted and fined $20 and costs each for alleged overcrowding. The defence of the accused was that there were seats for the people who were standing, but they preferred to stand. The exhibitors denied that the aisles had been blocked.

A VACILLATING CENSOR BOARD

"THE Ten of Diamonds," a Triangle production featuring Dorothy Dalton and supervised by Thos. H. Ince, was taken from the Band Box theatre, a first run house in the loop district of Chicago, by the police, acting under orders from the board of censors. This action was taken despite the fact that the board had previously reviewed the picture, ordered several changes and had issued a permit after these changes had been made by the Triangle Exchange.

Immediatly the Triangle officials became busy. The manager of the exchange took the seized print to the board of censors and insisted that it again review the print. This it finally did and after a lengthy debate ordered further re-editing of the feature. The manager of the Triangle Exchange further insisted that the chief censor and his operator remain in their office until the required changes had been made so that an immediate decision could be obtained.

The exchange manager and his two assistants then began the re-editing of the Triangle production and the scenes were so arranged that very few cuts were necessary. The next day the picture ran.

Beck in Fight for Open Market

Declares His Plans for Gibraltar Pictures Are Aimed to Financial Interests Who Seek Control

WITH a guarantee of twenty-six feature productions a year, Arthur F. Beck, executive of Gibraltar Pictures, has stepped into the field on the issue of the open market.

Mr. Beck declares that his investment is based on the opening of the market in the face of big financial interests which are entering the motion picture field, and in an interview he said:

"Every theatre owner in the country is facing now a crisis in the development of his business. Five years ago one of the financial giants of Wall Street said that it would take a few years before big capital would enter the film field, because he could not at that time tell what he was buying into.

"Big business prefers to leave the pioneering to others, stepping in later when values are established and can be computed to a certainty.

"To-day theatre investments and film productions represent an almost completely standardized value. To-day seems, therefore, to be Der Tag for the money powers which have been biding their time to strike.

"Fortunately the business of pictures depends upon the art of picture making. No monopoly can hope to withhold from the theatre owner the meritorious product of those who dare to enter the producing field.

"With the situation as it now stands the life of the industry is at stake—if competitive effort is any criterion. The exhibitor is now worrying as to what he must do to safeguard his property. There is only one way for him to keep his hat in the ring and that is for him to feel sure of his film supply from competitive sources.

"Gibraltar's guarantee of twenty-six pictures a year, each made on high standard specifications, is calculated to relieve the stress of the situation. Nobody realizes better than I do what it means for these productions to be of high merit. My five units of production are bent to their utmost endeavor, and the weapon I am forging to place in the hands of the theatre man, will I am sure be found effective. I am preparing it for the big theatre as well as the small one. I am spending my money on a big scale for plays, stars, authors and directors who will stand up under prodigious advertising by the exhibitor. The finest class of theatres in the country may be assured of twenty-six Gibraltars a year that will equal the best they have shown and surpass their average offerings.

"I am fighting for an open market and I invite those to join me who believe that the theatre manager is entitled to honest selective booking, with no strings tied to it. The theatre man of any vision at all owes it to himself to look before he leaps. He must not allow himself to be bound by a system that contemplates his ultimate elimination. Gibraltar invites every test of its strength to keep the market open. Ten years ago we fought commercial monopoly. To-day we are fighting financial domination. We must not surrender to either."

Metro Branch Host to Film Men

New Jersey Exchange Gives Luncheon to Fifty Representative Men of the Industry

ABOUT fifty New Jersey exhibitors, local exchange men and other identified with the film industry met at the Hotel Astor, Friday afternoon, Dec. 5th, there to be guests of Herman F. Jans of the New Jersey Metro Film Exchange at a luncheon which later terminated in a semi-perfected organization which is to attempt to further the exhibitors' interests in securing the passage of a Sunday opening bill which it is planned will be introduced at the forthcoming session of the New Jersey legislature at Trenton.

After considerable discussion with some factions headed by Walter Read, manager of theatres in Asbury Park, Long Branch, Trenton and New York and H. Charles Hespe, D. D. S. of Jersey City an amicable settlement was reached with the appointment of a committee which will have charge of the proposed fight for less stringent laws.

The selection of the committee was by election. Those elected are as follows: Walter Read, manager of the Savoy theatre, New York and others at Trenton, Asbury Park and Long Branch, N. J., George Jacobs, a well known exhibitor of Trenton, James D. Lyons of Morristown and Dr. Hespe. Later this committee met and elected a chairman, treasurer and secretary.

Before adjournment a motion was carried recommending that all theatres in New Jersey conserve in lighting except between the hours of 7.30 and 8.30 p. m. as an assistance in the coal shortage emergency now confronting the country. The meeting adourned informally.

Following is list of those who attended the luncheon and meeting:

Aaron Shusterman, M. Matchette, Chas. Rosensweig, Nat Liebenkind, Harry Rice, J. S. Dickerson, Sol J. Saphier, Harry W. Doniger, R. A. White, Harry de G. Robinson, Edward H. Burns, James J. Lyons, H. Chas. Hespe, S. Eckman Jr., Henry Siegel, Walter Reade, Herman F. Jans, Maurice Broskie, Chas. Hildinger, F. Langtier-Rep, S. M. Weller, Harry Reichenback, P. A. Adams, John T. Collins, Geo. W. Directors Hold Annual Ball on Coast

The most notable social event of the year of the west coast film world was the fourth annual ball given by the Motion Picture Directors' Association, Thanksgiving Eve, in the Rose Ball Room and Dining Room of Hotel Alexandria.

The attendance marked the importance of the event, all studios being represented by the principal directors, stars, players and writers. Two orchestras alternately furnished dance music and during the Midnight Dinner, a Hawaiian orchestra and entertainers gave a program of unusual merit. Pretty lighting effects were introduced during the evening, adding lustre and beauty to the scene of handsomely gowned women and their escorts.

Arrangements for the ball were in charge of committees appointed by the Association through Walter Edwards, Acting Director and Frank Lloyd, Assistant Director. The committees were as follows:

Committee of Arrangements: Joseph De Grasse, Chairman, Reginald Barker, Wallace Worsley, Frank Lloyd, Walter Edwards, George Melford, Frank Beal, William Beaudine and Murdock McQuarrie. Reception Committee: James Gordon, chairman, Norval MacGregor and Thomas Ricketts. Musical Arrangements: Victor L. Schertzinger.

Fox's British Director Resigns Post

Ernest Reed, since 1916 Managing Director of the Fox Film Company, Ltd., Great Britain, has resigned his post to enjoy a rest after long service in behalf of Fox Productions in the United Kingdom. Mr. Reed arrived in New York on the Mauretania the day before Thanksgiving ,and announcement of his resignation was made after conferences.

Mr. Reed, when he left J. D. Walker's World Films to join the Fox organization, opened headquarters at 74-76 Old Compton street, London, in March of that year.

Mr. Reed's work was especially arduous during the war, by reason of his activities in behalf of the Allied cause and his film duties, and he was constantly under great strain.

Feature Men Win Drive in "U" Chicago Office

The sales organization of Universal Chicago Office has just completed a three weeks' sales contest. The contest was carried out in an endeavor to increase Universal sales to such an extent during the three weeks that they would win a prize for their manager, Mr. I. L. Leserman.

The organization was divided into two teams. The short subject men with Morris Hellman as Captain and the Feature salesman with I. Gettelson as Captain. Much enthusiasm was shown, and for three weeks the Universal office was a regular bee-hive of business getting salesmen.

The feature men won by a very short margin. The losers entertained the winners Saturday, December 13, at a theatre party and dinner, at which the salesman that procured the most business presided as toast-master.

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

Striking coal miners in southern Illinois are spending all their time and money at the picture shows according to Harry Weiss of The First National, Chicago, but should the tie up continue, serious conditions will arise, he says, as lightless nights and coal-less days are already common and things will change after the miners go broke around Christmas time.

Harry Berman, general manager of Universal Film Company, was in Chicago for a few days last week going from there to Minneapolis, Kansas City and the Coast, visiting during his trip all western exchanges. Mr. Berman is enthusiastic over the progress made by the Chicago office of Universal during the past six months, stating that business has never been so good and that past selling records had been doubled during that period.

He was accompanied by George H. Davis, widely known San Francisco theatrical manager and moving picture man. Messrs. Brandt and Davis have been selling state rights for "Confession" and report the New England and eastern states practically closed for this big picture. They also say that Illinois and Ohio are practically the only central states still open.

The Chicago office of the Universal has succeeded in locating Mrs. Ella Rogers, the aunt and only known relative of William Stowell, noted leading man of the movies, the report of whose death in a train accident in South Africa, had come over the cables. Mrs. Rogers resides at 3024 Winchester Avenue, Chicago, and was greatly grieved at the report of the accident.

Ottawa, Ontario, is considerably interested in the announcement made at London, England, that Lord Beaverbrook has purchased a large block of stock in the Provincial Cinematograph Company of England. Lord Beaverbrook is a prominent Canadian and was Max Aikens before he was granted his title for services during the war.

The exhibitors of Winnipeg, Manitoba, have been presented with their usual quota of new regulations for the month of December and, this time, the orders have come from the Manitoba Provincial Government. Almost every month, the theatre managers or exchange officials are notified regarding some new set of regulations from either the Provincial or civic governments and the exhibitors were not disappointed for the Christmas month.

Most everybody around Toronto wants to be a moving picture censor since the new Ontario Government, which is controlled by the Farmers' Party, decided that the films were not being censored properly. The local Council of Women voted, at a recent meeting, passed a resolution asking the Government to appoint an equal number of women as men for the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors while the United Women Voters of Toronto have passed a similar resolution. Other organizations are also meddling with the question.

In connection with the announcement of the offer for sale of $75,000 worth of seven per cent preferred stock for the Allen's Parkdale theatre, a moving picture house that is to be erected in the West End of Toronto, Ontario, by Jule and J. J. Allen, the statement is made by the brokers handling the stock that the surplus available for dividends out of a gross revenue from the operation of similar theatres in Canada owned by the Allen interests of $100,000 amounts to no less than $35,000, the cost of operation and depreciation being at the ratio of 65 to the revenue of 100. It is pointed out that this is practically seven times the preferred dividend requirements on the total authorized and issued preferred shares.

The Strand theatre, Whyte avenue, Edmonton, Alberta, was recently re-opened after a renovating process, the first attraction being an Artcraft picture, "Wolves of the Rail," starring William S. Hart.

SEATTLE

B. R. Keth, representative for Select, who is covering Washington, has returned from one of his trips, which has shown good results. A. B. Knox, another Select representative, has returned from a nine weeks' hundred per cent trip through Oregon and Idaho, where he signed up everything from Boise to Portland.

Claude Odin, formerly connected with the Clemmer, is back at his old job as floor manager, having taken the place of M. Taylor, who left for Portland, where he is connected with the Jensen and Von Herberg interests.

The Greater Features Co., Jack Lannon, president, announce that the firm has purchased the following new pictures: The 15-episode "Fatal Fortune Series," featuring Helen Holmes; "Are You Legally Married?" featuring Lew Cody and Rosemary Theby; "Beware of Strangers," a seven-reeler featuring Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette and Bessie Eyton. The rights for the sale of these pictures include Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho.

The Republic Distributing, which has recently taken over World Film Exchange, is under the direction of Jack Weil and is fitting out one of the finest exchange buildings in all the northwest. The ground space covers approximately 5,000 square feet, the building being 41 by 108 feet.

"The Mission" and "The Strand," will soon pass out of the hands of the Greater Theatres Company, Jensen and Von Herberg, managers. The building in which the Mission is situated will be turned over to a Chinese concern, February, 1920, in which a cabaret will be established and it is rumored that motion pictures will be shown there. The lease on the Strand has been purchased by other interests, but the Strand will remain under the management of Jensen and Von Herberg for six months. After this time John Hamrick, proprietor of the Rex, will undoubtedly be the manager. Mike Rosenberg, manager of the De Luxe Film Exchange, will have an interest in the new concern.

CINCINNATI

Another echo of the collapse of the lobby of the Mars theatre, Montgomery Road, August 6th last, was heard in Common Pleas Court this week when Minnie M. Evans filed suit for $5,000 damages from Charles E. Marqua and Durban E. Volkers, owners of the theatre, alleging that her left leg was broken.

As a result of the rumor that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will build a 3,500-seat theatre at Fifth and Vine streets, Cincinnati motion picture theatre owners held a meeting at the Hotel Sinton to consider the situation. I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, owners of the Gifts theatre and several other houses, stated that it has become necessary for the individual exhibitors to get together for self-protection, believing, as they do that the invasion by the film producer as a film exhibitor would command complete possession of the motion picture industry in all its branches. Other exhibitors agreed that if theatres are built by producing companies in competition with them, film service from these companies would be discontinued.

Manager Goldman has appointed George R. Batcheller a member of the Realart sales force in Cincinnati. Mr. Batcheller will cover the Kentucky and Indiana territory.

At a meeting at the Hotel Gibson the Associated Film Exchanges voted to subscribe $5,000 worth of United States Treasury saving certificates, in the Cincinnati Rotary Club campaign to sell $1,000,000 worth of the certificates.

Franklin, managing director, Shea's Hippodrome, announces that commencing Sunday, December 7, prices at this big house will be boosted to 50 cents in the orchestra and 60 cents for box seats on Sunday and that the Saturday matinee scale will be increased from 20 to 25 cents general admission.

Work is progressing very rapidly on the new exchange to be occupied by Metro, World, Vitagraph and other companies to be announced later in Franklin street above Chippewa. According to Henry W. Kahn, Metro manager, the new building will be ready for occupancy about March 1 next.

R. Williams has come to Buffalo from the Atlanta branch of Famous Players-Lasky to assume charge of the local accessory and service department. Herman Phillips, former exploitation man, connected with the local office, has been transferred to Cleveland. He is the second exploitation man at the F. P.-L. office in about three months. Next!

N. Hobart, representing the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., and Associated Provincial Picture Houses, Ltd., at 199 Piccadilly, London, visited Shea's Hippodrome Friday evening, November 26, and made a minute inspection of the house accompanied by Harold B. Franklin. Mr. Hobart expressed his admiration for many innovations originated by Mr. Franklin.

Edward E. Thompson, former Connecticut bureau manager for the United Press, has arrived in Buffalo and taken up his duties as press and exploitation manager of the local Goldwyn exchange.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Summary and Epitome of What They Wrote

Our series of exhibitor written articles on admissions is at an end. That they have proven of inestimable value to the exhibitors is an assured fact. We do not need to send out questionnaires to determine this. Dozens of letters have come in saying so and the word of exhibitors who have called on us have confirmed it. We too have been interested in what has been written and have learned something from each article. Therefore for ourselves and for our readers we thank the contributors to this series for their services.

Since this series has been some two months in the telling, we are summarizing somewhat each letter and making a little comment on what has been disclosed in the way of facts and figures.

THE epitome of these articles is rather interesting. In all twenty-two theatres located in all parts of the country with one letter from Holland have been reported. To this Hollander, P. Mounich, who has named one of his theatres the "Chicago," which makes us suspect that he isn't Holland Dutch at all when it comes to nationality, belongs the honor of being able to command the highest price for the canned drama, his top being $1.25. Ross A. McVoy, manager of the Morgan theatre, Auburn, N. Y., is low with a fifteen cent admission, if we are not to count two theatres in the Saenger Amusement Company's string and which we judge are not first run houses since Mr. Richards is charging fifty cents top at one of his shops and twenty-five cents at two others. Seven of the theatres are getting fifty cents top, one the Theatre De Luxe of Detroit is in for a lonesome forty cents top, a seemingly odd price, six are getting thirty-five cents, three ask thirty cents, and two are getting by at twenty cents. In several cases where we have mentioned the admission prices, there has been a loges or box seat price of considerable more but which we have disregarded since these are not the seats that the general public chooses to call the "general admission." For instance Eugene B. Roth, manager of the California, San Francisco, gets eighty-five cents for loges, while his orchestra seats are fifty cents, and Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto of the same city, is asking fifty cents for his loges and twenty-five cents for his whole lower floor.

Ten of our correspondents were absolutely for the standard price of admission as against the sliding scale based on the cost and entertainment value of the picture, several did not make a definite statement on the subject but talked as if their prices were standard, one Ernest J. Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre Washington, Ind., is a lonely exponent of the sliding scale, and one F. L. Newman, presiding over three Kansas City theatres, has a standard price at his best theatre and raises prices at times at the others when occasions demand it. It would seem therefore that the standard price men have it by a large majority.

H. B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, opened the series with a letter that contained a "Don't kill the goose which lays the golden egg" admonition that was expressed in one form or another in almost every article. Several of the writers used the same expression exactly to put over the thought that too high prices mean driving a lot of the public away from the theatre at least, as regular to be relied upon two or three times a week, fans.

Every letter told of increased film rentals, varying from fifty to 200 per cent and mentioned increased overhead in addition. Some of the writers were extremely outspoken in expressing their conviction that the increases being asked were not justified. For instance Mr. Ruffner took a crack at Selective Booking as "the same old horse, on the same old track, with the same old rider and the same old book makers," meaning we can not mistake, the producers. He said further that "This price thing is dangerous ground for both the theatre manager and the producer." He also made a statement which is illuminating in the light it throws on the way exchange and exhibitor get together on the price of a film. It reminds one of the old days of buying a hand me down suit of clothes. Buyer offered one-tenth of what the suit was worth and merchant asked ten times what he expected to get for it. Ruffner says he was asked $3,000.00 for a film and bought it for $700.00 which is one way of saying that there is plenty of chance of paying about three times too much for pictures.

Mr. Roth of the California states the following in his letter which is equivalent to Mr. Ruffner's story: "Some pictures offered me lately at fabulous rentals were utterly and absolutely unmerited in value." We assume that Mr. Roth didn't buy these films at all but it isn't hard to guess that when he does book something that there is a good deal of "dickering" of the sort that Mr. Ruffner describes.

Most of the exhibitors who answered our request for a special article reported that they had recently raised their admissions simultaneously with the inauguration of selective booking, because they felt that it was necessary to do so. Some of our correspondents reported that they hadn't and didn't dare attempt a boost. Among the latter was Miss Dolly Spurr, president of the Mutual Theatre Company of Marion, Ind., who said she "was between the devil and the deep sea" since she did not dare ask an advance and couldn't see how her film was going to make any money at present admission.

One of the "stand patters" was E. V. Richards, who wrote that he was not contemplating any increase in admissions at the time. Just why Mr. Richards hasn't found it necessary to "pass the buck" to the consumer is probably one of the strongest arguments in favor of the string of theatres all under one head. The Saenger Amusement Company is big enough and strong enough, and "covers Dixie like the dew" so thoroughly that even the producer is inclined to be a little reasonable when he comes around quoting prices, since the firm headed by Mr. Richards could if it wanted to put up a fight that wouldn't be all one sided.

Mr. Richards even says that "there is no reason why selective booking should mean higher rentals per diem," which a good many people are willing to admit—that is that it shouldn't, but then they will add that it has.

Mr. Richards also states that selective booking should mean a greater number of booking days, presuming we infer that he is assuming that the selective booking feature is a better picture and will draw more business. Without doubt this latter theory has proved sound.

As a rule, the exhibitor who is managing a big, new house in a big, prosperous city is viewing the situation of an exhibiting career with plenty of confidence. He is advocating standard prices because he is now getting on an average of fifty cents and has a big organization back of him. He may talk sort of pessimistic, as did Mr. Roth in his article on the admission series, but like Mr. Roth, he will go back to his home city with plans for a new motion picture palace tucked under his arm. To tell you the truth, we aren't worrying about the Roths, the Richards and the Newmans half as much as we are about the McVoys, some ten thousand of them in these United States who are running the same pictures that the big city houses do at fifteen and twenty cents admission, and perhaps paying pretty nearly as much money for them as the big houses who collect fifty cents per head, with an unlimited clientele to draw from, do.

Your Idea and Ours

WE can hardly call this display of the Star's, Chicago, on "The Red Viper" any world beater, and have used it only to call attention to a feature which has a distinct anti-Bolsheviki message that may be capitalized just at this time, and which the Star chose to disregard in its advertising. With the same thought behind it as has characterized "The Right to Happiness" and "The World Aflame," we would say that an exhibitor is not putting his best foot forward when he neglects to give this message due publicity. The Star has also neglected to make note of the fact that Ruth Stonehouse, one of the old-time favorites, has a part in the picture, and that Garreth Hughes is appearing in an important role with Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth." This was small in size, being only one column by five inches, and the cut used printed very badly.

WORKING without mats or other producers' aids since he played the picture before release date, Phil Gersdorf, of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., evolved this display on "The Invisible Bond" and "The Hayseed." The nice face cut of Miss Castle used is one that did service for "The Firing Line." As a matter of fact, we doubt that if Gersdorf had been in possession of all the press aids if he would have done better for his showing of this picture.

Selling an Irene Castle picture is largely a matter of selling the star especially in this case since the title of her current production will not mean much to patrons of the theatre. Gersdorf's selling talk is good, too. In fact, an excellent all around display, with proper regard for the fact that he was playing a "Fatty" Arbuckle picture, and that it was good business to let the Arcade's customers know about it.

The badge of honor will pass you any place.

"UP STAIRS AND DOWN" received larger advertising in Buffalo, the home of the Strand Theatre, than do most of the pictures that play that city since all exhibitors there go in for the small hand drawn type of display. This one is hand drawn, and is quite a creditable ad., although some of the details might have been given a little more attention. For instance, the stairway's perspective is a little "off." It looks to be more narrow in the center than it is on either end. Also Miss Thomas looks a bit "frowzy," and the backing for her likewise would suggest perhaps that she is playing in a costume bill. However, all this may be termed hypercritical. Certainly the Strand has gotten nice display in its name, star and title lines, and the selling talk is very well worded. In size this was two columns by seven inches.

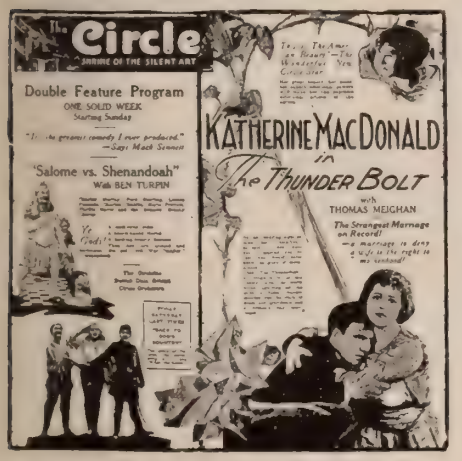
M. LOWELL CASH, press agent, who brought this display on "Blind Husbands" around to our desk, professed to believe that he had found something that batted a full hundred per cent., but some way we can't see it. So far as cut goes, which the Whiteway & Park must have originated, since it was not suggested in the press book, and this is to be labeled good stuff, but when it came to framing the selling talk, the ad. man overshot. The top of the display is altogether too crowded. The bottom is wasted in quoting some one whom the public doesn't know. If this space had been devoted to quoting what the individual Cleveland papers said about the attraction, it would have been much better. However, this display does have the biggest asset an ad. can possess, and that is that it attracts attention. Mansfield is in Ohio, not far from Cleveland. This display was a full page in depth and five columns wide.

How Exhibitors Advertise

California
MORE DEADLY THAN THE MALE
FEATURING
Ethel Clayton
Caught—in fair arms that clung—drew him on—trapped like a fly in the web of a spider
And he had thought that women were weak, had planned adventure hunting tigers in the wilds
But the eternal tigress woman sprang into his life at home crammed his days with more adventure than he ever dreamed in the end made him glad of her power
A picture of rare beauty, stirring events and a subtle appeal that is irresistible

THE spider and the fly idea is generally used vice versa from that which the California theatre of San Francisco has employed here, since usually it is the man who is accused of coaxing the woman into his web of iniquity.

However, we should judge by the selling talk on this three-column ten-inch display of "More Deadly Than the Male," that the usual plot of these stories is reversed, so no one can gainsay but that Mr. Pincus and his experts have adopted the right idea in framing a display for the picture. At any rate, the California ad. is certainly attractive. This is the first display we have seen on this picture, New York not as yet having been officially informed that such a feature exists. Especially do we like the selling talk used in this. It should sell "More Deadly Than the Male" most effectively.



McCORMICK is a wise showman. He ran a teaser ad. for "The Thunderbolt," followed it up with this and other displays on the same order and then booked "Salome and Shenandoah" for the same bill, so that he would be sure of getting Indianapolis out to see his new star. We do believe that this is the way to put any unknown player across. The American movie public is a mob of hero worshipers. If they never heard of an actress, that settles it. They don't want to see her, and no amount of advertising or boost will make them think they do, that is until they do.

Even in the Broadway, New York theatres the absence of a star or something equivalent is felt greatly. We have seen this proven several times during the past few weeks. In a smaller city this fault in picture audiences is more keenly apparent. When you book a picture which doesn't have a box-office value that your public will appreciate, no matter how good it may be, follow McCormick's example and hook on to something that will make up for this lack of prestige in your feature attraction. In all probabilities the next time the Circle books a Katherine McDonald picture it won't have to divide its billing. This display was five columns wide and ten inches deep.

If you have your picture taken is it lost?

Among all the demons of hell, there is none more fiendish than jealousy
ALICE JOYCE AND A NOTABLE CAST IN THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND
ADAPTED FROM THE STORY BY REX BEACH
Week Com. Sunday, Nov. 23rd
COLONIAL
Added Attraction
Fay Tincher
"Wild and Western"

IF Alice Joyce had anything to say about how her pictures were billed, certainly she could not kick at the size of the type in which her name appears in this display, better than a quarter of a page, by the Colonial theatre of Toledo, on "The Vengeance of Durand."

In fact, we would figure that the Colonial has given her too much of the billing unless she is unusually popular in Toledo and Rex Beach not enough. On another program the Beach stories are going over without a star, which is an indication what this author's name means to the public. However, this is a good display. It starts off with a good catch line, gives the title of the film good billing, and Rex Beach fair prominence, and has utilized some stills from the production to good advantage. Giving Fay Tincher and the comedy, "Wild and Western," some space, is good business. Promising a laugh is worth while now days.

WHEN an artist has to frame displays for a double bill, we feel sorry for him since it is about the hardest job that can be shoved at a man. When an artist is able to frame a display as good as this one, he might be justified in feeling very much "up stage." A. H. Rasmussen, the Liberty (Fresno, Cal.) artist, has evolved a display, which bills "Fair and Warmer" and "The Dragon Painter" equally, looks nice, and can be labeled high class in every way. Mr. Rasmussen is to be especially congratulated in the design he has drawn over which to frame the selling talk and title lines of his double bill. The only thing we regret in using this display or any other advertising on a double bill is the double bill idea itself since we aren't offering a display which our readers can use, as a model for their own advertising, and that is one of the most important uses this department has. In size this was fifteen inches by four columns.

If you lose your temper dont look for it.
